Mr. BLACK. The same situation exists in every city. It is in the interest of every automobile driver and everybody that lives in a house here in the city. There is no question about it. It is not in the special interest of the street-car companies.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman give me his ideas about the paving business?

Mr. BLACK. I shall give the gentleman the figures on the paving proposition after I have looked at them again.

The tendency with respect to the paving proposition on the part of municipalities throughout the country is to assume the cost of paving. The burdening of street railways with paving cost is a relic of the old horse-car days, when everybody believed, and probably rightfully so, that the old horse cars destroyed the pavements and therefore the companies as the operators of the horse cars should pay for the pavement contiguous to the tracks. Now there is a new situation, and we do not see any horses on the street any more and we do not have any more horse cars. Streets have to be paved and they are going to be paved whether the railroads are there or not or whether the tracks are there or not. They are going to be paved because of the demand of the automobile owner that they be paved. It is in his interest. The street railways are not destroying pavements. Pavements are being worn down by everything that goes over them, and the committee accepted the original viewpoint of the Utility Commission that the companies should be relieved of the charge because this, too, is in line with the policy of practically every city in the country in its relationship with street-railway companies.

Mr. ARENTZ. How about replacements?

Mr. BLACK. One of the greatest menaces to the economic welfare of America is the gradual crushing of the utilities in our cities, and the advanced thought is to bring about cooperation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Is any member of the committee opposed to the bill?

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Michigan opposed to the bill?

Mr. McLEOD. I am in favor of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is any member of the committee opposed to the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think a member of the committee is entitled to prior recognition, whether opposed to the bill or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless there is some member of the committee opposed to the bill, the gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, may I ask for what time I am recognized?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for one hour.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California was recognized for one hour. The gentleman from Michigan has not qualified as being against the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is not at all necessary, Mr. Chairman. This is not Calendar Wednesday. We are proceeding under the general rules of the House, and members of the committee are entitled to prior recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was undertaking to alternate between those for and those opposed to the bill.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, the Chair submitted the interrogatory as to whether there were any Members opposed to the bill, and none appeared. Therefore the gentleman from California received time from the Chair. The RECORD will show this.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from California [Mr. SWING] in opposition to the bill.

Mr. SWING. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes at this time.

Mr. Chairman, as has been stated, the matter of the merger of these traction companies has been up for years. There is no question at all but that there should be a merger. The question this committee and this House will have to decide when they get to the consideration of this bill section by section is whether or not this particular proposal for a merger is in the interest of the public or in the interest of the corporations. This will be made evident as debate goes on and as the bill is considered.

On next Wednesday there will be introduced another kind of merger bill from the Economy Committee.

I believe in some of the mergers in that bill, but those mergers must also be considered as to whether or not they are in the interest of efficiency or whether they are the result of hysteria.

I believe in economy, but I want to talk to you to-day for a few minutes regarding what I consider the poorest place in the world to economize, and that is upon the compensation due honorably discharged veterans of the World War who lost their health and suffered injuries fighting for this country.

GENERAL HINES, ADMINISTRATOR OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS, OPEN TO CRITICISM

I am surprised that the head of the Veterans' Bureau, sworn to administer the law in behalf of these veterans and who, in a way, is the trustee and guardian of these disabled veterans, should have been the first one to propose that the pay of his wards was a proper place to start balancing the Budget.

I can admire a Secretary of the Navy who fights for his organization, I can admire a Secretary of the Interior who believes his work is the most important in the Government and who fights for it, because unless a man believes in what he and his department is doing and will fight for it he has no right to be at the head of it. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs ought to be fighting to protect the interests of those dependent on him instead of betraying them.

I can recall a picture on a war-time poster of an American mother in Red Cross garb stooping to pick up a wounded soldier on the battlefield to carry him to where his wounds could be taken care of.

The Veterans' Bureau was created as the successor of this great angel of mercy, the American Red Cross, to continue, after the war, the work of caring for these disabled veterans. Can you imagine the head of the Red Cross saying to the American people during the war, "You are doing too much for the boys over there—better go a little slow on your giving." And yet the head of the great Veterans' Bureau comes to this Congress with the proposal to take $80,000,000 from his wards, the disabled veterans. Why, the proposals of the gentleman shocked the none too tender sensibilities of the Economy Committee. Even they could not and would not put his program in their bill without toning it down.

ENACTMENT OF "PAUPER CLAUSE" IN PENSION LEGISLATION UNJUST AND UN-AMERICAN

First, is this pauper clause proposed to be written into the law.

Those who were injured during the war can only be compensated, provided they can bring themselves into conformity with the so-called pauper clause. I say it is shameful and humiliating for this great American Republic, the richest nation in the world, to put that requirement in its pension laws when we have knowledge of the fact that during the World War more millionaires came into being than in all the preceding history of our country. It is disgraceful for us now to say that we have to balance the Budget at the expense of the disabled veterans, when we refused to apply the graduated income tax to those who made great fortunes out of the war.

UNFAIR TO MAKE VETERANS PAY FOR THEIR HOSPITALIZATION

Then there is the proposal that hereafter veterans who have no dependents shall have their compensation reduced to $20 while being hospitalized. The result will be that the veterans will be compelled to pay for their own hospitalization hereafter, which has never been the policy heretofore.

In order to take full advantage of this proposal, for a reduction to $20, General Hines proposes that he be given the power, if a man is incompetent, to say he must go to a veterans' institution, even if his guardian, appointed by a State court, thinks his best interest would otherwise be served. The economy bill will give the bureau the power to say that the veteran must go in, notwithstanding he is being well cared for by his parents, wife, or legal guardian; and if he does not go, his compensation is cut to $20. I say that is a violation of the sovereign rights of the States and a violation of what is best for the man himself.

PROPOSAL PUTS PREMIUM ON DELAY IN DECIDING CLAIMS

Another provision of the economy bill is to have the Government save money by being slow in deciding veteran cases. The language limits the time for beginning payments on a claim to six months prior to the decision. What possible relevancy can the date of the decision have? The date of the beginning of the disability, the date of the filing of the claim, or even the date of filing of the proof, but never the date of the decision—that merely puts a premium on delay on the part of the bureau. There are thousands of claims for permanent and total ratings now pending. Most of them have been pending a year or more. At present rate of action the bureau will be another year in deciding this group. On what principle of justice can you penalize the claimant for the slow action of the Government?

REPEAL OF PRESUMPTIVE RULE AND REOPENING ALL EMERGENCY OFFICERS RETIRED CASES UNFAIR AND UNJUST

Then, again, comes the provision with reference to emergency officers, which takes away the presumptive connection given in many cases. That particularly is operative against N. P. and T. B. cases. The World War produced physical disabilities that medical science had not known of; and also because of the hurry of the war and the inability to keep records, it came about that it was impossible to prove many of these cases as directly the result of the World War. Congress recognized this situation and enacted certain presumptions for the benefit of the veterans, but all of the provisions which Congress has wisely determined was proper to be applied in connection with these N. P. and T. B. cases are now to be wiped out.

Then, too, all retirement cases are to be reviewed by the Veterans' Bureau, no notice is to be given, and no opportunity to be heard, but they are to be reviewed automatically. There are no two rating boards that can possibly rate the same case in exactly the same way. No two surveyors can run a line a mile and arrive at exactly the same point, and there is no yardstick to accurately measure suffering and injuries. Therefore, you will have the confusion of two successive boards rating the same case—one finding the man 30 per cent disabled and the other possibly less than 30 per cent disabled.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. GARBER. Does the gentleman mean to say that it is recommended that all cases shall be rerated and reappraised as to the amounts allowed?

Mr. SWING. Every case under the emergency officers' retirement law is to be taken out and rerated by new boards.

STRANGE PROPOSAL TO LEGISLATE CHANGE OF HISTORICAL DATE OF ENDING WORLD WAR

Then we have the proposal to fix the end of the war at the armistice. That never has been done in any war before. Why should we not take at least the signing of the treaty of Versailles and its ratification by Germany as the end of the war? Gentlemen know that there was no relaxation of our forces following the armistice until we knew that the treaty of Versailles had been signed and was ratified by Germany. Up to that time a renewal of war was always a possibility, and it was necessary to maintain military vigilance up until that moment.

COURTS OF JUSTICE DENIED RIGHT TO LEARN FACTS IN INSURANCE CASES

Next comes the strangest proposal of all, and that is when a suit is filed upon an insurance policy, the courts, although called upon to decide the merits, are to be prohibited from ascertaining the facts. It is provided in the economy bill that the courts of justice can not hear any evidence except that which has been first presented to the Veterans' Bureau. Under the law a veteran can not hire a lawyer to help him prepare his case for the Veterans' Bureau. He has to depend upon laymen and upon his own ingenuity. When he finally gets into court, and has the benefit of a lawyer, the lawyer will be of little use to him if this provision becomes a law. The plaintiff must submit to the Veterans' Bureau every bit of evidence that he intends to use in the case, and let the Veterans' Bureau have the benefit of that knowledge in fighting the case in court. There is no corresponding provision that the Veterans' Bureau submit to the veteran the evidence which the Government proposes to offer in court. Think of the ridiculous one-sidedness of that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman know that Martin & Martin, of Chicago, have about 1,500 such cases and that another firm has 1,700 of them?

Mr. SWING. No; I do not know that. What I object to is having one from of law and regulation and procedure for the trying of insurance contracts if the Government has issued them, and having an entirely different set of laws and rules for trying insurance cases if the insurance is issued by a private corporation. What possible basis can there be for that if we are going to deal justly with the veterans? The Government is in the business of insurance—why should not the insurance cases of the Government be tried by identically the same rules as those of a private corporation?

VETERANS REFUSED RIGHT TO APPLY ON OVERDUE INSURANCE PREMIUMS MONEY SUBSEQUENTLY FOUND TO BE DUE THEM FROM GOVERNMENT ON COMPENSATION

Finally comes the last and most shocking provision of all, which is to repeal section 305, which provides that if a veteran has defaulted on the premiums of his insurance and it subsequently is determined by the Veterans' Bureau that during that same period of time the Government was owing him more money on compensation than he owed the Government on the insurance, it should not declare a forfeiture against him, because the Government's own default in not paying him was the reason he was unable to pay the Government. If there ever was a just provision of law, that is it; and I do not care how far we have fallen in the matter of having to have money, the time has not yet come when the Government should take advantage of its veterans and say it will declare a forfeiture on his insurance premium because he failed to pay, while the Government admits that during the same period of time it owed him more than he owed the Government.

DISHONORABLE FOR UNITED STATES TO REPUDIATE ITS HIGHEST MORAL OBLIGATIONS TO DISABLED VETERANS

So, in closing, when this matter comes up on Wednesday let us realize that the breaking of a moral obligation is more to our shame than the breaking of some legal obligation. Here is a debt of honor that we owe the disabled veterans of the World War; and after we have solemnly enacted laws and after the cases have been fully considered and determined and a rating given, are we now to turn our Government into an Indian giver and take back from these men the things that we have promised them and which we said were rightly due and owing to them? I beseech you on Wednesday when this matter comes up to vote against economizing on the crippled soldiers, to vote against repudiating the obligations of the Government due the disabled war veterans, and thereby protect the honor and the self-respect of our country.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I want to bring the fact before the committee that the question of merger of street railways is a pending matter of about 25 years. It has been discussed pro and con for that period of time. In 1913 the La Follette Antimerger Act held up the merger. This act later was found not to pertain to such corporations as street-railway or transportation lines, and was thereby eliminated from discussion opposing this form of merger. During the past six years in Congress, especially the last four in the District of Columbia Committee, lengthy hearings have been held, and the only question of debate, of a serious nature, was the question of valuation. The question of valuation was injected into the bill by providing a valuation for these companies of $55,000,000. It was termed by certain individuals as an unfair valuation. So the result is that the bill before us to-day has eliminated the question of valuation. The matter of a valuation is now being settled by the Public Utilities Commission, where it rightfully belongs.

The next question was not of a very serious nature—it was a question of street-car fares for school children. This was considered to be a question separate from that of merger, and was therefore enacted in an independent bill. The reason that that question does not now appear in this legislation is because the committee and Congress saw fit to fix a rate of fare of 3 cents or less for school children in the District of Columbia, and that case is now pending in the District court and will be settled later.

I have sat on the committee during those four years and can honestly say there is no opposition to this bill in the District of Columbia by groups, organizations, or newspapers. This bill is satisfactory to the companies and to the people.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. GIBSON. I think we all recognize that the gentleman has given faithful service on the District of Columbia Committee. I presume the gentleman is in a position to give me some information. Is it true that the street-railroad companies are not owned by interests here in Washington but by the North American Co., one of the great New York holding companies?

Mr. McLEOD. It is possible that the North American Co., as do other companies and other individuals, owns certain stock of these companies.

Mr. GIBSON. Are not both street railroads absolutely under the control of the North American Co.?

Mr. McLEOD. I can not answer that question, and moreover we are not interested to-day as to who owns stock in the street railways or the North American Co.

Mr. GIBSON. Now, there was a merger bill before the committee and before the House some three or four years ago. The gentleman has called attention to the fact that the question of fixed valuation was left out of this bill. In what other respect does this bill differ from the old bill which the committee and the House considered?

Mr. McLEOD. Right in line with the question which the gentleman has in mind, I will say that this bill, as amended by the committee, provides that a majority of the directors of the new company must be residents of the District of Columbia. This should satisfy the query the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. GIBSON. But what difference does that make, if the companies are absolutely under the control of the North American Co.?

Mr. McLEOD. Well, if that is the fact I would say they are not in control of an outside corporation, if the directors are residents of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GIBSON. The gentleman knows how easy it is to control this matter of directors. Now, will the gentleman tell us the amount of added cost to the taxpayers of the District of Columbia by reason of the fact that the cost of traffic policemen and paving is placed on the District government?

Mr. McLEOD. In the neighborhood of two or three hundred thousand.

Mr. GIBSON. That is, the railroad companies would be relieved of that amount?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIBSON. And that burden would be put on to the taxpayers of the District of Columbia?

Mr. McLEOD. That is correct, and that is where it belongs.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Why should it not be put on to the taxpayers? Why should the companies have to pay for police officers for your benefit and for my benefit and for the benefit of the riders?

Mr. GIBSON. Because it is in the law fixing the business relations between the street railroad companies and the District of Columbia. It is in the nature of a binding contract.

Mr. UNDERHILL. But conditions have altered materially since the contract was entered into.

Mr. GIBSON. Oh, yes; but the fact has not altered.

Mr. McLEOD. It is also a fact that under the original charter they were required to operate horse cars.

Mr. HOLADAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. HOLADAY. Is the provision with reference to policemen in the charter, or is that a matter of agreement between the city and the company, that the company would furnish these policemen and pay for them if stop lights were not installed?

Mr. McLEOD. It is a matter of law.

Mr. HOLADAY. I am asking for information. It is my understanding that that provision is not in the charter and has simply been a matter of agreement between the companies and the city.

Mr. McLEOD. That may be possible; but in answer to the gentleman from Vermont I will say there are no cities under 300,000 population that make it mandatory that the street railways assist in the payment of traffic policemen to-day.

Mr. GARBER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. I yield.

Mr. GARBER. The gentleman has given a great deal of study and investigation to this subject, and I am sure is making a very informative speech.

As I look at it, two of the major principles involved in the consideration of this bill are, first, a fair and reasonable return on the capital invested, and second, just and reasonable rates to the public. I understand that one of the provisions of this bill protects the public. That provision is paragraph 5 of the bill, on page 7:

> That the original bonded indebtedness and stock liability of the new company shall not be in excess of the total amount of the stocks, certificates of stock, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness then outstanding against the Capital Co. and the Washington Co.

That seems to me to be a very protective provision to prevent excess capitalization.

Mr. McLEOD. That was the purpose of it.

Mr. GARBER. And it protects the rate base on which the fares and charges will be fixed to the patrons.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not a fact that the Public Utilities Commission in the District has ample power and authority to protect along all lines?

Mr. McLEOD. Absolutely.

Mr. SNELL. Nothing can be done without its permission?

Mr. McLEOD. That is correct. That was the principal question that caused the committee considerable trouble in its early hearings, and it was agreed by the committee that if the Utilities Commission did not have adequate power and authority and could not settle the question involved in the matter of rates, then that commission should be replaced by another commission.

Mr. SNELL. From the gentleman's investigation he feels certain that the Public Utilities Commission in the District has ample authority to do this?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes; the Utilities Commission has testified to that fact, and their statement is quoted in the hearings.

Mr. GILBERT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. Following what the gentleman from New York has asked and what the gentleman from Massachusetts has suggested, the savings, for instance, to be made by transferring the pay of policemen from street-car riders to the public generally, where it naturally belongs, will under proper administration by the Public Utilities Commission result in a lower street-car fare.

Mr. McLEOD. It should tend to do this.

Mr. GILBERT. And, after all, those questions will land where they belong—before a proper public-utilities commission. There is no such thing as a company separate from its riders and stockholders. You are not relieving the people of Washington when you put this cost on the taxpayers. You are simply transferring it from the street-car riders, who are also citizens of Washington, to the general public of Washington.

Mr. McLEOD. That is correct.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman takes the position that the Public Utilities Commission has ample power and authority to adjust and regulate these matters and protect both the people and the company?

Mr. GILBERT. Certainly. There is no reason why street-car riders should pay for policemen for the general public.

Mr. SNELL. I can not see any reason.

Mr. GILBERT. If the Public Utilities Commission exercises its proper functions, that would be the probable and natural consequence.

Mr. McLEOD. When the question of reduced car fares for school children was up in Congress, the Public Utilities Commission admitted, and it is a matter of record, that in the event a street-car fare of 3 cents or under damages to any degree the companies involved, the Utilities Commission had the right to adjust the fares for adults.

Mr. KELLER. I have no objection to two companies merging, provided the public as well as the companies are protected; but I have every objection to giving the companies the right to merge unless the public is also benefited.

Mr. McLEOD. I will say to the gentleman that the hearings on this bill lasted several weeks. Every organization of any note was heard by the committee. I believe no organization appeared before the committee in opposition to this legislation. There were two or three matters discussed, as mentioned by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] a few moments ago, one being the question of taxicab transportation. That has been eliminated from this bill.

Mr. KELLER. Were the taxpayers' organizations before the committee?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. I mean the taxpayers' organizations?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes.

Mr. KELLER. What part will the Government pay if this matter of paying for policemen and paving is eliminated? I understand that the paving amounts to something like $300,000 a year.

Mr. BLACK. The companies estimate that the pay of crossing policemen and additional paving charges come to something like $200,000. Then the Government's contribution would be whatever the Government contributes to the expenses of the District.

Mr. KELLER. Has this proposition been submitted to our Economy Committee?

Mr. BLACK. I have a letter that this does not interfere with the President's program of economy.

Mr. KELLER. What about our Economy Committee?

Mr. BLACK. Well, we are going to give the Economy Committee a street-car ride in a day or so.

Mr. McLEOD. The elimination of those expenses would have a tendency to reduce street-car fares and certainly tend to increase fares.

Mr. SIMMONS. The gentleman certainly does not mean to tell the House that by taking this policeman charge off the street-car companies and by taking the paving charge off the street-car companies you are going to bring about a reduction in fares?

Mr. McLEOD. I did not say that. I said it would have a tendency to reduce street-car fares, and I insist the gentleman must agree with my statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. The tendency of it will be fine, but the actual effect of it will be to saddle that much more upon the general charges of the District government, which, in turn, will be just one more argument for the down-town people to demand more money of the Federal Treasury for the support of the District. It is the same old fight, if the gentleman from Michigan please. For years they paved the streets of Washington out of the general fund, and the United States taxpayers paid half of it. Every obligation they can put into the general fund of the District you will find all of these down-town people in favor of, because then they have a bigger fund to which they can point with horror when they ask the United States to contribute. Now, you are not going to reduce the expense of traveling on the street cars one penny in a year to any patron by relieving them of these charges, but you are going to tax the people of Washington—and to a direct extent the people of the United States—that much more by these two provisions.

Mr. McLEOD. That is possible; but will the gentleman from Nebraska point out——

Mr. BLACK. That is not so.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the gentleman can show me how you are going to reduce street-car fares by this merger, I shall change my statement.

Mr. BLACK. In the first place, there is the proposal of universal transfer service from railway to railway.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is not what we are talking about.

Mr. BLACK. This of itself is a saving to the car riders. The economies expected to be effected by the merger plus the relief from these paving obligations and police obligations all tend to put the companies in a better position to furnish a reasonable transfer system from railway lines to busses, all of which will be a saving.

With respect to the gentleman's argument as to rights and obligations, if the street-car companies are to pay for the paving, then just put a fence around that paving and do not let anybody but street-car companies use that part of the streets and keep off the automobiles and the public generally.

Mr. SIMMONS. Who owns the streets—the street-car companies or the public?

Mr. BLACK. The public, and that is the reason the public should pay for them.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; that is not the reason the public should pay for them. The street-car people should pay something for their use.

Mr. BLACK. Every city in the country is doing what is proposed here.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let us get back to the matter I started to talk about. Where in this bill are you going to reduce the cost of transportation to the people of Washington one penny by cutting out the provision for paying traffic policemen and the charges for paving?

Mr. BLACK. Because it helps them to eliminate the requirement of a charge for transfers; it helps them to make possible an efficient service and a service that is paying under a free-transfer system. It is a contribution; that is all it is.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is a contribution to the street-car people in part from the Federal Treasury.

Mr. BLACK. As a matter of fact, they should get all the money they have ever paid into the Federal Treasury for this pavement.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Nebraska give me one good reason why a utility company should police the streets?

Mr. SIMMONS. They are not policing the streets.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. They are policing them in part. I believe it is contrary to good public service.

Mr. SIMMONS. The gentleman knows they are not primarily policing the streets, and if the gentleman from Iowa will either ride the street cars——

Mr. McLEOD. I say to the gentleman from Nebraska in reply to his question that I would like to know if he can point out one city of over 300,000 population that in any way receives contributions from the street-car companies in the way of furnishing such policemen.

Mr. SIMMONS. The gentleman, of course, has asked a question that answers itself. I can not; but I do know that for years this has been done. The rates have been based upon this practice, and for years we men who have handled the finances for the District of Columbia in this House have watched these men try by every method possible to get out from under these charges and have them shifted to the public, and now you propose to let the shift be made.

Mr. McLEOD. Because of fairness and equity only, is not that the real, honest fact?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Why should not the public police its own streets?

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to say something to my good friend from Iowa, if I may be permitted the time.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I wish the gentleman would get the time to do so.

Mr. McLEOD. Is there any excuse for burdening any individual or any individual corporation for the sake of reducing the congressional contribution to the District budget?

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman now yield and let me answer his statement and also the one of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. McLEOD. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. The first is that you are not doing it for that purpose. These charges have been carried and they have been carried as a part of their right to do business and use the public streets of the city of Washington for years. Their rates have been predicated on this, and they do not propose to refund in any way one penny of this to the public.

May I say to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COLE] that if he uses either the street cars, as I do, or if he uses automobiles, as perchance now and then I do, or even if he is a pedestrian on the street, he will notice with respect to these traffic men—not all of them, but those paid by the street-car companies in Washington—they see that the street cars move faster. They are serving the street-car companies primarily on these jobs.

Mr. McLEOD. I want to further reply to the gentleman from Nebraska by stating that when this original agreement was drawn providing for these contributions by the companies, it was in the days of horse cars, and in the days of the horse car the destruction of the streets amounted to a considerable sum of money, and this the street-railway companies were responsible for; but that time has passed long ago. We are living in another age.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the gentleman will permit, the statement in the report that originally the street-car companies had to pay for the paving because of the damage done by the horses, and now that the horses have gone they should not pay for it, is about as absurd as any statement in it. If you follow the pavement of any street in Washington and observe along the street-car tracks, you will see that the paving is repeatedly torn up by the vibration on the rails, and there is more damage done now in a month by the street cars operating as they do now than was done in a year by any horse-drawn vehicle.

Mr. McLEOD. Let me say to the gentleman——

Mr. SIMMONS. I for one am not willing to allow them to shift this charge to the general taxpayers of Washington, and then in the future come back and say, "See how much you have put on us, and the Federal Government has got to contribute toward this"; and that is what they ultimately seek to accomplish.

Mr. GARBER. I observe from the report that the Senate committee employed Doctor Maltbie, a public-utility expert, when the Senate had the matter up in 1925, and the resolution now proposes more liberal terms than those proposed by Doctor Maltbie.

I have been acquainted with Doctor Maltbie for 25 years, and a more clean-minded, expert public-utility expert does not exist. That is evidenced by his employment by the great city of New York.

Here is one provision in the bill I would like to have the gentleman explain, and that is it provides that 63 per cent of the power is to be established by agreement between the contracting parties; that of the remaining 37 per cent is to be fixed by the Public Utilities Commission. I want to inquire of the gentleman if this contract between the parties provides that the 63 per cent of the power is to be approved by the Utilities Commission?

Mr. McLEOD. That is one of the questions discussed at length, for the reason that the companies agreed to waive any further objection, because they used only the remainder of the power for the operation, and the Utilities Commission had to do only with the 37 per cent of the power which went to the people of Washington for purposes outside of that of the railroads. The Utilities Commission desired it that way and they can fix the rate for this 37 per cent.

Mr. GARBER. Then the agreement for the 63 per cent of the power is made by the two contracting parties, whereas the public has no representative to disapprove of that agreement.

Mr. BOWMAN. That provision is written into this agreement because of a long-standing contract between the electric-power company and the Washington Traction Co. The Washington Electric Co. assisted the Potomac Electric Power Co. in developing the plant, and consequently they favored the customers of the Potomac Electric Power Co. They have a contract already with the Potomac Electric Power Co., and this provision was written in so it would not abrogate any existing contract that is now in existence.

Mr. GARBER. But it is not decided that it approves existing agreements.

Mr. BOWMAN. No; but there is a contract between the street-car companies and the power company with reference to this power, and 37 per cent is left for the Public Utilities to choose from high to low in an effort to equalize the electric rates.

Mr. GARBER. Would the gentleman have any objection to an amendment authorizing the Utilities Commission to pass upon the contract between the two interested companies in reference to this 63 per cent of the power?

Mr. BLACK. No; this is beneficial to protect the merger; second, it is for the benefit of the District, because it takes a great deal of electricity from the power company to sell at a reasonable rate, Washington having the lowest rate; and, fourth, it is asked for by the smaller company, that is to get the benefit of it. It is in the interest of the merger, and therefore in the interest of the street-car rider, that this contract remain in operation.

Mr. GARBER. The gentleman says it is in the interest of the merger. That is a conclusion. Perhaps it is, but the question is, Is it in the interest of the protection of the rights of the public?

Mr. BLACK. Of course it is.

Mr. GARBER. Where is the public represented?

Mr. BLACK. The street-car riders get all of the advantages of a beneficial contract.

Mr. GARBER. Who says it is beneficial?

Mr. BLACK. Because it is cheap to the street-car riders.

Mr. GARBER. The Public Utilities Commission is the only authorized agency representing the public to pass on this public expenditure.

Mr. BLACK. The only complaint that has ever been made about it is that it is too cheap.

Mr. GARBER. That may be true now, but later on what might the complaint be?

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Is the gentleman using the time reserved by the gentleman from California?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am using my own time in real opposition to the bill, and it will be the first opposition I have yet heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, for 15 years within my knowledge there has been an attempt in the interest of the people in Washington to get these two big street-railway companies to consolidate. They both enjoy the greatest kind of monopolistic privileges in the Nation's Capital. For years they have been coining money because no other railway companies can go up and down the principal streets here. Their stocks, watered as they are, have risen in value out of all proportion, faster and in greater amount than the stocks of any other corporation in existence in America to-day, and I shall prove it to you. I wish gentlemen would get the hearings that were held before our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], on the subcommittee that framed the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and turn to page 660. There you will see the full facts given about these two street railway companies for the year 1922. The Capital Traction Co.'s earned income was as follows: Cash passengers, 16,276,074; token passengers, 54,189,129; making a total number of passengers carried by the Capital Traction Co. for the year 1922, 70,465,203. In 1923, the same company had cash passengers numbering 17,513,399, and token passengers 50,791,651, making a total of 68,305,050 passengers for that year. In 1924, the Capital Traction Co. carried 17,592,494 cash passengers and 47,220,190 token passengers, or a total number of passengers of 64,812,684.

The statement for the Washington Railway & Electric system for the same three years is as follows: In 1922 that company carried 15,013,981 cash passengers and 65,996,800 token passengers, or a total of 81,010,781 passengers. In 1923 that company carried 16,988,392 cash passengers and 64,532,013 token passengers, or a total of 81,518,607 passengers. In 1924 the Washington Railway & Electric Co. carried 16,981,485 cash passengers and 59,345,859 token passengers, or a total of 76,327,344 passengers for that year. I want now to give you the figures in respect to their stocks and how they have risen in value.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman give us the figures for 1930 and 1931?

Mr. BLANTON. I shall come to that later, if I have time. The stocks of the company began to rise in the years I have been referring to. The Washington Railway & Electric Co. has always claimed that it is the poor company. Strange to say, the Capital Traction Co. came before Congress and asked that it not be forced to raise its fares above 5 cents. Its charter provision provided for a 5-cent fare, and they said that was all they wanted. That company said the 5-cent fare was producing plenty of revenue, and it asked Congress to protect it from the effort that was being made to force it to charge over 5 cents.

The Washington Railway & Electric made the claim that it was the poor company. The rates were raised because the Public Utilities Commission said it did not want to be discriminatory. They raised them for both companies in spite of the fact the charter of each one requires that it shall never charge the people of Washington more than 5 cents. One reason for that was that they obtained valuable rights. The people in the beginning required them to pave between their street-car tracks. That is a provision that has been required in practically every city in the United States. They are required to pave between the tracks, and a foot on each side of the outside rail. Is not that a reasonable provision? They can shoot down that car track at 40 miles an hour, and if you get in front of a car they can run over your car, and if you are not at a street intersection they are not liable to you at all. It is a privilege, a special monopolistic privilege which they have, and now they are getting rid of all that in this bill. I asked my friend BLACK who drew this bill. He said that he did not know.

Mr. BLACK. I did not say that. I said the bill came to us from the Public Utilities Commission. It is their bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Who drew it?

Mr. BLACK. It is their bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Who drew it?

Mr. BLACK. The Public Utilities Commission.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the Public Utilities Commission means some irresponsible officials, some of whom do not know what it is all about, and I will show you that in a minute.

Mr. BLACK. It is a Public Utilities Commission bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. PALMISANO] tell us who drew the bill?

Mr. PALMISANO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. PALMISANO. I wish to say to the gentleman from Texas that he, being an old member of the District of Columbia Committee and this bill having been before the District Committee for a number of years, the gentleman knows as much about it as any member of the committee.

Mr. BLANTON. I think so, too. That is the reason I know that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] was telling me the truth when he could not tell me who drew the bill. I yield to the gentleman now, if he can give me the name of the man or woman who drew it. No woman could have drawn it, I am sure of that.

Mr. BLACK. I will tell the gentleman the bill was transmitted in due course by the Public Utilities Commission to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, who transmitted it to the District of Columbia Committee as the Utilities Commission bill. Some poet may have drawn it. It does not make an awful lot of difference. The question is, Is the bill good or bad?

Mr. BLANTON. And I will convince the gentleman in a few minutes that it is bad.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] hit the vital spot here when he called attention to the fact that it is the great North American Co. that is mostly interested in having this bill drawn, the company that came down here once from New York and spent $50,000 in making what they call a traffic survey in order to uphold these fares of 7 and 8 cents for even the 70,000 little school children. They compiled that book. It was about 2 inches thick. It had tinted paper, uncut edges, and was bound in morocco leather. Just about the time we were going to pass on the lowering of these car fares they sent every one of our committee members two of those big leather-bound volumes to try to influence us and try to make it appear that that was work done by the commissioners here. When we began to dig into it we found out it was done by the North American Co. of New York.

Mr. BLACK. That is in the official report. There is nothing new about that.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, I want to read something. This is a letter which I addressed to them. It can be found at page 665 of the hearings recently conducted by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] on the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 28, 1925.

Mr. EDWIN GRUHL,
Vice President and General Manager,
North American Co., New York, N. Y.

MY DEAR MR. GRUHL: I am just in receipt of the two volumes covering the 1925 transportation survey of the District of Columbia, as reported by McClelland & Junkerfeld to Commissioner Bell.

In your letter of April 23, 1925, to the Public Utilities Commission you state that—

"The North American Co. has a substantial investment in transportation systems in the District," and you further state that, "because of the mutual interest of said commission and the North American Co.," you agree to have this survey made at a cost not exceeding $50,000.

As one of the ranking members of the Committee on the District of Columbia, I desire to elicit some information, to wit:

(1) Please state in detail just of what your substantial investment in transportation here consists. In what transportation companies do you and the North American Co. own stock here; to what amount in each?

(2) (a) What did you pay for such stock, respectively? (b) How long have you owned it? (c) What is its market price now? (d) What dividends did you receive on same in 1924? (e) What dividends have you already received on same during 1925; and what others do you expect for 1925?

(3) Who paid the $50,000 to McClelland & Junkerfeld?

(4) Is the District of Columbia Public Utilities Commission to pay any part of same? If so, how much? Have they paid it?

(5) Each one of the two volumes of this report is 8½ by 11 inches, and it is nearly 2 inches thick, and bound in full morocco. What was the total expense of compiling this report?

(6) Will you please advise me why this report was at this time mailed to Congressmen and Senators?

Very truly yours,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

They refused to answer those questions.

Then I wrote to McClelland & Junkerfeld on December 28, 1925, and asked them the same questions.

Did you ever twist a cotton-tail rabbit out of a hollow? [Laughter.] You cut a long hickory stick and make some notches in it up at the end, and you twist and twist and finally get hold of him and pull him out. I finally twisted that rabbit out of the hole and I got this information. Here is what the general manager of the North American Co. finally wrote me from New York:

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of December 28, 1925, in which you address to me various inquiries with reference to the transit situation in the District of Columbia and the interest of the North American Co. therein. The information which you request is in all substantial respects in the possession of the chairmen of the House and Senate Committees on the District of Columbia.

That was not true. I was acting ranking Democratic member of that committee and I sat next to the end of the table, and I knew everything that came into the committee. Nothing like that was ever filed with our committee. That is why I wrote for it.

He said:

You inquire as to why copies of the transportation survey of the District of Columbia were "mailed to Congressmen and Senators." I do not understand that copies of this report were mailed to Congressmen or Senators generally.

Why were they mailed to us who were handling it? He says:

The Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, I am informed, arranged to have copies made available.

The Public Utilities Commission, working hand in glove with this outside corporation of New York. I see our good friend from New Jersey, our distinguished gentlewoman who is the chairwoman of this committee. She will tell you that, while her name appears on this bill, she did not have a thing on earth to do with the writing of the things in it. It was sent already prepared.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mrs. NORTON. Is not that true of nearly every bill that comes up in the District Committee?

Mr. BLANTON. That is true of every important bill that corporations want to pass through Congress and legislatures, when the people are unsuspecting and they are uninformed about the provisions of the bill.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Except the last revenue bill?

Mr. BLANTON. The revenue bill stands on its own footing and is in a class by itself.

Mrs. NORTON. Is not that true also of almost all farm bills?

Mr. BLANTON. Most of the farm bills are put forth in the name of the farmer when we who really know the problems of the farmer, who have watched women and little girls sitting on plows and working in the hot sun all the day long, and have watched them drag cotton sacks up and down the furrows, sacks too heavy for a little girl to drag, and who remember that it takes about 2,500 of them to make enough money out of a whole year's work to pay the salary of a man who is now the cooperative official that is attempting to handle their business for them, but who mishandles it—we know most of their bills are brought in here by their so-called friends, but they do not do the farmer any good. I do not think Congress has ever helped the farmer. I do not think the Agricultural Department has ever helped the farmer 5 cents worth. [Applause.] I think it is money thrown away. I wonder if our good friend—she is so genial and courteous to us—would tell us if any big bug from New Jersey has recently written her insisting on the passage of this bill and insisting on having it passed in a hurry?

Mrs. NORTON. The lady from New Jersey does not know any big bug from New Jersey.

Mr. BLANTON. Has anybody from New Jersey recently written urging the passage of this bill quickly, a Mr. Halsey, or anybody else?

Mrs. NORTON. Not anyone. This bill has been in Congress for about 30 years, long before I came here—I was going to say before I was born, but I guess I will not go as far as that—I want to say this is the first year that everybody seems to agree that this is a good bill. As far as I know, everybody in the District, except the gentleman from Texas, agrees this is a very good bill. The people of the District and the street-railway companies in the District have joined in recommending this bill, and it is news to me that the gentleman from Texas is opposed to it.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to tell our good lady friend why I am opposed to it in a few moments. I am going to give you some facts. You know, there are 500,000 people living in the District of Columbia. I will guarantee to you that there are 450,000 that do not even know there is a merger bill before the Congress. I will guarantee to you that 450,000 people did not even know this bill was going to be debated to-day. These things are put over on the poor unsuspecting people of the District of Columbia. They have to take their medicine. While they do not like it when some of us try to make them pay fair taxes here, they do like it when some of us make a fight against their being mobbed by any corporate interests which are getting privileges here in this bill. I am going to call your attention to some things in a moment or so that will surprise you.

Mrs. NORTON. Perhaps the gentleman does not know that we had hearings on this bill; that every citizens' association in the District recommended it, and that there has not been any opposition at all to this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I still make my statement, that I honestly believe there are 450,000 people in the District who do not even know this bill is pending; that if they knew its provisions and if they knew that we were unloading on them a proper burden that the railway company ought to bear, they would come here to object in a solid mass, if they knew the provisions of this bill.

I wish you would read the examination which our colleagues, BOB SIMMONS, CLARENCE CANNON, and I put General Patrick under when he was before us. We showed that he had not made a step, and that it had not even occurred to him, to make this telephone monopoly reduce its rate.

Mr. PARKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. PARKS. I want to know if there is anywhere in the United States that this telephone company has reduced its rates, although it is writing to Members of Congress to reduce the salaries of every Government employee?

Mr. BLANTON. You know, things are now cheaper than they have ever been. They have put in this dial system and released a lot of employees, and we asked General Patrick why he had not gotten them to reduce their rates. He said it had never occurred to him, and that he would take it up with them and see what could be done. We said that what he ought to do was to make up his mind what was a proper rate, fix that rate, and make them stand for it.

We asked him about the gas company here. The little seven and a fraction cents that they have given as a decrease, what does that amount to? He ought to make a decrease there commensurate with existing conditions all over the country.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. That reduction in gas rates is less than the increased taxes which will be imposed as a result of relieving the street-car people of their police charges and paving charges under this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. In other words, we are putting more on them by this bill than that ruling takes from them.

Mr. BLANTON. If you knew as much about this bill as our friend, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS], and our friend, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], and the rest of us who have been watching this thing here for 15 years, you would kill this bill as dead as Hector before you would ever let it pass.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would like to get the gentleman's views on something that is bothering me a great deal——

Mr. BLANTON. Let me read you about the prices of their stocks here——

Mr. LAGUARDIA. My question is right along that line. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the paragraph on page 15, which reads:

> Ninth. The foregoing is based on the present conditions and business of the participating companies and on the assumption that, in the interval before the consummation of the foregoing transactions, there will be no change in the transit businesses, other than as a result of normal operations or those necessary to meet changed operating conditions, and that no distribution will be made to the stockholders of Capital Co., except the regular dividend payments, at not exceeding 7 per cent per annum.

Mr. BLANTON. We ought not to fix an arbitrary 7 per cent. Wait a minute and let me show you what they have been doing. If you will look on page 607 of the hearings before Mr. CANNON'S committee, you will see that the Potomac Electric Power Co., which is the power company that furnishes the power and is owned by the Washington Railway & Electric Co., lock, stock, and barrel—the Potomac Electric Power Co. has issued 70,000 shares of preferred stock, all of which is widely distributed, and has also issued 60,000 shares of common stock. This Potomac Electric Power Co. is now and always has been owned by the Washington Railway & Electric Co., and look at the way these values have increased.

In 1922 the high value was 68.78 per share, and in 1923 it ran up to $72 a share.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman is speaking of the common stock?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

In 1924 it ran up to 82, in 1925 it jumped to 250, in 1927 it jumped to 460, in 1928 it jumped to 485, and in 1931 it jumped to 502.

When the Capital Traction Co. was apparently willing to have only a 5-cent fare back in January, 1922, the common stock of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. was quoted at 42½; in June, 1922, at 50¼; in July, 1922, 57½; in August, 1922, at 58; in November, 1922, at 64; in December, 1922, at 68; and finally it went up to 78 in that year.

At the very time they were increasing fares on the little school children in Washington, in January, 1923, the stock was quoted at 70.

In April the stock was quoted at 72, in June at 79½. This was in 1923.

In 1924 the stock was quoted at 82, in November at 87½, in December, 1924, at 90—notice in January, 1925, it was quoted at 101, February, 103, March, 108½, April, 109½, May, 123¾, in June, 1925, 124⅞.

I want you to notice that it had jumped from 40½ in 1922 up to 124⅞ in three years.

Mr. PARKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. PARKS. Was that the year they raised the fare to 10 cents?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I am going to show those raises in a minute.

In August, 1925, it went to 182, in November it went to 235 and in December, 1925, to 250.

During all this time they were increasing the fares.

Mr. McLEOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, I yield.

Mr. McLEOD. Will the gentleman compare those figures with respect to 1925 with other utility figures on the board at the same time? Was not that a time when they were all up?

Mr. BLANTON. They are higher than any other utility company in the entire United States.

Mr. McLEOD. Has the gentleman those figures?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. McLEOD. Can the gentleman give the figures?

Mr. BLANTON. I have not them here, but I challenge the gentleman to show the contrary.

Mr. PALMISANO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. PALMISANO. In reply to the gentleman from Texas I want to state that the United Railway of Baltimore appealed from the decision of the Public Service Commission of Maryland and took the matter to the Supreme Court, and they are now, under the ruling of the United States Supreme Court, charging a 10-cent fare.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think that has any applicability. I said that their stock had gone up relatively in a greater proportion than any other utility stock in the United States, that they went from 42½ back in January, 1922, to 502 in 1931. Is there any other utility company that can beat that? Do not you think it was the duty of our good friend Mr. BLACK, the gentleman from New York, and our good friend from Michigan, to bring all these facts before us, when they are asking us to change the organic law that gives these two companies tremendous power, not only in street-car business but the bus business?

Mr. BLACK. It gives them the power to cease being a nuisance in certain places.

Mr. DELANEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. DELANEY. I was wondering whether the gentleman had any intimation that this stock was going up?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman will find it all in the report. We had Mr. Ham sitting at the table with his big, fine attorney—and he is a fine fellow; I like him.

Mr. DELANEY. I was wondering whether they tipped the gentleman off about stocks going up, so that he might have made something. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; we got that from other sources. Do you know that nobody except a little coterie has ever been able to get a single share of that stock for the last 10 years? They hold it in a little clique, and no shares are for sale.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The gentleman has referred more than once to the common stock issued by the Potomac Electric Power Co., and said that it was all held by the Washington Electric Railway Co. Has the gentleman any information as to what is the par value of that stock, and how much the Washington Railway paid the Potomac Electric Power Co. for the stock. I think that would be very interesting.

Mr. BLANTON. I have not been able to get that. The North American Co., of New York, will not answer my letters.

Now, I want to show you how these fares went up. I want to give you a history of the car fares. I want to put it in in connection with this bill seeking to give new power to these companies.

These are the facts that were brought out from Mr. Ham and his attorney, and the attorneys for the utility company admitted when the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] and myself had these hearings several years ago.

Up to October 26, 1918, the fare in the city was 5 cents, or you could buy tickets at the rate of 4⅙ cents a ticket, and the intracompany transfers were absolutely free.

From that date, up to February, 1919, the fare remained 5 cents; but the ticket fare was discontinued, though there were still intracompany transfers, free, with the same charges on certain streets for intercompany transfers.

From February 1, 1919, to June, 1919, the fare remained 5 cents. There were no tickets. The intracompany transfers were free. Then all of the transfers were free between the companies except on one street, and that was at Fifteenth and G Streets NW., where they charged you 2 cents for intercompany transfers. Then from June 1, 1919, to November 1, 1919, the fare still remained 5 cents, without tickets, and you paid a 2-cent transfer fee. That is where it was changed to a 2-cent transfer fee, excepting on two streets where you got transfers free. Every one of those changes was made by the Public Utilities Commission, not in the interest of the people but in absolute violation of the charter provisions which provided the fare should not be over 5 cents. It was made by the Public Utilities Commission against the interest of the people of the United States. Remember, there are about 70,000 Government workers here who are being robbed by these companies every day.

Mr. BLACK. We are going to take that advantage off by the merger, the gentleman knows.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I know what will happen under this merger. To continue from the hearings:

On November 1, 1919, the fare was raised from 5 to 7 cents, which continued to May 1, 1920. There were tickets sold at 6¼ cents. The intracompany transfers were free, but they still allowed a 2-cent transfer for intercompany transfers.

On May 1, 1920, they changed it again, and fixed it at 8 cents, and from that time until January 1, 1921, the fare was 8 cents, with 7½-cent tickets, and a 2-cent intercompany transfer.

From January 1, 1921, to April 1, 1921, the fare was 8 cents, with 7½-cent tickets, and intracompany transfers free, with 1 cent for intercompany transfers.

Then from April 1, 1921, to September 1, 1921, the fare was 8 cents, with 7½-cent tickets, intracompany transfers free, and with a 1-cent transfer between the companies, with the exception of two streets that were made free.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman state by what authority these increases were made if the franchise provided for a 5-cent fare?

Mr. BLANTON. They were made because the Public Utilities Commission has always, in my judgment, had more interest in looking after the welfare of these corporate powers than they have in looking after the welfare of the people. Of course, General Patrick is not concerned very much with the interest of the people. He is the man who draws $6,000 as a general's retired pay and $7,500 salary as chairman of the Public Utilities Commission. He gets a fine automobile furnished him free by the Government and a chauffeur provided free for him, and he gets all of his hospital supplies and all of his home supplies for himself and his family, including coal, from the Government stores at actual Government cost; he gets his truck driving free, and he gets his medicines and his doctors' bills and his dentists' bills free, and his nursing in hospitals is also free. He gets almost everything free. Why should he be concerned about the 70,000 school children who have been charged 10 cents car fare? When this Congress finally took the bit in its teeth and passed a law reducing the children's fare to 3 cents it took him nearly a year to put it into effect, and I want you to read in these hearings what he had to say when the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SIMMONS] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] and I began to twist him about it.

Mr. McLEOD. He was not opposed to a reduction in fares, was he? And did he not say he was not?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, there is a way of saying that you are not opposed to a thing and then letting it stand as it is. When a man tells me that he is not opposed to a reduction of fare, and you put it in his power to reduce the fare, and he does not reduce the fare until Congress forces him by law, and then he waits a year before he does that, I say that he is not very much in favor of it, except by lip service.

Mr. McLEOD. He did not have the power to do it.

Mr. BLANTON. He did do it, did he not?

Mr. McLEOD. He did not do it until there was legislation passed.

Mr. BLANTON. He did do it, did he not, when Congress directed him to do it, and there has been no injunction to stop it, and the school children, 70,000 of them, are getting their fares now at 3 cents each? Why did not he do it before? Is he not the chairman of the Public Utilities Commission?

If I were the chairman of that commission, and I thought it was right to do it, that it was right to give the children a rate of 3-cent fare, I would do it, whether the street-railway companies liked it or not.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to give the gentleman some facts that he has not given us the benefit of.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman answer a short question?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I want to give the gentleman some facts.

Mr. BLACK. Does the gentleman believe in a merger at all?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] and I worked out a proper merger bill, with the assistance of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT], but the railway companies would not let us pass it.

I want now to read some more about the fare business and its history.

From September 1, 1921, to March 1, 1922, the fare was 8 cents, with 7-cent tickets, free intracompany transfers, and with a 1-cent intercompany transfer. From 1922 to date, January, 1926, the fare has been 8 cents, 6¾ cents per ticket, intercompany transfers free, but intracompany transfers 1 cent.

Through all these years since 1922, when the common stock of the so-called poor company, the Washington Railway & Electric Co., ranged from $42½ per share in 1922 to $502 per share in 1931, it has mulcted the people with an 8-cent fare. It is now 10 cents, with 4 tokens for 30 cents.

Mr. PATTERSON. It is a 10-cent fare to-day.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; 4 tokens for 30 cents.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. The gentleman stated before that while the stock went from $42 a share to $502 in 1931, the stock was closely held and it was not offered on the market.

Mr. BLANTON. No. They wanted to hold it, because it was of great value.

Mr. SIROVICH. Then what was the use of holding it at $502, if it was so closely held?

Mr. BLANTON. That is what they were offered for it, I want to tell the gentleman from New York. They would not sell it. They could have sold it at $502, but they would not sell it. They wanted to keep it.

Mr. SIROVICH. How much dividend is it paying?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not know. Would the gentleman not think that General Patrick ought to know something about that?

Mr. SIROVICH. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I asked him about stock values, and so forth, and he said it had never occurred to him to look it up. On page 5, in line 14, of the bill for the first time there is added bus business to their transportation business, and it is being added by charter. Did you know that this bill that we are passing right now is a charter to that company? It is a Federal charter, if you please; something that we have quit granting to corporations; something that gives corporations a priority and a privilege that others do not enjoy. We ought to have stopped it long ago. I wish every Member here could have heard the speech that was delivered against the granting of Federal charters by our distinguished former Speaker, Uncle Joe Cannon. I wish you could have heard the speech made by Mr. James R. Mann. I wish you could have heard the speech that was made by Mr. Martin B. Madden against granting Federal corporation charters. It ought to stop. Here you are increasing their powers. How many busses will operate on the streets after you give them this charter? They will run every bus company out of business in Washington. These great big busses that run so fast that two of them run together and kill a lot of people, as they did the other day, will continue. They pay no attention to automobiles. They crowd you right off the street into the sidewalk. They pay no attention to your rights at all.

Mr. BLACK. They also carry a lot of people comfortably to their places of business.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes. I am not surprised that we have defenders for such bills on the floor of this House.

Mr. PARKS. The gentleman has got a 5-cent fare in New York.

Mr. BLANTON. I believe the gentleman thinks this is a good bill or he would not be advocating it here, but there are many things the gentleman does not know about it.

You can go to that fine city of New York and ride all day for 5 cents in those fine subways.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman should not bring that in. The gentleman does not know anything about that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think the rules ought to be observed a little better, even on District day. I will yield when it is necessary.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to tell the gentleman about his subway fares in New York.

Mr. BLACK. I know all about it. The gentleman does not have to tell me.

Mr. BLANTON. You can go down to a subway and get on those cars and ride all day for 5 cents, as long as you do not get out. It is the finest service in the world. It is only 5 cents. Through all of this inflation, during all these years where multimillionaires were being made over night, they never changed. It is 5 cents still. Be it said to the wisdom of those who control New York, they have held that fare down to 5 cents, because it meant much to the 6,000,000 people living in that great metropolis.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No. I want to tell the gentleman something about his bill that he has not observed.

This is a serious matter. This is a bill that takes the rights of the people here and gives those rights to corporations.

I want to call your attention to page 8, line 1, et seq.:

After the original issue of stock for the purposes of the unification, additional shares of stock and/or additional bonds or other evidences of indebtedness may, subject to the approval of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia, be issued by the directors from time to time for cash.

And so forth. Are you going to give that power to these companies? They would offer those securities on the markets of the country, and the people not knowing the value of the stock, they would double or treble that stock, and the buying public would suffer. That is one time they would sell, and that is one time they would unload on the public. Are you going to permit that? I am not going to vote for it.

Mr. McLEOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield to anyone opposed to the bill.

Mr. McLEOD. It says it is subject to the Public Utilities Commission.

Mr. BLANTON. How easy it would be to get that commission to approve it, with General Patrick on the commission—poor, old, unsuspecting General Patrick.

Mr. McLEOD. Is he the commission?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; he is the commission. There would not be any trouble for that splendid, suave lawyer of this company to go down there and get that through.

Mr. McLEOD. That is the idea of having a Public Utilities Commission.

Mr. BLANTON. Their lawyer is a splendid attorney, and the gentleman knows how he has appeared before our committee in the past and has gotten his way. There have been no bills passed that his company did not like. This bill has come to life with his approval, and that is why I am against it. Whenever these companies agree to a bill, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] and myself are against it, because we know all about the company.

Mr. PARKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I want to go on to something else.

Mr. PARKS. I do not want to interfere with the gentleman, because he is making an argument which I approve.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not want to take too much time, but I yield.

Mr. PARKS. Does this bill overrule the decision of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and the Supreme Court of the United States, in which they held they were not entitled to make more than 7 per cent on their investment?

Mr. BLANTON. No; but it is just this way: They have a way of inflating the value of their investment and they get it by this commission down here. Then they get an agreed statement of facts on which to go to the court and the people are not properly represented. The people have their rights taken away from them on an agreed statement of facts that does not present the real facts. I know that. That is the reason you would not get a square deal there.

Let me call your attention to the contract that this new company can make with this Potomac Electric Power Co., this "Pepco" that you see all over the country. Here is what the bill says it can do:

> Said power contract shall provide that for a period of 15 years the price to be paid by the new company (1) for 63 per cent of the electric power used for the maintenance and operation of the transit properties of the new company, and (2) for electric power furnished to other transportation companies under the existing contracts and/or renewals thereof shall be determined in accordance with the terms and conditions of the present arrangements between the Potomac Electric Power Co. and the Washington Co. for supply of electric power.

In other words, everybody in Washington knows that that existing contract is not a proper contract. The Washington Railway & Electric Co. owns the Potomac Electric Power Co. It has a contract within itself by which it pays about four times as much for electricity as it ought to pay, and it uses that before the Public Utilities Commission as part of its expenses to get its fares raised from 6, 7, and 8 cents to 10 cents on even school children for a long time. Are you going to let that go on for 15 years? You know the attorney for these companies wrote that into this bill. Our good friend the lady from New Jersey did not write that clause in the bill. That was put in there by the attorney for the railway company. This bill is as vicious as that clause is all the way through. It allows the Public Utilities Commission to pass on 37 per cent of the power used, but for 15 years they are not allowed to pass on 63 per cent. Why does it take that out from within the power of the Public Utilities Commission? Because it is in the interest of these railway companies. It is in the interest of the Potomac Electric Power Co., if you please, and it ought not to stay there.

Let me call your attention to paragraph 14, line 3, on page 19:

> This agreement is conditioned upon the new company being relieved from the expense of policemen at street railway crossings and intersections.

I am in favor of that. I always have been in favor of having policemen representing the people paid by the Government instead of these street-railway companies. If you were standing at a street crossing down at the Hotel Raleigh and there were 15 cars coming from away up at the Peace Monument, the railway policeman would let those street cars pass and let you stand there for eight minutes until they did pass. He gives the right of way to the street-car company, and I have been against it all the time, but I am not in favor of taking that expense off the railway company and at the same time giving them the right to still charge a car fare of 10 cents. When we remove that burden from them, we ought to at least require them to go back to their charter provision calling for a 5-cent car fare. They would increase their revenues 100 per cent by the increased traffic that would ensue.

Let me call your attention to another thing. It says that they shall be relieved of the laying of new pavement, the making of permanent improvements, renewals or repairs to the pavement of streets and public bridges, if you please. These heavy street cars going back and forth across some of these bridges hurt the bridges more than the rest of the traffic put together, yet all the cost of the improvement of those bridges is to be saddled upon the backs of the taxpayers of this Government, not only the taxpayers of the Government but the taxpayers of the District of Columbia. Are you in favor of that? I am not. I am not going to vote for it. You ought to strike out the enacting clause. You ought to send this bill, which was drawn by these railway companies and of which they got the approval of General Patrick, back to them and tell them they can not put this over Congress. Why should they not pay for their paving? They ought to do it.

Listen, at page 20, on line 4:

> No competitive street railway or bus line shall be established without the prior issuance of a certificate by the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia to the effect that the competitive line is necessary for the convenience of the public.

That provision keeps out all competition. May I say that we ought to kill this bill. We ought not to let it pass. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, now that you have heard all about the street-car merger, I rise to say a few words for the inarticulate 700,000 Federal employees who are appealing to the Congress to save their present small salaries for them.

A most peculiar condition of affairs exists. This morning I sent a messenger to the office of the chairman of the Committee on Economy with the request that I be furnished with a copy of the bill that they have prepared. I was advised there were no copies of the bill to be had at that time for distribution; but yet I picked up a copy of a New York paper of to-day and I find the entire provisions of the bill printed in the paper. The Washington papers also have copies of it and digests of it, and yet it is only 45½ hours until the time when this bill will be presented to us, and yet a Member of the House is unable to secure a copy of it.

Perhaps I was a little more fortunate than some of the other Members when a distinguished gentleman loaned me a copy of the bill. Mind you, I was loaned a copy of the bill.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Is it a kind of secret bill the gentleman has?

Mr. BOYLAN. Well, it is supposed to be sub rosa. [Laughter.] It is marked "Confidential committee print."

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Does the gentleman belong to some organization that permits him to have that or was it handed to the gentleman in secrecy or in confidence, so that he might read the bill instead of reading about it in the newspapers?

Mr. BOYLAN. No; I am simply one of the ordinary 435 Members that sit in this Chamber.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Can the gentleman advise me, confidentially or otherwise, where I may get a copy of that confidential print of the bill?

Mr. BOYLAN. I do not see how I can, when I was not even able to get a copy. I was only loaned a copy. I did not secure the copy; it was only loaned to me.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. Can the gentleman tell us where we may borrow a copy?

Mr. BOYLAN. Perhaps I may be able to tell them the name of the man who loaned me this copy.

Mr. PATTERSON. But the gentleman is not sure whether he would have any more copies to lend or not?

Mr. BOYLAN. Do not misunderstand me. I do not possess a copy. I have merely a borrowed copy that was loaned to me, and this copy is marked "Confidential committee print," but I pay no attention to that "Confidential committee print" when I can pick up a New York paper and find all about the bill in the paper.

Mr. LAMNECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. LAMNECK. My information this morning when I inquired about this bill was that it had not been introduced and therefore had not been printed.

Mr. BOYLAN. Well, the world knows about it, and, surely, we Members of the House ought to know a little something about it. Evidently, when the gentleman returns to his office he will find telegrams and letters of inquiry about it; and if the world knows it, through the press, surely an ordinary Member of the House ought to be let into the confidence of this august committee and told a little something about it, too.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield once more?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. On Friday of last week I had a telegram in regard to two matters which were said to be included in this bill and which I am told to-day can be found in the confidential print which the gentleman has; whereupon I wired to the adjutant of the American Legion who sent me the telegram from Denver, Colo., asking about what was in the bill. He wired me about these two provisions on Friday of last week, and still, up to this moment, I am unable to get a copy of the bill. Here are the telegrams:

DENVER, COLO., April 22, 1932.

Hon. WILLIAM R. EATON,
Congressman from Colorado, Washington:
Colorado voters are fair.
Legion generating campaign among veterans to save legislation already enacted over period of years.
Would you permit us quote you among veterans supporting movement, and will you oppose all cuts proposed special Economy Committee when bill as rider to appropriations bill reaches Congress?
Wire reply.

M. LYCKHOLM,
Colorado Legion Adjutant.

WASHINGTON, April 22, 1932.

M. L. LYCKHOLM,
Adjutant Amerigan Legion,
State House, Denver, Colo.:
What's in the bill?

WM. R. EATON.

It takes three days for mail to come from Denver. In this morning's mail I find one letter which was mailed April 22, in which the writer asks "Please vote against national economy act unless sections 207 and 208 are eliminated." Notice that this is quoted from a letter from a man in Denver who knew from some source last Friday what I can not find out here to-day at 2.30 in the afternoon except by asking the gentleman from New York to please let me borrow the confidential copy of the bill which he has in his hand.

Two other letters were received, dated April 22, from the John Borelli Chapter, No. 7, and William J. Murphy Chapter, No. 9, of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, in each of which appears the following:

The proposals requiring six months' service prior to the armistice and that only combat disabilities are to be considered for emergency officers for retirement are most unfair. * * *

Up to this moment I am unable to get a copy of any bill, confidential or otherwise, to examine to determine what may be answered to each letter. Where did the writers of those letters get the information which is not available to me?

I have asked my floor leader for a copy of the proposed bill; I have asked at the desk; I have asked at the office of the Committee on Appropriations and the Economy Committee, and also of Members of the floor, and none can furnish me a copy.

Mr. BOYLAN. Although the gentleman is a Member of the House and entitled to certain privileges and prerogatives, including copies of bills and reports, yet under the circumstances I would suggest that he wire some newspaper and they would probably give him the information that he seeks. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BOYLAN. Always to my distinguished colleague.

Mr. HOWARD. Will my colleague from New York be kind enough to tell the House by what authority, other than the authority of his own beautiful personality—by what additional authority he is singled out among all the rest to secure a confidential advance copy of this bill?

Mr. BOYLAN. Well, I can not attribute it to anything else but my persistency in seeking a copy of it. When I found I could not get a copy, I thought the next best thing was to ingratiate myself into the good graces of some one who had a copy and borrow his copy. [Laughter].

Mr. EATON of Colorado. What is the password?

Mr. BOYLAN. Persistency.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman be kind enough to point out to some of his less persistent colleagues the course he pursued in obtaining this result?

Mr. BOYLAN. In answer to the gentleman I would say that the gentleman being an old newspaperman——

Mr. HOWARD. Leave out the adjective. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOYLAN. I mean old in wisdom, not years; and knowing the gentleman is accustomed to getting information through devious channels and in every possible way, by hook or crook, I would not feel qualified to advise him.

Mr. HOWARD. Well, if there is not wisdom in this one particular colleague of mine from New York, where will I go to get it? [Laughter.]

Mr. BOYLAN. In answer to the gentleman, I may say that I have borrowed a copy; and when I finish my remarks, I am going to ask the man who loaned me this copy and who owns it if he will permit me to loan the copy to the gentleman, and then I will let him have it.

Mr. HOWARD. I will say to my friend that that is delightfully indefinite. It is almost as indefinite as the promises of the Economy Committee during the past month as to when an agreement would be reached between the White House and the Economy Committee.

Mr. BOYLAN. They realize that no agreement can be reached. I will say, and my promise is more definite than theirs, I will see the gentleman and take it on myself to secure him a loan of this copy.

Mr. HOWARD. Fine.

Mr. WOODRUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUM. If I understand the gentleman correctly, the copy he has exhibited to the committee is not at present obtainable?

Mr. BOYLAN. It is not.

Mr. WOODRUM. The gentleman, out of the goodness of his heart, wants to assist his less-fortunate colleagues in making available this information?

Mr. BOYLAN. I do.

Mr. WOODRUM. Then I suggest to the gentleman that he get unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and print the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOYLAN. I will adopt the gentleman's suggestion, and I make that request, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Reserving the right to object, I think we all know that a committee preparing legislation has a confidential print made before the introduction of the bill. Although I am not a member of the committee, that was the process here. I understand the regular print of the bill will be ready by half past 3 this afternoon, so you need not worry about getting a confidential print.

Mr. BOYLAN. In answer to the gentleman, it may be true, but my point is, the membership of this House ought at least to be put in the same category as the newspapers when any information is given out. Does the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I agree that when the committee has important legislation to report on, they have a confidential print made a day or two before its action.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I want to ask the gentleman if it is possible that the Economy Committee gave out to the newspapers the information that they were to cut down the salaries and pay for overtime, so that private corporations will be prepared to do the same thing, and instead of having 7,000,000 unemployed we will have 10,000,000 unemployed?

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman's deductions are correct.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is what the Economy Committee is trying to do, to increase the unemployment in this country.

Mr. BOYLAN. There is no doubt about it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Now that the advance information has been given about this reduction economy bill, I think it is well that the public should know that when this rule comes up Wednesday for a vote we are going to vote it down on both sides of this aisle. [Applause.]

Mr. BOYLAN. I sincerely trust so.

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. I am in sympathy with the gentleman, and I find myself in the same position. I called on the Committee on Appropriations for a copy of the Army appropriation bill. I understand the subcommittee has been sitting since January and no Member of the House can get a copy.

Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. LA GUARDIA, and others asked Mr. BOYLAN to yield.

Mr. BOYLAN. Hold on, gentlemen; take it as the monkey killed the bees, one at a time. [Laughter.] I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SIMMONS. In view that the charge has been made against the committee of which the gentleman and I are members, I want to say that there is no War Department bill. Hearings have been held, but no bill has been introduced in the committee. No bill therefore has been suppressed.

Mr. PARKS. I want to say that not even the subcommittee has any bill, nor has any bill been presented to the full committee.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. So far as the War Department subcommittee is concerned, there is not even a confidential print of it.

Mr. BOYLAN. I thank the gentlemen for their contributions.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. BUSBY. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG] assured the gentleman that at 3.30 o'clock copies of this bill would be available. I want to say to the gentleman that the gentleman from Kansas got that information from one of the pages of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOYLAN. Oh I see; that is in line with my own experience.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. What is the date on the page of the newspaper that the gentleman has been referring to?

Mr. BOYLAN. The newspaper is the New York Times, and the date is New York, Monday, April 25, 1932. What is the reason for all this secrecy? We are told that this bill is going to be brought in here under a stringent rule as a rider to the legislative appropriation bill. I call your attention to this little (?) rider which I hold in my hand. There are only 68 pages in it. I do not think in all of the history of this House, from the first Congress up to and including the Seventy-second Congress, there has been a rider of these gigantic proportions attached to any bill. We are told that an application will be made for a rule, and that under that rule only one or two or three amendments may be offered to different sections—an ironclad rule. Then an effort will be made to adopt the rule, with perhaps a short debate of 20 minutes or half an hour on a side.

They will then endeavor to pass this rider of 68 pages, a rider that should be considered in this House separately on its own merit, if it has any, because it contains many provisions. We have in this House a committee known as the Committee on Appropriations. Many writers in writing about the committees of the House of Representatives have put the Committee on Appropriations as the first committee of the House. In other days the leader was always a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and this committee was considered of transcendent importance. Yet, Mr. Chairman, this historic committee with its wonderful background extending over 100 years, is practically ignored and superseded by an Economy Committee springing into life seven or eight weeks ago, and now we have this Economy Committee usurping the rights and the prerogatives of one of the most important committees of the House.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. Does my distinguished colleague realize that by voting down the rule we can destroy the rider and everything that goes with it on Wednesday next?

Mr. BOYLAN. Absolutely. But the gentleman anticipates me. I am laying the proper foundation for my remarks.

Mr. COLTON. It might also be interesting at this point to note that the Economy Committee has entirely displaced the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. BOYLAN. Absolutely it has.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman has had the opportunity of reading the bill, which we have not. Is it like all other bills in this Democratic Congress—a nonpartisan bill?

Mr. BOYLAN. I don't like the form of the question. [Laughter.] I ask the gentleman to reframe the question if he will. I am not speaking in any partisan sense. I am speaking of a committee which is supposed to be a bipartisan committee. If the gentleman will ask me the question and delete the word "Democratic" I shall be pleased to answer his question.

Mr. GIFFORD. I would like to ask the question, but the gentleman must acknowledge that a majority of the Committee on Rules and a majority of the Economy Committee are Democrats. Therefore, they should have credit for whatever product they bring forth.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If the Members on this side do not vote against the rule on Wednesday, I think we can pick up enough votes on the other side of the aisle to defeat the whole thing.

Mr. BOYLAN. Of course, if the gentleman from Massachusetts persists in trying to put partisanship into it, well and good. I have refrained. I think both parties are equally guilty, and I say to the gentleman that if this rule passes, members of both parties will have to answer to their constituents for it.

Mr. GIFFORD. May I ask the gentleman one more question?

Mr. BOYLAN. If it is a nonpartisan question. I object to any partisan question.

Mr. GIFFORD. In all matters affecting the Congress up to date, except in one little matter of an election contest, we have heard that everything is nonpartisan. Is not that a new doctrine?

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman knows that he, together with the rest of us, has stood behind the President in this so-called bipartisan program. Surely the gentleman has not forgotten our patriotic course.

Mr. GIFFORD. May I suggest to the gentleman that I read the newspapers, and they have furnished me all the knowledge that I have on this matter. I understand that the President's suggestions have been laid aside by the Economy Committee, and that somebody might be privileged to offer the President's suggestion as a substitute at some place in the bill. It is said that at some time there might be a right in the minority to represent the President, but that he has been turned down in this report. I have read that in the newspapers. Of course, the gentleman knows what the bill contains. I do not.

Mr. BOYLAN. If the gentleman will have patience, I shall try to tell him what is in my borrowed copy of the bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Again? Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Since the distinguished gentleman has stated that the Economy Committee has usurped the privileges and prerogatives of the Committee on Appropriations, and since the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON] has stated they have also deprived the Committee on Expenditures of all their work, why would it not be possible, through a resolution, both sides getting together, to abolish the entire Economy Committee?

Mr. BOYLAN. I would say I would be delighted if such a course were pursued.

Now, turning again to this borrowed copy of the confidential committee report, on page 2 we find that—

> The compensation for each civilian and noncivilian office, position, employment, or enlistment in any branch or service of the United States Government or the government of the District of Columbia is hereby reduced as follows: Compensation at an annual rate of $1,000 or less shall be exempt from reduction.

Our expostulations on the floor have done a little good, because in the original plan submitted they intended to include charwomen at $50 a month. Now they have gone a little higher, and they have made it $83.33 a month or $1,000 a year as the exemption basis.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Has the gentleman with him what is known as a copy of the President's suggestions, or can the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] tell us where we can get a copy of the President's suggestions, to which reference was made?

Mr. BOYLAN. Well, I think that was printed in the RECORD last week or the week before. The gentleman can get that by consulting the RECORD.

Mr. GIFFORD. May I suggest to the gentleman?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. GIFFORD. I wonder if in that bill there is still allowed to remain the right of the President to issue a proclamation whenever, within 10 per cent, commodity prices are raised, so that all this may be set aside in a moment by the President of the United States? Is that left in the bill?

Mr. BOYLAN. I am glad to advise the distinguished statesman from Massachusetts that that is in the bill.

Now, let us take the minimum salary that would be subject to a reduction. That would be $1,100. A man or woman working for the Government, receiving a salary of $1,100 a year, under the provisions of this act would receive a reduction of 11 per cent on the $100 in excess of $1,000. Eleven per cent of $100 would be $11. Now, just imagine a poor little clerk, man or woman, working for $1,100 a year, being forced to take out of their small pay envelope the sum of $1 a month. Just think of it! One dollar a month to help this magnificent Government of the United States balance its Budget! [Laughter.] Can you imagine a large corporation of any kind making its charwomen or office boys—and an office boy in New York gets as much money as that and sometimes more—can you imagine them asking the office boy to contribute a dollar a month toward balancing the Budget? Why, it is so ridiculous that we ought not really talk about it.

Now, let us take another case. In figures that I presented to you last week I showed that the average salary of the Federal employees, outside of the legislative and judicial branches, was $1,440 a year. Fourteen hundred and forty dollars a year is the average salary of the Federal employee. Under this bill $1,000 is exempt. Then there is $440 which would be in excess of the $1,000 that would be subject to a tax of 11 per cent. That would mean a tax on a $1,440 per year clerk of approximately $55 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I think on the whole the Economy Committee has done splendid work. But the exemption should be more. Why not get together and put an amendment onto this bill that would give an exemption of at least $2,200, because it takes at least that much for a family to live?

Mr. BOYLAN. I am glad the gentleman asked that question.

Mr. BLANTON. I am with the gentleman in putting on that kind of an amendment to the bill.

Mr. BOYLAN. I am glad the gentleman made that suggestion, but the only way we can do it is to vote down this rule, because if the rule is adopted there will be no opportunity to amend the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. We will have to amend the bill unless we can get the committee to accept that $2,200 exemption.

Mr. BOYLAN. I agree with the gentleman, and I hope the gentleman will support us in that.

Mr. BLANTON. I will go along with the gentleman unless the committee puts that in themselves.

Mr. BOYLAN. I will be happy to have the gentleman go along with us.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If they exempt up to $2,200, they will not get any income.

Mr. BLANTON. If we can take the graft out of all these bureaus in Washington, we will balance the Budget without reducing any of the small salaries.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BOYLAN. In just a moment. Unless we have an opportunity to vote down the rule there will be no chance to offer an amendment such as that suggested by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Well, what is going to keep us from voting it down? We are the free representatives of the people.

Mr. BOYLAN. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that, and I hope he will be with us.

Mr. GIFFORD. I might suggest to the gentleman that he might get a great many votes on this side if he can assure the Republicans they are not tied by it being a nonpartisan measure. Now, is that the President's suggestion or is that the Democratic bill?

Mr. BOYLAN. I think the gentleman is proceeding along one line of thought. I told the gentleman distinctly, as much as I love and esteem and revere and admire him, that I was not approaching this matter from a partisan standpoint.

Now, I am not making a partisan appeal. I am not looking at it that way. I am looking at it broadly and free from any partisanship. Every question the gentleman has asked me has been along partisan lines.

Mr. GIFFORD. The gentleman does not know, does he?

Mr. BOYLAN. It is a mixture of both, and both are bad.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for one further question?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The orderly way to do, instead of voting the rule down, would be to vote down the previous question and then amend the rule. That would be the orderly procedure. I hope the gentleman will help us vote the previous question down and then proceed to amend the rule, because the bill as a whole is essential and necessary, and we ought to perfect the bill by proper amendments and then pass it.

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman is a distinguished parliamentarian. We will call a meeting, adopt a plan, and endeavor to follow a proper method of procedure.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would suggest to the gentleman from Texas, who is a very able strategist on parliamentary maneuvering, that it would be extremely dangerous to pursue any such course. I think the better plan would be to vote down the rule, so that we will bring the parties responsible for this hodgepodge omnibus bill to their senses.

Mr. BLANTON. We would have two shots at it then in our efforts to perfect the bill. If we fail to vote down the previous question, we could still vote down the rule.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But we do not want a little bit of pap put into this bill in order to get votes. We should vote down the rule.

Mr. BLANTON. If you vote down the previous question, we can then properly amend the rule.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I would prefer voting down the rule.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from New York knows how to handle bills on the floor. He has had some experience.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I will look to the gentleman from Texas to help us vote down the rule.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentlemen kindly yield me the floor now? [Laughter.]

Now, we go along and come to another part of the bill which says:

SUSPENSION OF SATURDAY HALF HOLIDAYS

The provisions of the act entitled "An act providing for Saturday half holidays for certain Government employees," approved March 3, 1931, shall be inoperative during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and the provisions of law amended by such act shall apply as if such act had not been enacted.

Just think, gentlemen, after all the years we tried to give Government employees the benefit of a Saturday half holiday, and they have only had the benefit of it for one year, you come along and take it away from them. That is a provision which we certainly should consider ourselves bound to defeat, and unless we defeat the whole bill, the whole rider, that will be included in it.

Then along comes another little section where they are going to pass the hat. Just imagine the Government of the United States passing the hat. Here is a very fine section. It says:

In any case in which the application of the provisions of this title to any person would result in a diminution of compensation prohibited by the Constitution—

Listen to this, gentlemen:

the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept from such person and cover into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts remittance of such part of the compensation of such person as would not be paid to him if such diminution of compensation were not prohibited.

In other words, suppose you are getting a salary of $3,000 a year and owing to some provision in the Constitution these salary cutters are not able to get you; then in that case you are invited to do this: First, you exempt $1,000; then you have $2,000 left; 11 per cent of that will be $220, and, according to section 107, you are invited to go to the Treasury Department and hand in your check for $220. I trust you gentlemen will remember that.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. BARBOUR. Would that be legal when the Constitution of the United States provides that certain salaries shall not be cut or reduced during the term for which the office-holder is appointed? Could the Treasury take it?

Mr. BOYLAN. I do not hold forth as an able constitutional lawyer, but in my humble opinion I do not think it would be constitutional; in fact, I think this whole rider is unconstitutional.

Mr. BARBOUR. I think there is a very serious question as to whether the Treasury would have the right to receive that money.

Mr. BOYLAN. I believe the gentleman is correct in his assumption. Then, we have suspension of promotions and the filling of vacancies. You gentlemen know, and I know, that Congress passed laws in order to keep faithful employees in the Government service by guaranteeing to them certain promotions; that if in a grade above that in which an employee was working a vacancy existed either through death, resignation, or separation from the service, some one in that class or grade could look forward to being promoted to that vacancy. This is all carried away; all this hope is destroyed by a provision in this bill.

Now, we have another section, "Compulsory retirement for age."

Every one of us knows there are certain key men and women in the different departments whose services are almost invaluable to the Government and for whom we try to secure extensions of two years additional after they have reached the retirement age, not altogether as a benefit to the individual man or woman, but rather as a benefit and help and aid to the Government on account of the knowledge they have acquired by their long experience.

Then we come along and we find that the Postal Service is affected, and we are told that the traveling allowances provided for employees of the Postal Service shall not exceed $2 per day. Just imagine, gentlemen, a postal clerk traveling on business of the Government or a railway mail clerk traveling to connect with his train, is allowed the munificent sum of $2 a day to pay for his lodging and three meals. How any man can do this I do not know, but this is one of the conundrums, I suppose, that will have to be solved later.

Of course, on account of the limited time I have at my disposal, I can not go into every section of this nefarious rider, and I shall have to simply pick out certain ones as I go along.

We find in another section that no officer or employee of the Government shall be allowed or paid a higher rate of compensation for overtime work, for night work, or for work on Sundays and holidays, which is very, very unfair, because every trade and every business recognizes the additional hardship caused by working nights and working Sundays.

We have another illuminating provision here. The Postmaster General may temporarily assign a clerk to the duties of carrier or a carrier may be assigned to the duties of clerk, and it goes farther—he may assign any postal employee to the duties of a railway postal clerk or he may take a railway mail postal clerk off of his train and put him in a post office without change of pay-roll status.

I do not know what this will lead to, but I do know that we have in the New York City post office—and I guess you have the same thing in the other large cities of the country—substitute carriers who have been on the list as long as five and six years. Some of these poor fellows are only making on an average of $15 a week. If they are going to take men off the trains and put them into the post office, if they are going to have clerks do carrier work, I do not know what is going to happen to the poor substitute.

Mr. KETCHAM. Will the gentleman yield briefly at this point?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. KETCHAM. Before the gentleman leaves his discussion of transfers to which he has just made reference, will the gentleman be kind enough to advise the House whether such transfers are subject to any review by the Congress upon recommendation of the President, or are they definite powers given to the Postmaster General without any power of review?

Mr. BOYLAN. These are definite powers given to the Postmaster General, and as I understand it, without review.

Mr. KETCHAM. Later on in the section there is a provision which gives the President power to make certain reorganizations, and they go into effect subject to the review of Congress within a period of 60 days.

Mr. BOYLAN. That does not apply to this section.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield before leaving the matter of the mail service?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes.

Mr. BACON. If the proposed 11 per cent cut goes through, plus a 10 per cent cut in the Senate, it will mean that all cities, instead of having three deliveries a day will have but one delivery a day. It will mean that no mail will be sorted in the Railway Mail Service, but will have to be sorted in the central post office, with a loss of 24 hours in the delivery of letters; and so far as rural delivery is concerned, it will mean a reduction from one delivery a day to two deliveries a week, and, in fact, if the 11 per cent cut plus the 10 per cent reduction in the Senate goes through, so far as all bills are concerned, in addition to the Post Office Department bill, it will mean that 80,000 people will lose their jobs and that this may affect 300,000 people.

Mr. BOYLAN. I am very glad the gentleman called my attention to that fact. I had made a note of it but it had slipped my mind.

The gentleman is correct in his assumption. I went into that matter last week in a few remarks I made, and showed that if the Senate made a 10 per cent cut after the Bureau of the Budget had made a cut and the Appropriations Committee had made a cut, and then this wonderful committee taxes them 11 per cent, I do not think there will be any salary left or any clerks left. I think we will have to call on dollar-a-year men and women to offer their services to the Government and perform all the Government functions, including the delivery of the mail.

There are a few more little things here. Here is a little section that is going to interest you gentlemen. You will have to pay for these things. I know I do.

SEC. 315. Increases in certain charges and fees. After the date of the enactment of this act, the price at which additional copies of Government publications are offered for sale to the public by the Superintendent of Documents shall be based on the cost of printing and binding plus 30 per cent, and such cost shall be in lieu of that prescribed in public resolution—

And so forth.

Now, just think of that, gentlemen. Your constituents write to you for documents of various kinds. They are going to cost you just 30 per cent more than you are now paying for them.

If you are willing to pay it, all right.

Mr. WELCH of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield.

Mr. WELCH of California. Does the bill provide for the cutting off or cutting down of assistance to the disabled war veterans?

Mr. BOYLAN. It does. That section was covered by the gentleman from California [Mr. SWING]. It does cover that; but I am not going into that again.

Now, gentlemen, do not forget when this rule comes in here on Wednesday that public documents are going to cost you 30 per cent more than you are now paying; and if they take the cut of 11 per cent off your salary, that will mean $990 a year, and adding that to the other expenses, I think your net salary is going to be at least $2,000 less than what you are now getting. So beware of this rule, I beseech you.

Now, they have a provision in here that even the courts are not allowed to interfere with the working of the bill. They are going to muzzle the courts.

They say that no court of the United States shall have jurisdiction in any suit against the United States or against any officer, agency, or instrumentality of the United States arising out of the application of any provision in this title—unless such suit involves the Constitution of the United States.

Was there ever a bill passed here with a provision like that in it to muzzle the courts? They are so fearful that the bill will not stand—and I know it will not stand—that they are going to muzzle the courts in advance. Is not that a wonderful prohibition?

Now, I hope the gentleman from Cape Cod [Mr. GIFFORD] is here, for here is a provision that will interest him.

Here is a provision that a fish hatchery located in any State may be transferred, with all of its personal property, to the State, and if any State shall cease to use the hatchery, it must revert to the United States.

Mr. GIFFORD. There is no fish hatchery in my district, except the scientific laboratory at Woods Hole.

Mr. BOYLAN. Well, the gentleman catches so many fish off Cape Cod that I suppose it is not necessary to have a fish hatchery. [Laughter.]

Now, what about the farmer? How do you feel about this? Here is a provision for the transfer of agricultural experiment stations. On the application of any State the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to transfer to such State all right, title, and interest in the agricultural experiment station located in such State, together, and so forth. Now, it may be gentlemen, the Government is getting from under the agricultural experiment stations—are you willing to agree to this?

Mr. OSIAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. I yield.

Mr. OSIAS. May I request the gentleman, with his brilliant powers of analysis, to turn to section 302, page 13?

Mr. BOYLAN. Oh, yes; that is the Philippine Scouts provision. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that. Now, what is going to happen to the Scouts?

Here is what is going to happen to the Scouts. All expenses incurred on and after July 1, 1932, on account of the Philippine Scouts shall be charged to the government of the Philippine Islands.

The Secretary of War is to certify periodically to the Governor General the expenses incurred on account of the Philippine Scouts and those expenses are to be collected from the Philippine government by the Secretary of War and deposited to the credit of miscellaneous receipts in the United States Treasury.

It was not enough to throw them back on the Philippines at a cost approximately of $5,000,000 a year to that people for upkeep, but it even goes farther and adds insult to injury by saying that after having done that the President is authorized to disband the Philippine Scouts or reduce the personnel thereof.

Mr. OSIAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOYLAN. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. OSIAS. The gentleman is aware that the Philippine Scouts are a part and parcel of the United States Army, is he not?

Mr. BOYLAN. Certainly.

Mr. OSIAS. Does the gentleman think it honorable and just to proceed in accordance with that provision?

Mr. BOYLAN. I do not. I do not think that anything in this bill is just. Of course, if we pass the buck to the Filipinos and make them pay this bill, we can then say that we have saved $5,000,000.

Mr. OSIAS. And may I be permitted to add that the present law, approved by the Congress of the United States on February 2, 1901, already authorizes the President to fix the number up to 12,000 and places no limitation on his power to reduce the number. It seems to me, therefore, that that provision is unnecessary.

Mr. BOYLAN. That is true. I agree with the gentleman; but in this wild craze for economy we are snatching at every straw that will help reduce expenses, and, of course, if we can have the Filipinos pay the $5,000,000 instead of our paying it, we will have saved $5,000,000. The gentleman will agree with me on that, surely.

Mr. OSIAS. I am sure the gentleman would not allow a little matter of $5,000,000 to weigh in the balance against the principle that is involved?

Mr. BOYLAN. Absolutely I agree with the gentleman. Principle is above monetary worth; principle is priceless—therefore I oppose this item in this rider as I oppose every other item in it.

Mr. OSIAS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, I have taken these few minutes to call attention to some of the high spots in this proposed rider. I do not know whether I am violating any confidence in reading out of the confidential print which was published in the morning newspapers or not, but be that as it may, I have simply taken the time so that you gentleman may carefully consider the sections of the rider.

Just imagine a 68-page rider will be presented to you at noon on Wednesday next without giving you proper opportunity for study. I beseech you to carefully examine the provisions of it in order that you may see where it affects not only the Federal employees but every branch of our Government, and in what manner it affects them. Remember, if we cut the salaries of Federal employees, we reduce their purchasing power; and I do not speak alone for the 70,000 employees in the city of Washington—I speak for the 700,000 Federal employees scattered throughout the length and breadth of this land. Every one of them is a potential purchaser, every one of them uses the salary he receives from the Government to purchase food and clothing and the necessaries of life; and if anything is left after doing that, then to buy a few of the refinements of life. Every one of these things enters into the daily life of industry in every State of the Union. You agree with me, I know, that the purchasing power of 700,000 employees at an average salary of $1,440 each is something that we must reckon with and something that should be considered by the Congress. You gentlemen know as well as I do that the minute the Congress reduces the salaries of Federal employees every mercantile and industrial organization throughout the United States will be waiting to take advantage of it and say, "The Federal Government has reduced salaries, so we now will also reduce salaries." [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for another hour.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. TILSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for another hour.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMASON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House Joint Resolution 154, to authorize the merger of street-railway corporations and the acquiring of certain bus lines operating in the District of Columbia and adjacent States, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the pending bill conclude in 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 154.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of House Joint Resolution 154, with Mr. THOMASON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. KETCHAM. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KETCHAM. What became of the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] for the publication of the report of the Economy Committee as an extension of his remarks in the RECORD? A reservation of objection was made, but I heard no disposition of it.

The CHAIRMAN. No such request was directed to the Chair.

Mr. KETCHAM. Then it is not to be printed as an extension of his remarks?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT].

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, for many years there has been an effort to merge the street-car companies of the city of Washington.

For two years prior to March 4, 1929, I labored on this matter, together with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], and others. I mention them, as they have mentioned me.

We went into this matter, I presume, as thoroughly as any committee of Congress has ever gone into any similar subject. I fought side by side with the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Vermont in opposing the merger then proposed. I think those gentlemen will give me credit for having been at least diligent in that hearing and for conducting a large part of the cross-examination.

I do not say that the present bill is altogether satisfactory to me. I do not believe any bill will ever be drawn that would be satisfactory to everybody, but this is so far superior to any proposal that has ever been made to the House, and it is so obvious that some merger should be effected, that I feel now, for the first time, that I am in accord with the merger proposed by the Public Utilities Commission. I think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will give me credit for having eliminated from the former proposal the valuation of some $75,000,000 that was placed upon these properties. I came to the conclusion that that was an excessive valuation, and I knew the purpose would be to use it as a base for the purpose of fixing rates.

I also fought to have included in the merger a provision that the school children of this District should ride on greatly reduced fares.

I also fought for certain labor provisions. All of those matters have now either been effected in other legislation or the objectionable features have been eliminated from this bill. The vicious valuation of $75,000,000, which was attempted in previous proposals, has been eliminated. The reduced school fare has been provided in different legislation, and I feel that now is the time when the Public Utilities Commission should be given an opportunity to secure, if they will, and if justifiable, reduced fares for all riders of the street cars.

I agree with a great deal which the gentleman from Texas has stated, but to my mind that does not affect the matter of this merger. If there are any provisions in this bill that are unwise, we should eliminate them by amendment; but it is so obvious that it is unnecessary to have two overheads, it is so obvious that it is unnecessary to have miles of duplication of trackage and that we should eliminate those expenses that I feel that the objections that have been raised should be addressed to amendments rather than to defeating this merger.

The suggestion that the traffic policemen should be paid for by the taxpayers of the District instead of by the traction companies is, to my mind, sound. It is true it adds an additional burden to the taxpayers of the District, but it is a burden they should bear, and should always have borne. It is not only unfair to the riders of the street cars that they should pay for traffic policemen rather than the general taxpayers of the District, but it is unsound governmentally. Officers of the law are now being paid for in the District of Columbia by private corporations.

I am not so sure of the matter of street paving. It is true this merger bill transfers certain paving from the street-car companies or from the street-car riders, if you please, to the general taxpayers of the District. I am not so sure that that is a wise provision, but that should not stand in the way of this merger. If the committee feels that the street cars should bear that, and it is borne by the street-car companies in many States of the Union, it can be eliminated by amendment. But, as the gentleman from Texas has pointed out, because the Public Utilities Commission in the past has not shown much sympathetic consideration of these matters is no reason why overhead and duplication of trackage and many unnecessary expenses that are now carried in this duplication should not be eliminated.

The gentleman from Texas pointed out the great rise in the value of these stocks. I am not as fresh upon this as the gentleman is, but the committee went into it fully, and my recollection is that that was caused by the fact that the Washington Railway & Electric Co. owned the power company and received the benefit of the profit from light consumers in the District. But my recollection is very distinct that the income on those stocks, when confined to street-car traffic, was not greater than 3 per cent.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] has suggested that the 7 per cent provision as a maximum to be earned on stocks is out of keeping with the general times and that it is too much. That may be, but that is not fixed by Congress, and any rate we would fix would be absolutely immaterial. That has been fixed by the Supreme Court of the United States; and regardless of what we might write into this bill as a fair return, those companies could go into court under the confiscatory clause of the Constitution of the United States and ask for a fair return on their property, and it would be fixed by the courts.

I do not know that there is anything I can add. I would not have taken this time had it not been for the fact that it was shown that I had vigorously opposed these mergers in the past. That is true. But I felt it fair to say to them and to those of you who knew of any prior position I might have taken, that I feel now that the objectionable, the substantial features to the merger which we opposed have, through years of fight, been eliminated. I am glad to have taken some small part in that fight, in which the gentleman from Texas has been so helpful to the people of the District, and in which the gentleman from Vermont has been so helpful. I think both of those gentlemen will bear witness to the fact that the things we fought against hardest have been eliminated, and I, for one, will say that, although this merger bill is not as I would write it, yet undoubtedly we ought to have a merger.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield nine minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, were it not for the extreme importance to the entire country of the so-called amendment which is to be offered on Wednesday to the legislative appropriation bill, I would not trespass upon the time of this committee, which has been very patient all afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, I want to point out to the membership of this House that this so-called economy plan which is being brought before us is the result of a hysteria, a mania on the part of just a few individuals who are smarting under the disappointment of the revenue bill which was passed by this House.

We can not by the wildest stretch of the imagination so curtail the Budget without an increase of taxes. The revenue bill will be passed by the Senate and will become a law notwithstanding the misrepresentations that are being sent throughout the country at this time.

The whole purpose is to bring down the wage scale in the United States and I want to point out to my colleagues the fallacy of such a policy.

This will reduce the purchasing power of the American people, which is now at a low ebb. It will further reduce the purchasing power of the American people to the extent of several hundreds of millions of dollars. The amount deducted from Federal employees and from the normal expenditures of the Government will so demoralize the departments and so impair public business as to create a complete breakdown of the Government.

No constructive suggestion has been made as to where we can economize, and let me point out something significant.

Gentlemen will remember that last summer a group of bankers called on the President and forced the President to issue his statement on the moratorium. The country was committed and Congress could do nothing else but ratify that commitment made by the President. Now, it is sought to make the employees of the Federal Government pay the cost of that moratorium. If you take the figures you will see that this is significant.

If you consider the figures you will see that the loss of the amount due on the foreign debts is, this year and next year, by reason of the foreign debtors not paying the United States, to be partially made up by economies in the Government service and reduction of Federal wages. When the moratorium was declared, it was believed that it would be absorbed by the entire country.

Gentlemen, I hope this House will not be trapped, may I say, with any sugar-coated rules, because the subjects in the proposed amendment would not be germane under the rules of this House to a legislative appropriation bill. Why, the outrage that is being perpetrated on the people of the Philippines—and the Commissioner sits here at this moment—would not be germane to any appropriation bill imposing an additional $5,000,000 to be collected at the point of the bayonet for the support of a military establishment that the people of the Philippines never created, never asked for, and do not want. In addition, there are many legislative features which should each be separately considered.

I submit, gentlemen, this House should resent being treated like kindergarten children by placing this makeshift, this legislative monstrosity, on the legislative bill so as to say, "You have got to vote for it because your salaries are to be decreased."

Let us vote on every proposition on its merits; and I submit, gentlemen, to study the proposed rule, although it may seem to be a liberal rule, it should be voted down. Why should we be limited in the number of amendments the membership of this House may want to offer to any given proposition?

Mr. KELLER. Does the rule provide that?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. You will find the rule limits the number of amendments; and I say that any rule that limits the constitutional right of the membership of this body to legislate is a gag rule no matter what they may call it.

Another thing I want to warn against is the so-called bipartisan feature. Bipartisan action may be vicious just as bipartisan action may be good. I want to point out to the leadership on this side that they will be in no position to criticize the conduct of the majority unless they have the courage to back such criticism by their votes in voting down the rule.

I want to appeal to my friends on the Democratic side. I know they do not want to lend themselves to a scheme which would destroy labor conditions that have taken 50 years to acquire in this country by blindly voting for the rule and swallowing this bill.

Why, gentlemen, extra pay for night work, known as the night differential, and pay for overtime are fundamental principles of labor that labor has struggled for 50 years in this country to obtain; and now with one stroke, under the guise of economy, based upon misrepresentation, Mr. Chairman—willful misrepresentation—all progress and benefits to labor are to be swept aside.

I have letters in my office—stereotyped letters—prepared by the largest banks in this country and given to unemployed people to sign, stating that unless the tax bill is defeated unemployment will continue. Did the working people of this country cause the depression? Not at all. Who unbalanced the Budget? The Budget was unbalanced on account of the fact that the income of the American people has been destroyed by being defrauded of billions and billions on no-good securities. Who sold these securities? Why, the very same people who are seeking to reduce wages and avoid taxes.

At this very time, Mr. Chairman, we are inflating the currency regardless of any new legislation. The Federal reserve officials testified before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House that they are issuing currency to the extent of $25,000,000 a week and raising it to $100,000,000 in this attempt to bring up commodity prices. If we are going to bring up commodity prices, how can we with any decency reduce wages? Such a scheme of inflating currency and reducing wages would make the working people of this country pay the entire cost of the depression. That is the whole effort—to inflate the currency, increase commodity prices, decrease wages, create a poor half-starved working class with the possibility of greater exploitation, and make the working people pay all the cost of the depression. [Appaluse.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. Such unification in accordance with said agreement, and each and every one of the provisions therein, be, and the same are hereby, ratified and approved, and said Capital Transit Co., when organized under the provisions of subchapter 4, chapter 18, of the Code of Law of the District of Columbia, shall have all the powers, benefits, and obligations expressed in said unification agreement, approved as aforesaid; and the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to do all such acts and things as may be necessary or appropriate on its part to carry out the provisions of said agreement and of this resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion. I move to strike out the resolving clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think this bill ought to be stopped here. I do not know whether we can do it or not, with just a few Members on the floor, and most of them members of the committee, but we ought to make the attempt for the following reasons: It changes existing law with respect to the charter fare of 5 cents. I hope that the charter will not be changed requiring them to carry passengers for 5 cents. Then this permits them to stop paving between tracks.

They never have paid anything for their franchise, and they ought to continue paving between the tracks. That is worth $150,000 or $200,000 a year to them or more.

We ought to beat it, because it gives them a valuable right in stopping their payment for traffic policemen. They have always paid that, and by this bill we are putting it on the people without a corresponding benefit.

We ought to beat it because this will permit them as soon as it is approved to increase their capital stock, and to increase their bonds to an unlimited amount. There is no limitation whatever placed on it. They will sell their new stocks and bonds and use them in trying to get a return on all this, and then getting the Public Utilities Commission to let them increase their fare. I think we ought to stop it right here.

If you look at it, I doubt whether it would be a legal enactment if it does pass. There are a lot of whereases, and the resolving clause is not properly drawn, but crudely put together. The railway companies are not properly named, and the railway companies could take advantage of it if they wanted to, and the people can not do it. For all these reasons I think the bill ought to be stopped right where it is.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas wants to undo the work of Congress for a great number of years in an effort to serve the people of the District of Columbia by a simple motion to strike out the resolving clause. He says the resolving clause is not properly drawn, and that the companies are not properly named. He says that the bill is crudely drawn. The reason that the companies in the agreement are not always named by their full names is simply for convenience. They call the Capital Traction Co. in various parts of the agreement the Capital Co., having said in the first paragraph that it shall be so known. It is merely a matter of convenience. There is no subterfuge or underground business about it, nor is it unfair. Congress has had this burden on its hands for years, and it is time to get rid of it. It is the unanimous sentiment of the people of the District that something be done about clearing up the situation that is created by competing public utilities on the streets of the city of Washington—and they exist no place else in the country. We owe it to the people of Washington, who have a real basis for the demand for this merger, that we do something about it.

If some gentlemen do not like some parts of the bill, then let us get along with the reading of the bill, and see whether we can perfect it by amendment to that particular part. If reasonable suggestions or amendments are offered, the committee may agree to adopt them, but it is highly unfair at the outset of the reading of the bill to try to destroy the whole bill because one Member says, for instance, that the company's right name is not always used in the agreement. This thing has plagued the Congress and has taken up the time of the Congress. It is the obvious thing to do. There is not a board of aldermen in any city who would not merge street railways. There is not a board of aldermen or a legislature in any part of the world that would agree that there ought to be competing public utilities in any municipality. This bill is a fair bill. It does not call upon the Congress to operate the street railways, it calls upon the Congress to outline the matter of operations, leaving it to the agent of the Government, the Public Utilities Commission, to see to it that everything is fair to the people of the District and to the companies. The Bureau of Efficiency has examined the bill and worked upon it, and the committees of the Senate and the House have worked upon it as has the House; and after the consideration that has been given it, it would be highly unfair to destroy the composite work of all of these committees and all of these bureaus, with one fell blow by a motion to strike out the resolving clause. The fair thing to do is to read the bill; and if we do not like parts of it, then try to amend those parts. I hope the motion will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to strike out the resolving clause.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 5, noes 34.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of the RECORD, inasmuch as section 1 has not been read, and it is the intention of the amendment that section 1 shall be a preamble, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of section 1 be now dispensed with, and that it be returned to hereafter.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I understand what the gentleman has in mind. I think that we can accept the amendment that the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am not offering an amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we never read any of the preamble. I object.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The point is this: As it now reads, section 1 is not a preamble. The amendment proposes to make it a preamble. I therefore ask that the reading of section 1 as a preamble be deferred until the rest of the bill has been read.

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. The committee has already deferred it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the resolving clause and insert, on line 1, page 22, the words "Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That such," and in line 1, page 22, strike out "Sec. 2. Such."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the word "assembled" will be correctly spelled in line 3, page 22.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. This agreement, hereinbefore set forth, shall be submitted to the stockholders of the Capital Co. and the Washington Co. for their action within six months after its approval by the Congress.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 22, line 15, strike out the figure "3" and insert the figure "2."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That all provisions of law making it incumbent upon any street-railway company to bear the expense of policemen at street-railway crossings and intersections, the laying of new pavement, the making of permanent improvements, renewals, or repairs to the pavement of streets and public bridges, and the permanent improvements, renewals, or repairs to public bridges over which the street-car lines operate, are hereby repealed, such repeal to be effective on the date the unification herein authorized becomes operative: Provided, That the Capital Transit Co. herein provided for shall bear the entire cost of paving, repairs, or replacements incident to track repairs, replacements, or changes made at a time when the street or bridge is not being paved, and shall bear one-fourth the cost of other paving, repaving, or maintenance of paving between its track and for two feet outside the outer rails, and shall bear the excess cost of construction and maintenance of public bridges due to the existence or installation of its tracks on such bridges: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall relieve said Capital Transit Co. from liability for street paving as owner of real estate apart from right of way occupied by its tracks as provided by section 8 of the act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," approved September 1, 1916, as amended to date.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 22, line 19, strike out the figure "4" and insert the figure "3."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, before the committee amendment is put, I have a perfecting amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 23, line 2, after the word "repealed," strike out the comma, insert colon and the following:

"Provided, That the rate of fare for adults shall not exceed 5 cents, as provided in their charters."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, we are giving these railroads valuable rights in this provision of the bill. Both their charters provide that they shall never charge the people of Washington more than 5 cents fare. They have never paid anything for this franchise right. One of our friends from Kentucky a while ago, coming from a small city, told me that his railroad company paid $6,000 a year for its franchise as a street railway, and they paved all between the tracks and for 18 inches on each side of the outside rails.

They have always done that here, even with the 5-cent fare provision in the charter. We are relieving them of all this paving, we are relieving them of all this repair of bridges, we are relieving them of the traffic policemen which they have always maintained at a cost running up into the thousands every year. Should we not hold them to their charter provisions? Do you not think we ought to make them comply with the contract that they executed when they got this valuable charter from the people of the District of Columbia? They are handling such of the 70,000 Government employees in Washington every day who ride on street cars. Let us hold them to their charters.

Mr. McLEOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. McLEOD. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that these companies are now earning less than 3 per cent?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I heard those figures that the railway company sent to the gentleman from West Virginia to read. But that is on watered stock.

Mr. McLEOD. No one sent them to me.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from West Virginia, back in 1925 and 1926, when the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT], and myself were trying to get them to go back to their charter rights, then read figures for the railway companies. He is the man we had to fight. He is still the man we have to fight on the floor.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I do not yield.

I have called the gentleman down so many times it is shameful. He is the one we had to fight all the way through, and we are still having him to fight. That is nothing new here. I had to call him down every day when we were trying to get rights for the people, and we ought to see to it that they go back to their charter provisions if we are going to relieve them of all these responsibilities.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. FOSS. If the 5-cent fare is a charter provision, why are they charging more now?

Mr. BLANTON. Because they are getting by this Public Utilities Commission here. There is always somebody friendly to them that protects them.

Mr. PALMISANO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. PALMISANO. As an attorney, wanting to protect the people, as the gentleman is always claiming, why not have an injunction filed against them?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, who is going to pay for that? I have paid out a lot of money in trying to protect the people. I paid a lot of money the other day to have Resolution No. 355 printed so that I could get it before the Members of Congress. I do that all the time; but who is going to take the lead in getting out an injunction?

Mr. PALMISANO. But is it not true that the gentleman knows he would get nowhere, and for that reason he has not done it?

Mr. BLANTON. I know that we forced the 3-cent car fare for the little children, and they have not stopped us yet by injunction.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. BOWMAN. Where is the 3-cent car fare now? It is in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLANTON. But it is still in force and effect. Oh, the gentleman is not in favor of that either?

Mr. BOWMAN. I am in favor of it and I voted for it, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Why does not the gentleman from West Virginia help us instead of trying to hamstring us when we want to get something satisfactory?

Mr. BOWMAN. In voting for this merger let me say that I am doing more for the District than the gentleman from Texas.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman from West Virginia has always helped us.

Mr. BLANTON. I am speaking of the years before the lady recently became chairman of the committee. He did not help us. He did not help the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON] and myself when we worked on that committee. He did not help the gentleman from Kentucky, Judge GILBERT, and myself when we were after Commissioner Fenning.

Mrs. NORTON. That depends entirely upon the point of view of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. My point of view was for the people. The point of view of the gentleman from West Virginia has always been reading figures that the railway companies sent him. He admitted that.

Mr. BLACK. He was right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I was reading the people's figures. The gentleman from West Virginia was reading the railway companies'.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman is not germane. It is entirely a fare-regulatory provision, and this is simply a permissive bill, allowing the two companies to merge.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think it is certainly germane to this bill, but it may probably be necessary to offer it as a new paragraph. This is a reorganization of the railway companies, providing for a merger. It refers back to both of their charters. Their charter provides a regular 5-cent fare. I will offer it again later on as a new paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. THOMASON). In the opinion of the Chair the amendment might be germane if offered as a new section.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer it as a new section.

The CHAIRMAN. But this, however, is dealing with expenses incident to the maintaining of policemen and paving of intersections.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer it as a new section at the end of that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I offer it as a new section at the end of the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against it being offered as a new section, because I desire to offer a perfecting amendment to the present section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 22, line 19, strike out the figure "4" and insert the figure "3."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 23, line 8, strike out "one-fourth" and insert in lieu thereof "three-fourths."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, for years there has been a question as to whether it was proper to require the street-car companies here to maintain crossing policemen. I am not attempting to contest the position of the committee in recommending the repeal of that provision, although the District Commissioners do criticize rather strongly the repeal of that provision, calling attention to the fact that it will cost the District $100,000. There was some reason for originally placing that burden upon the street-car companies, because of the peculiar character of operation, namely, that of having the street-car systems operated by conduits and not by trolleys. Bear in mind the fact that policemen are not maintained except at crossings where the existing street-car companies cross each other's respective lines. However, I take a firm position against what I consider an outrage upon the people of the District, the taxpayers of the District, in imposing the burden of paving between the tracks upon the District of Columbia. The bill seeks to repeal existing law and only levy a charge of one-fourth of that expense upon the street-car company. Bear in mind the fact that there are many cities—certainly my own city—which require street-car companies to pay for paving between the tracks and 18 inches outside. Why? Because they virtually preempt the use of the streets and more so in the District of Columbia where the character of construction makes the space between the tracks virtually unserviceable for other vehicles. Anyone who has made the barest observation of street-car operation knows that their heavy cars destroy the pavement of the streets. They know it is much more difficult and much more expensive to maintain the pavement between the tracks and 18 inches besides than on the rest of the highway.

We are granting them the exclusive privilege of using a valuable right of way. There is no denying it. Any person who walks the streets of Washington knows that vehicles do not use the right of way between the tracks except occasionally.

I do not want to place an undue burden upon them, but I say it is unfair to only impose on them one-fourth of the cost. We do not exempt railroad companies from the burden of paving when they cross highways; but here, where valuable franchises have been granted, we are proposing to repeal that section of the law which places all of the burden of taxation upon the street-car companies and only compel them to pay one-fourth of the cost, thus adding the burden upon the taxpayers of the District of Columbia. I say we should compel the street-car companies here to bear three-fourths of its cost and only impose a burden of one-fourth on the taxpayers of the District of Columbia.

I want to be fair. I am willing to go along with the committee as far as traffic policemen are concerned, but I say it is no more than fair to the taxpayers of the District of Columbia to compel the street-car companies to bear three-fourths of the cost of paving an exclusive right of way, which the street-car companies use on the streets of Washington. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I think the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin is incorrect when he says that these street-car companies have an exclusive right of way. They have no exclusive right of way. The street-railway companies are now paying for a right of way that belongs to anybody and everybody. Not only their cars but anybody's automobile or trucks can run over their right of way and destroy it.

In the gentleman's own city I understand there was some special arrangement made with the street-railway companies relieving them to a big extent of their burden in respect to paving.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at all. They are bearing the burden in Milwaukee, and always have.

Mr. BLACK. I understand there is an agreement between the city of Milwaukee and the Milwaukee Electric Co.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is to this extent: That those companies must pave between the trackage and 18 inches on the outside.

Mr. BLACK. I understand that was some relief to the companies from the old condition.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; the old condition was that they were obliged to charge a 5-cent fare, but they were granted an indeterminate franchise, one of the conditions being the obligation of paving between the tracks and 18 inches on the outside, and that condition is found in other cities.

Mr. BLACK. All over the country there has been a tendency to relieve street railways of these paving charges. Realizing the value of street railways to their growth, the municipalities have had a tendency to relieve street railways of that condition.

Communities have realized that the original investment in street railways had a great deal to do with the development of municipalities; they have realized that street railways have had a great deal to do with the development of outlying portions of communities; communities have realized that taxable property has been added to their list, and for that reason they have relieved railway companies of these paving charges. If it is right in principle to relieve them of some of the charges, then they ought to be relieved of as much as is possible.

Under this bill they are charged with one-fourth of the cost. They are now paying for paving and improvements that take up about 35 per cent of the highway, but they do not have the exclusive use of 35 per cent of the highway. So they are being relieved of this charge, which is in line with what other communities are doing.

If this merger is successful, it will be in the interest of the car riders of Washington; it will be in the interest of the city of Washington; it will be an economy that will help the city develop; it will result in the railway companies rendering a service that will build up outlying portions of the city, by which a vast taxable area will be added to the city of Washington, and in the long run the taxpayers of the District of Columbia will be benefited by reason of increased real-estate values. That will come about by reason of a better railway system than they now have, and it will be the railway's contribution to the city, more than offsetting the paving charges.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think we should face realities in regard to this trolley business. We all know that the trolley business was originally a horse-car proposition and that between the tracks it was necessary to have quite a different kind of pavement from that which was on the outside of the rails. It was necessary to have soft ground for the horses' feet.

Later on, when the electric trolley arrived, it was better to pave between the tracks, because it was no longer necessary to have soft ground for the horses.

Then came the automobile. Since that time we have used the portion of the highway between the tracks as well as outside, and it is now used by automobiles, trucks, and everything else.

The trolley companies do not have the exclusive right of way, neither do they prevent the use of any part of the street by trucks and automobiles, but they were quite generally required to pave between the rails and for a certain distance outside of the rails. There was a certain fitness in requiring the trolley companies to make the now disused horse path usable for other traffic purposes, but no doubt the chief reason was because the trolley business was rapidly becoming a most profitable business. People went into it and made considerable sums of money at that time, but what has happened recently, since the automobile has come along? We know that trolley cars are rapidly disappearing in this country, and yet they are still necessary to complete our system of transportation. For people who can not afford their own automobiles some means must be provided to come down town in the morning and to return when their day's work is finished.

What we are going to accomplish if we insist upon unreasonable requirements for the trolley companies, is to drive them entirely from our streets, and what will this mean to the working people and to all the poor people of our cities?

We might just as well face the facts, and they are somewhat disturbing, too. Take the statement that the gentleman from West Virginia read showing the decrease in the number of passengers carried and the rapidly diminishing revenues. It shows that the trolley business is going out of existence unless it is accorded fair treatment and recognized as a necessary part of urban transportation systems.

I have no financial interest in trolley companies, but I have great interest in a proper transportation system for the country and in maintaining it for the good of the people. Unless we act sensibly, sanely, and reasonably toward these trolley companies, giving them a fair chance to continue in business, they will be forced sooner or later to go out of existence. They are not making great sums of money now, they are not paying large dividends, many of them paying nothing, and, unfortunately, I fear that they are going to make less as time goes on.

Mr. KELLER. Why?

Mr. TILSON. Because of the automobile, because of the bus, because this is no longer a trolley age. It is an automobile age; but, nevertheless, the trolley-car business is still necessary to complete our transportation system. Let us not destroy it.

Remember that we are no longer striking at big, prosperous, profitable corporations, but are striking at a business that all over this country is struggling for its very existence. In many smaller towns and in some larger ones the trolley companies have ceased to operate entirely. Let us not by our acts help force the Capital City of our country into this category. Let us allow this merger to take place.

I am glad that this committee, under the leadership of the lady from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], has done something that other District Committees for many years have failed to do. She has finally succeeded in bringing to the House a workable bill under which a proper merger can take place for the good of the people of this city, and I hope the measure will be passed.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman from Connecticut yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mrs. NORTON. I would like to observe that the credit for most of the work on the bill goes to my colleague, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. TILSON. Whoever has done it deserves great praise and we ought not to tear the measure to pieces. We ought to pass a reasonable bill that will permit the merger to take place and thus make possible a unified control so necessary for successful operation under present conditions. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word and ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a letter which I have received from the Secretary of War in answer to my inquiry with reference to the Army Transport Service, which is proposed to be abolished under the so-called economy bill which will be considered in the House next Wednesday.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, it is regrettable that in these days of financial stress and unemployment the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States do not use better judgment. Instead of adding to the misery and the depressing situation throughout the country, we should do what we can to relieve it.

We have an Economy Committee which is going to report for your consideration on Wednesday a 69-page bill radically changing many old and vital policies of our Nation. No printed hearings are available so that the Members of the Congress can study the evidence presented to the committee to justify any portion of that bill. Yet, in the name of economy we are asked to allow ourselves to be stampeded and vote for the legislation under a gag rule when the report of the committee on the bill will not even be in the hands of the membership until the morning of the day set for its consideration in the House. The copy of the bill was not even available until to-day, and the bill is to be considered day after to-morrow. What a ridiculous position the membership of this House finds itself in. Is there any Member who is a superman or woman who can fairly claim that they will be able to intelligently vote on this bill under such circumstances? There is not in my opinion; and if the bill is passed, the membership voting to do so will merely rubber stamp the Economy Committee, which itself is divided on most of the bill's features.

Mr. Chairman, this bill changes our whole policy of national defense and provides for the consolidation of the Army and Navy, which was defeated in the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments after long hearings and extensive study in executive sessions. The only witnesses appearing before the Expenditures Committee in favor of the Army and Navy consolidation were two members of the Economy Committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] and the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON]. I suppose in these days of unrest among the foreign nations of the world that if America were to engage in another major conflict we should remove the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and our Army generals and Navy admirals who opposed this bill from the service of the country to join ranks of the unemployed, in the name of economy, and let Mr. WILLIAMSON have charge of the Navy and Mr. BYRNS have charge of the Army operations.

My friends, there is another vicious provision in this bill. It provides for the abolition of the Army and Navy transport service, notwithstanding the fact that the facts indicate that this service is a paying proposition as well as a very necessary arm of our national defense.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. In just a moment.

I have particularly made an investigation of this transport service because I well recollect that in July of 1917, when the outfit with which I served was transported across the sea in a privately owned ship, the Orduna, with the regular transportation charges paid for by the United States Government, that men were loaded down in the hold living on that trip under terrible conditions which were more reprehensible than the conditions on a ship in which reptiles are transported for some of the snake-charmer exhibitions and carnival shows. We were given food on that trip which, if I were to offer it to my dog after he had had nothing to eat for a week, would cause him to bite me. In the name of economy we are asked to subsidize again the private shipping industry to the tune of millions of dollars and to destroy this useful service, this arm of our national defense, which is just as essential as the ammunition we put in our guns in time of war. Then, in the name of economy, we are going to transport our red-blooded American citizens in the Army and naval service of our country to oriental lands, to Honolulu or to Manila and other places in the steerage of ships of private steamship companies and in cattle boats to eat rice and drink tea and live, mingle, and sleep with the orientals of Asiatic nations. This at an additional cost to the taxpayers' Treasury in order to satisfy the greedy private shipping interests, who will purchase the transports at about 20 per cent of their value; and if transactions between them and the Federal Government in the past are an example, most of this purchase price will be loaned without interest by the United States.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

Mrs. NORTON. I object.

Mr. SCHAFER. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, in this bill you direct the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to sell Government property including navy yards. This is no time to sell for a song Government property which is so necessary for our national defense. The Economy Committee might just as well recommend that we sell all the ships and equipment of the Army and Navy, reduce the appropriations for these departments to $1 a year, and if we engage in a future war, hire the Mexican Army and the Chinese Navy to fight the battles of our common country.

In the name of economy we are asked to reduce the Federal employees' salaries and the number of personnel employed by abolishing useful and necessary functions of the Government. If you and your family were on the bank of a raging river which threatened to overflow, would you save the lives of yourself and your family by blowing out a dam in a tributary stream and adding to the water in the river? I do not believe so.

So with reference to this raging river of unemployment, will you blow out the dam and add to the danger of the overflow?

If every State and local government and every business in the Nation and the Federal Government were to follow the policy of cutting of useful functions in order to cut the number of employees, then over half of the citizens of the Nation would be out of a job and unable to get one.

Now, consider this point from the taxpayers' standpoint. We now have over 8,000,000 in the Nation who are unemployed, a great majority of whom are supported by the taxpayers. I ask those who favor reduction of useful activities and resultant cut in personnel from the taxpayers' standpoint whether they favor a policy of relieving the taxpayers in the States, cities, counties, and towns from the burden of caring for the unemployed and their families, including little children. In the name of economy and in the name of the taxpayers, are they to suffer and starve like a wanderer lost on the desert?

Is it not far better from the taxpayers' standpoint to keep the people employed to render useful service to the taxpayers and the Government than to have the taxpayers paying for the care of themselves and families without performing services?

Oh, yes; this Economy Committee has recommended drastic cuts in the name of economy, and the poor old battered Treasury to-day must also be balanced at the expense of the war veterans and their dependents.

Several months ago when hundreds of millions were to be received by that Treasury from our foreign debtor nations which were saved by the service of those veterans, this very Congress, the Senate, and the President said that the Treasury did not need those hundreds of millions of dollars, but now the international bankers, Powder and Ammunition Trust, and war profiteers who drove the country into the war in the name of economy and in the name of the dear old Treasury ask that millions be cut from the benefits of the war veterans. I have in my office propaganda disseminated by the E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co. (Inc.), of Wilmington, Del., to stockholders, employees, and friends urging them to write to Congressmen and Senators asking for reductions in the name of economy and in the name of the dear old Treasury.

Figures indicate that almost the entire amount of the deficit is the result of interest and sinking-fund payments and payments to the veterans, orphans, widows, and dependents of that war.

This Du Pont Powder Trust Co. was one of those who fanned the flame of war and made millions, if not billions, as a result thereof. They now in the name of economy and the Treasury ask to cut millions from the war veterans, who served for a dollar and a dollar and a quarter a day.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. The gentleman is a member of the Expenditures Committee?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. How long were those hearings the gentleman speaks of?

Mr. SCHAFER. We had hearings day after day, and the only witnesses who testified in favor of the bill were Admiral BYRNS and General WILLIAMSON, members of the Economy Committee, and they could not convince the members of the Expenditures Committee that the Army and Navy should be consolidated.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. What was the vote in that committee on that?

Mr. SCHAFER. I could not tell the gentleman exactly.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Was it not about two to one?

Mr. SCHAFER. It was a good vote.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Was there any evidence at all to justify the merger?

Mr. SCHAFER. There was no evidence presented to justify it. In fact, Mr. BYRNS and Mr. WILLIAMSON were the only witnesses in favor of it. This bill gives to one bureaucrat, the Secretary of National Defense, not only the power to eliminate and reduce and consolidate, but the power to create and expand agencies. It undertakes to give one Cabinet officer these vast powers, although Mr. BYRNS, the author of the bill, testified before the committee that he could save $200,000,000 by a consolidation. When I asked him the question as to where he could point out where 10 per cent of that amount could be saved, he admitted that he could not. Certainly if two hundred million could be saved each year, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and a member of the Economy Committee ought to be able to point out whereby 10 per cent of that amount could be saved.

In his testimony Mr. BYRNS indicated that the extravagance of the Army and Navy bureaucracy was responsible for a huge waste of the taxpayers' money, and he sought to cure the situation by adding more bureaucracy and let the new Cabinet officers and the Army and Navy bureaucracy create and expand bureaus without the sanction of the legislative authority, either already enacted or to be enacted in the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SCHAFER. Under leave granted to extend my remarks, I quote from a letter from the Secretary of the Navy under date of April 25, 1932, in response to my inquiry regarding the discontinuation of the Navy Transport Service:

My own frank opinion is that the discontinuance of operation of the naval transportation service would not result in economy. If the naval transportation service were discontinued, it would be necessary to obtain more money for the commercial handling of the services now performed by these ships than their costs of maintenance and operation.

I am convinced that the abolition of the naval transportation service would reduce the effectiveness of the national defense. The reasons for my conviction in this matter are outlined in the following paragraphs.

The troop transports Henderson and Chaumont are needed by the Navy to meet minor peace-time emergencies, to train the marines in expeditionary work, and to develop facilities for transporting and landing expeditionary forces. The present plan of operation accomplished these purposes at a minimum cost to the Government by also utilizing these ships to transport Navy personnel and freight which would otherwise have to be transported by commercial carriers.

In order to meet minor peace-time emergencies it is necessary to maintain at least one transport in full commission in a port of the continental United States. If such a ship were maintained in one locality ready for an emergency, the Government would get no services from her comparable to the returns under the present system of operation. It would be highly expensive. Maintaining two transports enables the Navy to adjust the schedules so that one ship is in Asiatic waters while the other is in United States waters. In this way a ship is always available for a minor peace-time emergency.

The Navy operates the Chaumont and Henderson between the east and west coasts of the United States and the Asiatic station. They serve Guam, a very difficult port to obtain commercial facilities for. They also serve naval interests in Corinto, which port is inadequately served by commercial facilities, and they supplement the services to Port au Prince and Guantanamo.

The Henderson was built and equipped by the Navy as a marine transport. She has been kept up to date and serves as an experimental unit. Her equipment will serve as a basis for the equipment placed in ships commandeered in time of war for troop transports. The question of proper boats for landing forces is one that has been given much attention and is not yet solved to the satisfaction of the Navy. The Henderson has in the past performed and, if maintained in commission, will continue to perform the experimental and development work in connection with the transporting and landing of expeditionary forces. Recently the Henderson engaged in Joint Problem No. 4 with the United States Fleet in their attack on Oahu. She had embarked a regiment of marines. During this same period the Chaumont transported the Thirty-first Infantry to Shanghai. After the arrival of the Chaumont at Shanghai the commander in chief held her in that port for several weeks to provide a means of evacuating American nationals in case the necessity for such should arise. During this period there was imminent danger that the Japanese and Chinese, then engaged in a major battle, might overrun the International Settlement. Such services might, of course, have been provided by commercial ships, but only at a very high cost. In our table of costs we have not included any charge for demurrage. We included merely those costs of transportation of cargo and passengers from point to point. In the case of both the Henderson on expeditionary duty to Honolulu and the Chaumont on emergency duty at Shanghai, the demurrage and special equipment cost would undoubtedly have run into very large figures.

In 1927 the Henderson, loaded with marines, was held in the harbor of Shanghai for several months with the marines on board. The conditions at Shanghai at that time were such that it was inadvisable to land the marines, but their presence in the port was considered necessary. During the same period the Chaumont was engaged in duty in Nicaragua. Additional marines were needed in China and it became necessary to charter the steamship President Grant. The Grant transported the marines from San Francisco to Manila. In order to save demurrage charges they were landed immediately at Olongapo. Later they were taken to China in Navy transports.

If the Navy is forced to discontinue the operation of the Chaumont and Henderson, the Secretary of the Navy, in order to accomplish the purpose set forth above, must be given sufficient operational control over commercial ships of the United States to accomplish the same results. The navies of other maritime powers who do not operate naval transport services are given such control over their merchant marine facilities.

If the Chaumont and Henderson are decommissioned, it will be necessary to increase the appropriations for the transporting of personnel and cargo by at least the amount of the total earnings of these two vessels, as shown in the statement attached.

At the present time the Chaumont and Henderson have their schedules so adjusted that they will be available to transport to and from Nicaragua naval personnel required to supervise the Nicaragua national elections during the summer and fall of 1932.

The Kittery is a small cargo vessel which has been utilized to supply Guantanamo and the marines stationed in the West Indies. She is admirably suited for this purpose, as she is of shallow draft, able to get into small harbors. It is improbable that the need for the services which she is performing will decrease to a point much less than they are at present. On the contrary, changing political conditions in the West Indies may greatly increase the demands made upon her. In addition to supplying these marine forces, she is available for various odd jobs. During the past year the State Department has requested, on two different occasions, her services to repatriate Porto Ricans and Virgin Islanders who were destitute in Cuba. These destitute nationals of ours were the potential source of trouble, and some 300 were transported on each trip that the Kittery made from Santiago to San Juan and St. Thomas. Commercial facilities might afford the services now performed by the Kittery, but it is doubtful if there would be much saving in cost, and the flexibility of such service would be impaired.

The Vega and Sirius are two cargo vessels which operate between the east and west coasts of the United States. Their primary purpose is to transport turrets for 8-inch cruisers from the point of manufacture to the yard where the ships are building, and to transport 16-inch and 14-inch guns which have to be or have been relined from the Washington Navy Yard to the overhaul yard of the battleships. Incidently these ships transport other naval cargo.

The President has directed the detail of one ship to make an annual voyage from Seattle to Dutch Harbor and the Pribilof Islands. This voyage is for the purpose of transporting supplies, building material, and fuel to these outlying stations. A full cargo is generally supplied from the various Government departments which have interests there. All this cargo must be landed in small boats, and the ship designated for this voyage is especially equipped with boats suitable for such work. Commercial facilities could probably be obtained for this trip, but special equipment would be required by the ship making the trip for which the Government would undoubtedly pay. All the services performed by the Vega and Sirius could be performed by commercial shipping. The cost to the Government would probably not be less than it is at the present time and might be considerably more.

The exceptionally heavy weights, 8-inch turrets, one hundred and seventy-odd tons, and the heavy guns are hoisted in and out of the ships by navy-yard cranes especially built for this purpose. The Vega and Sirius themselves have been shored and especially strengthened to carry this weight safely.

The Chaumont, Henderson, Kittery, Vega, and Sirius provide services for outlying naval stations that are not adequately served by commercial lines. It has long been the policy of the Navy Department to foster by every proper means the development of our merchant marine. We have avoided competition with commercial shipping in so far as the efficient supply and development of the fleet and outlying stations permit. Whenever satisfactory service to our outlying stations can be provided, the Navy will curtail its activities to the extent that such commercial services permit. Specifically adequate commercial ocean transportation facilities are lacking in four respects:

(a) Service to Guam; (b) service to Guantanamo; (c) service to Corinto; and (d) United States coast-to-coast transportation of exceptionally heavy weights.

The Navy can not dispense with the services of these five vessels unless some other means are provided to carry out the tasks now performed by these ships, namely:

(1) Handling the transport of troops to meet minor peace-time emergencies.

(2) Adequate commercial service to the Island of Guam and to the ports of the West Indies not now adequately served by commercial lines.

(3) Additional appropriations to provide for commercial transportation of passengers, freight, and demurrage necessitated by the decommissioning of these ships.

To handle the transport of troops to meet minor peace-time emergencies the Navy should be accorded a degree of operational control over vessels of our merchant marine necessary to accomplish this. Such operational control should include the right to commandeer any United States ship to meet a minor peace-time emergency; it should also include the right to demand that selected steamship lines maintain at selected ports the equipment necessary to expeditiously equip vessels of their lines to perform transport duty.

Costs of operation and maintenance—Estimated earnings

Vessel	Costs of operation	Earnings	Net earnings	Net loss	Year
Chaumont	$694,425.66	$406,217.96		$288,207.70	1927
Do	663,954.01	411,772.24		252,181.77	1928
Do	753,063.96	533,575.79		219,488.17	1929
Do	778,769.36	1,079,853.30	$301,083.94		1930
Do	761,633.71	1,205,775.30	444,141.59		1931
Henderson	745,729.62	311,640.43		434,089.19	1927
Do	791,904.94	351,147.70		440,757.24	1928
Do	711,644.55	531,033.94		180,555.61	1929
Do	866,563.22	836,561.82		30,006.40	1930
Do	745,613.44	716,705.27		28,908.17	1931
Kittery	289,998.84	340,579.71	41,580.87		1927
Do	295,678.19	346,515.77	50,837.58		1928
Do	302,706.23	375,582.35	72,876.12		1929
Do	303,578.48	375,066.20	71,487.72		1930
Do	287,817.84	272,021.17		15,796.67	1931
Sirius	279,921.50	365,694.26	85,772.76		1927
Do	286,185.10	339,684.98	53,499.88		1928
Do	324,411.79	441,006.83	116,595.04		1929
Do	308,159.45	413,880.71	105,721.26		1930
Do	286,542.74	283,644.54		2,898.20	1931
Vega	305,702.69	389,387.48	83,684.79		1927
Do	285,483.18	436,215.07	150,731.89		1928
Do	262,711.19	404,506.56	141,795.37		1929
Do	277,100.02	343,161.74	66,055.72		1930
Do	309,281.81	318,555.48	9,273.67		1931

NOTE.—In this statement of cost of operation and earnings no demurrage charge is included. During the present year the U. S. S. Chaumont was held at Shanghai and the Henderson was engaged in expeditionary duty with the fleet in Hawaii. In both cases the demurrage charge would represent a very large figure.

I now quote from a letter from the Secretary of War under date of April 21, 1932, in response to my inquiry regarding the discontinuation of the Army Transport Service:

Replying to your inquiry regarding the abolition of the Army Transport Service, your questions are answered categorically as follows:

The total operating cost of the Army Transport Service for the past five fiscal years amounted to $19,812,493, while the cost to have handled the same personnel and freight commercially would have been $34,550,101.02.

For your information there is attached a statement showing the cost of the Army Transport Service as compared with the commercial cost over a period of 25 years, marked "Exhibit A," and a detailed statement showing the cost of operation of the Transport Service for the fiscal year 1931 as compared with the cost of handling the same business commercially, marked "Exhibit B."

In no case has the War Department appropriation for the Army Transport Service been reimbursed from appropriations available for the Senate and House of Representatives.

The quotations received by the Army for the shipment of animals via commercial lines invariably provide that the Army construct stalls for the animals. The cost of stalls is approximately $40 for each animal shipped, and the stalls must be removed when the animal is delivered at destination.

Animals can be shipped at much less cost on Army transports, as the same set of stalls can be used year after year. For instance, stalls constructed on the transport Meigs in 1922 are still in use, and the average cost per animal shipped in those stalls is now approximately $3.

In my opinion the discontinuance of the Army Transport Service would be done decidedly at the expense of reducing the efficiency of national defense, and would not result in economy, but would increase the cost of transportation of personnel, animals, and supplies for the Army stationed outside of the United States.

While the War Department fully recognizes the necessity for the development of an American merchant marine, it at the same time recognizes the danger that lies in giving serious consideration to legislation of the character proposed, as by so doing it would be permitting the presumed necessities of the moment to mislead others into errors of judgment involving the national defense. A merchant marine for this country must not be developed at the expense of the efficiency of the Military Establishment.

That a transfer of the activities of the Army Transport Service to commercial interests will benefit those interests is admitted, but the difference between the cost involved in Army transport operation and the commercial costs constitutes nothing short of a subsidy. If it is the view of Congress that a ship subsidy is the proper remedy for the relief of those commercial lines so anxious to eliminate the transports from the equation at this time, it would be far better in the interest of the Military Establishment that the savings, or such portion thereof as may be considered necessary, made in the Army transport operation be appropriated direct for relief purposes of these lines. Under the present ratings the savings shown in favor of the Army Transport Service represent the profit that would accrue to commercial interests by taking over this work.

The Army Transport Service is an integral part of the Military Establishment and must, therefore, be maintained and continued the same as any other essential activity or branch thereof. Any other conception of this, or any other essentially military activity, strikes at the very root of the efficiency of the Military Establishment of this country and the purpose for which it exists.

The War Department is not without experience in the transportation of troops and supplies by commercial carriers and is fully advised as to the facilities afforded in the past and that can be afforded it now—both in peace and war. It is because of the inadequate facilities for the accommodation of troops in time of peace and the limited space for Government cargo which can be offered by commercial carriers under normal conditions that those charged with responsibility for Army overseas transportation have long since been convinced that, as long as overseas garrisons are maintained, the Army Transport Service must be continued. The operation of this service is based upon a program covering the change of stations of officers and of enlisted personnel, so far as can be anticipated, coupled with any emergency movement of troops that may arise. The necessity for the maintenance of a flexible military service of this character would seem to require no emphasis at this time.

It would seem to be unnecessary to dwell upon the fact that the maintenance of this essential military activity has enabled the War Department to meet emergencies in Porto Rico, Cuba, Mexico, Central America, China, and Japan; that it constitutes an invaluable means of training for war; and that, with one-third of our Regular Army now stationed outside the continental limits of the United States, the maintenance of a military controlled and operated sea transportation is an element essential to the effective and efficient control of the Military Establishment in peace and a necessity as a nucleus for expansion in war.

Congress has always evidenced interest in the maintenance of the Army Transport Service and has expressed itself at least twice by legislation favoring its continued operation. I refer you to the act of March 2, 1903 (32 Stat. 939), and the act of March 2, 1905 (33 Stat. 837), wherein Congress prohibits the sale or disposition of any vessel of the Army Transport Service without its consent.

Another point in connection with this activity which I wish to bring to your attention is that commercial carriers can not furnish satisfactory accommodations for the enlisted personnel. This service requires an extensive ventilating system below decks, ample bathing and lavatory facilities, food of the standard of the Army ration, and hospital facilities sufficient not only to care for those en route but also to evacuate sick and wounded from overseas stations. No commercial steamer operated solely for profit can provide such facilities.

Furthermore, if transported on commercial vessels the Government would be compelled in the Atlantic and Pacific service to provide steerage accommodations for its soldiers, and, as is well known, the third class or steerage passengers carried by commercial liners in the trans-Pacific service consist only of the lower class of Asiatics. The Government can not afford the expense of transporting enlisted men of the troop class in other than troop or third class quarters, and this class of quarters correspond to the ordinary steerage on all commercial lines. In the event of the transportation on a commercial liner of a limited number of enlisted men of the troop class, the War Department would find itself in the position of mixing American soldiers among Asiatics in order to obtain accommodations at a reasonable rate going to and returning from garrisons in the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippine Islands, and China. The American people would not tolerate a situation in which enlisted men of the Army would be subjected to such treatment, and the War Department can not too strongly emphasize its position against such practice. Commercial ships are not adapted to the transportation of Army troops or cargo.

Extensive hearings were held before the Subcommittee of the Military Affairs Committee, House of Representatives, in charge of the War Department appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1933, in connection with the operation of the Army Transport Service, in which the necessity therefor and the cost of operation were fully brought out. The printed record of these hearings before the subcommittee are not available to the War Department, but it is suggested that they be obtained by you for your information in connection with the consideration of this subject.

It is desired to take this opportunity to emphasize the following facts which have been in the past and can now be established, showing definitely the necessity for the retention of the Army transport service as an agency of the War Department for the transportation of troops and supplies:

The Army transport service is an integral part of the Military Establishment and, therefore, should be maintained under Army control, the same as any other essential branch of the Military Establishment.

The transport service contributes vitally to the morale, economy, and efficiency of the Military Establishment. Its discontinuance would strike a serious blow at the morale of the Army, which could not hope to have otherwise the transportation facilities it now enjoys under our present well-tried system. Commercial lines are not equipped to transfer the Army sick and insane from outlying stations to the United States.

The cost of transportation by the Army transport service is far more economical than if the same work were performed by commercial lines. The discontinuance of the Army transport service would involve an increase in the appropriation for Army transportation of between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 annually.

The War Department is not in any way opposed to the protection and upbuilding of a powerful merchant marine; however, it does object to charging any part of such cost direct or indirect to the War Department appropriations.

The Army transport service is not a competitor of commercial lines in ordinary commercial traffic, as it confines its activities solely to transportation concerning the Military Establishment and Government officials. Each year a considerable sum is saved to the Government through the transportation on Government business of Members of Congress, officials of the insular possessions, Navy, and Marine Corps, and of the Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Justice, etc.

The Army transports are run in close cooperation with the Navy and other Government departments, thereby effecting a substantial saving in the transportation costs of those departments.

During periods of depression in the past, commercial shipping interests have endeavored to secure the discontinuance of the Army transport service. In normal times it is generally admitted that commercially owned and operated vessels can not meet the special requirements for commercial transportation and at the same time provide adequate facilities to serve the Military Establishment.

A small fleet of Army transports especially equipped for military transportation is necessary to meet military emergencies in peace and as a nucleus for expansion in case of war.

The Military Establishment should not be dependent upon any agency not subject to complete control of the Secretary of War.

From the above I feel I need not emphasize the fact that the War Department vigorously opposes any steps that may be contemplated which will lead to the abolishment of the Army transport service and will result in an increased appropriation for this purpose, as indicated above. Such action would be not only uneconomic but subservient to the morale of the enlisted man, unwise from the viewpoint of national defense, and otherwise contrary to the public interests. The War Department is also opposed to any action looking to the impairment of this valuable and essential element of the Military Establishment.

Comparison of Army transport costs and commercial costs—Statement showing operating cost of Army transports as compared with the value of the work performed at lowest commercial rates

Fiscal year	Expense of transports	Lowest commercial rates
1903	$1,752,560.46	$4,000,999.90
1904	3,074,024.08	3,472,260.58
1905	1,580,154.12	3,092,691.70
1906	2,221,719.19	3,276,861.12
1907	2,639,570.99	2,079,720.90
1908	2,819,141.69	3,692,328.41
1909	2,499,467.56	2,840,365.87
1910	1,872,396.36	2,779,396.36
1911	1,750,637.44	2,720,304.97
1912	1,596,842.57	3,011,522.61
1913	1,728,038.51	1,978,747.37
1914	2,083,383.67	2,385,414.44
1915	2,155,241.22	3,404,657.27
1916	2,079,796.64	3,678,303.17
1921	3,801,978.00	4,528,491.00
1922	4,089,086.38	11,293,782.71
1923	3,281,279.30	7,098,148.62
1924	3,320,417.00	6,283,945.68
1925	3,581,241.92	7,011,954.85
1926	3,194,316.30	6,275,860.79
1927	3,742,087.46	6,086,638.45
1928	4,144,173.74	6,753,610.46
1929	4,121,461.63	6,832,733.77
1930	3,966,186.59	7,473,321.18
1931	3,838,583.58	7,403,797.16
Total	70,933,786.40	119,455,859.34

Original cost of transports purchased by the War Department, $7,760,694.

It will be noted that there were no records of comparison kept during the period of Spanish-American War and Philippine campaigns until fiscal year 1903 and during World War period 1917 to 1920, inclusive.

Original cost of transports	$7,760,694.00
Operation during 25 years	70,933,796.40
Total cost to Government appropriations	78,694,480.40
Total cost shipping same on commercial vessels	119,455,859.34
Savings to Government appropriations	40,761,378.94

Actual expenditures account Army transport service, fiscal year 1931

Purpose	Appropriation chargeable
	Army transportation	Subsistence	Clothing and equipment	Pay
1. Maintenance of equipment, repairs to transports	$741,486.51
2. Maintenance of terminals:
Maintenance and repairs of property	11,646.63
Cleaning and repairs to piers	11,299.15
4. Operation of vessels:
Fuel	529,374.89
Water	7,976.93
Lubricating oil	8,128.00
Quartermaster supplies	236,569.78
Subsistence		$545,946.05
Laundry	5,947.76		$50,903.88
Pilotage	30,475.10

Actual expenditures account Army transport service, fiscal year 1931—Continued

Purpose	Appropriation chargeable
	Army transportation	Subsistence	Clothing and equipment	Pay
4. Operation of vessels—Con.
Wharfage	$12,826.90
Cleaning and painting	7,708.43
Miscellaneous	23,903.28
Salaries—
Officers				$79,851.05
Enlisted men				40,163.39
Ship's officers and crews	800,066.04
5. Operation of terminals:
Stevedoring	251,563.74
Civil employees	236,460.77
Wharfage	377.50
Supplies	8,574.30
Heat, light, water, and telephone	5,003.01
Harbor craft	12,272.77
Salaries—
Officers				48,099.94
Enlisted men				3,517.14
7. General expense, miscellaneous	403.92
8. Charter expenses, towage	9,684.38
Total expenditures, 1931	3,008,087.75	$545,946.05	$50,903.88	171,631.52
Collected from passengers		140,174.55
Actual cost to each appropriation	3,008,087.75	405,771.50	50,903.88	171,631.52
Total cost to Government for operating Army transports, 1931				3,636,395.65

Work performed by Army Transport Service, fiscal year 1931

Passengers transported under orders	45,673
Passengers transported not under orders	4,749
Cubic tons cargo carried	218,662
Pounds mail transported	590,372
Number of remains transported	185
Number of animals transported	883

The cost of the Army Transport Service as stated above includes certain expenses that would not be eliminated if the transportation of personnel and supplies were handled by commercial ships, namely:

Salaries of officers and enlisted men	$171,631.52
Shore establishments maintained at Porto Rico, Panama, Honolulu, Chinwangtao, Nagasaki, and Manila	77,969.73
Stevedoring at Porto Rico, Panama, Honolulu, Chinwangtao, and Manila	96,807.10

Therefore, these items, totaling $346,408.35, should be deducted from the cost of operating the Army Transport Service or added to the cost of shipping commercially in order to arrive at a cost which may be compared with the commercial cost of handling the same number of personnel and supplies by commercial ships for the same period.

The Army Transport movements for 1931 would have cost commercially, according to statement shipping interests to the committee:

45,673 passengers	$3,846,096.39
218,662 tons freight	2,045,806.00
		$5,891,902.39
Adding continuing expenses at outports included in Army Transport Service expense		346,408.35
Making total cost to appropriation Army transportation for commercial shipment		6,238,310.74

To compare the commercial cost as above with the cost of Army Transport Service, the committee desires added interest and depreciation:

Cost Army Transport Service, 1931	$3,636,395.65
Depreciation	468,264.24
Interest	561,917.09
Cost Army Transport Service plus estimated interest and depreciation	4,666,576.93
Cost commercially	6,238,310.74

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin by striking out the words "three-fourths" and insert in lieu thereof "one-half."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GILBERT to the amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Strike out the words "three-fourths" and insert in lieu thereof the words "one-half."

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Chairman, I feel that this bill transfers from the street-car companies to the taxpayers of the District two substantial burdens. One of them is traffic policemen. As a matter of governmental uniformity that ought to be done, regardless of price. A traffic policeman is a public servant and should represent the public, not a private corporation. If an accident should happen at a crossing and the officer is paid by the street-car company, the street-car company would seldom be to blame, but the item transferring from the street-car companies to the public this paving cost I think grants too much. In recognition of what the gentleman from Connecticut has said it is not right, as did the old charters, to provide for the entire cost, which exists in many cities, but the street-car companies do have a greater right to the streets in their tracks than the general public. I differ with my friend in that. They have almost exclusive right except in case of heavy traffic to these streets. The vehicular traffic remains on each side. I think a fair proportion of this cost would be one-half to the street-car company and one-half to the public.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 23, after line 21, add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 4. The new company shall not charge adults more than 5 cents as is required by the charters of the present companies."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. No competitive transportation line shall be established without the prior issuance of a certificate by the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia to the effect that the competitive line is necessary for the convenience of the public.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 22, page 23, strike out the figure "5" and insert the figure "4" and insert in lieu of the word "transportation" the words "street railway or bus."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. One can generally tell that there is some viciousness in the bill by the manner in which it is handled. Here is a bill that ought not to pass the Congress. We have had the statement on the floor to-day that this has been under consideration for 30 years. Well, if this has been a bad bill for 30 years, it is a mighty bad bill now. People ought not to come in here with these tactics and cut off debate in order to pass a bill. A minute ago there was a proposition in the bill to make the taxpayers of this city pay three-fourths of the paving on the inside of the tracks, and for 2 feet on the outside, when this gigantic corporation that owns that privilege, worth multiplied millions of dollars, ought to be helping to run this Government. That is not all the viciousness in the bill. The worst part of the bill is not the consolidation of the two street-railway systems. That is not all the viciousness in the bill. The trouble with this bill is that you seek to make a monopoly out of the bus lines in this city, a thing that ought not to be done with any corporation or individual.

Competition is the life of trade, and competition is protection to the public. This bill takes that away from anybody else in this city unless he can convince the commission that it is a necessity for somebody to come here and enter into competition.

Mr. Chairman, this bill ought to be defeated. I would not vote a while ago with the gentleman from Texas, to strike out the enacting clause, because I wanted you to have a chance to have the bill considered, but this is a bill that ought not to pass this House. We have had correct judgment for 30 years and have refused to pass it. We have kept out of this for that time and let us continue to do so.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLOVER. Not now. The lady would not yield to me a moment ago, and I have only five minutes of time.

Mr. McLEOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLOVER. Not now. This bill carries enough poison in it that they want to put it over in the manner sought this afternoon by moving the previous question. Where is the man who would dare say it is right for the citizenship of this city to help bear the expense of keeping up this railroad track? Not only the keeping up of its tracks and 2 feet on each side of it, but they are violating their franchise and they have doubled the charge for carrying passengers from 5 to 10 cents. The statement was given by the gentleman from Texas a moment ago how this stock has climbed from a small sum to nearly $500 per share. That shows what it is worth. They are not satisfied with the greed they have enjoyed, they are not satisfied with the leechhold that they have now, but they want more and they want to cut out further competition in this city, forever to the detriment of the public.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. LAGUARDIA: On page 24, line 2, after the word "public," insert the following: "The transportation of passengers by street railway and bus for the purposes of this resolution shall be construed to mean bus or railway transportation over a given route on a fixed schedule, taking and discharging passengers between terminals."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, complaint has been made that this bill would eliminate a business that has been established in the District, known as the sight-seeing bus business. I am informed that there is quite an investment of capital in this well-established business. It would seem that if this generous franchise were given to these companies under the merger, it would hardly be fair to give them an absolute monopoly over all transportation business. The sight-seeing bus business, after all, is not generally within the contemplation of the franchise for street railways.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman is anxious that the companies that are now operating their busses from point to point will not be driven out of business?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Exactly.

Mr. BLACK. But the gentleman's amendment provides "for the purpose of this resolution." The gentleman means "for the purpose of this section," does he not, so that they will not have to apply for a certificate?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, the amendment would not require the busses engaged in the sight-seeing business to obtain a certificate of necessity and convenience and would not give the merger a monopoly in the sight-seeing business.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I read the gentleman's proposed amendment it would compel the existing companies to maintain bus service as now existing?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. It means simply this, if I may explain. The resolution includes bus lines, and this would describe what is meant by a "bus line." It would mean a bus running over a regular route, and would not embrace the sight-seeing busses. In other words, I am trying to prevent giving this company a monopoly on all transportation in the city.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the sight-seeing busses make exorbitant profits now from the people who come to this city?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Well, if that is so, that should be regulated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why should not the street-car companies be given that privilege? If the rates which are charged are reasonable, then wherein should we criticize? We are past the period of competition with public utilities. That is water that has gone over the dam.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin I would say that after all the resolution would create a monopoly on street transportation in this new company. Very well. That being so, I do not think it is fair to embrace everything that runs on wheels, and the sight-seeing bus business, being an established business in this city, it would seem to me that something ought to be left for some one else beside this company.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I yield.

Mr. BOWMAN. Who has an established sight-seeing bus business? There is not a company outside of the street-car companies that has as many busses as the street-car companies. The street-car company twice daily, between 8 and 9 o'clock in the morning and between 4.30 and 5.30 in the afternoon, must put all of its busses into operation for the transportation of passengers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman has said that all the busses are owned by this company. I am informed that at present there are eight sight-seeing bus companies operating in the city of Washington, organized for that purpose exclusively. They have a combined invested capital of between $750,000 and $1,000,000, represented primarily by busses.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Certainly.

Mr. BOWMAN. The organized bus companies that are operating in the District of Columbia are not able to take care of the people who come here for the purpose of sight-seeing—making trips to Mount Vernon, and so forth. When an educational association or some other large association comes here there is only one place where they can go to get a contract for the transportation of those people, as a mass or in a body, and that is to the traction companies, because they have a number of busses there that are lying idle.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. TILSON. Before the gentleman begins his statement will he tell us whether this bill has anything to do with sight-seeing busses and whether the bill does not leave the matter entirely as it is now?

Mr. BLACK. The bill leaves the matter entirely as it is now. The gentleman's amendment would prevent these companies from running what they call chartered busses.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman is correct. My amendment would prevent this merged corporation from operating sight-seeing busses. They could only operate on fixed routes.

Mr. BLACK. This merger is not going through, and will not be acceptable to the company and will not be of any benefit to the people of Washington if the companies are going to be cut off from necessary revenue. That is sure. Some of these amendments are liable to defeat the entire purpose of this merger, although very well meant.

Here is the situation: One of these companies owns busses. It uses these busses mainly for transportation from point to point, fixed points. Very often an organization coming to Washington agrees to charter one of these busses or several of these busses for use over a different route and for sight-seeing purposes. They enter into a contract with these organizations for that purpose.

It would be false economy to say to this merged company, "For a certain portion of the day these busses of yours must stay in a garage; they must not run in order to make some of the necessary overhead and they must not contribute to the success of the merger, but they must stay stagnant in a garage for a portion of the day when they might be used for revenue."

We tried to meet the situation as we saw it, in the interest of the companies and in the interest of the entire people of Washington.

This amendment, although offered by the gentleman from New York for a purpose which he believes is all right, is a destructive amendment to this merger, because it will cut off revenue that belongs to the company that owns these busses. It would cut off revenue that would come to the merged company. It would cut off revenue which would permit the merged company to offer better service and cheaper service generally to the people of Washington.

I believe the committee should be opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PALMISANO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. PALMISANO. As I understand it, at the present time they have that right?

Mr. BLACK. They certainly have.

Mr. McLEOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. McLEOD. Is it not a fact that under the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York the bus companies or sightseeing companies would be prevented in the future from leasing busses for their own sightseeing work?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, no.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that the street-car companies of the District do not now have any legal right to operate busses. This privilege has been granted them by the Public Utilities Commission, but it is very doubtful legally, I have been informed, whether the Public Utilities Commission have the right to grant these companies the right to operate busses. So the status of the street-car companies under this bill, if passed, will be enlarged, and one of these enlarged privileges will be that of operating busses.

It has never been contemplated that the Public Utilities Commission could grant them any greater privilege than the privilege of operating busses as feeders to the street-car systems. This bill goes further than that and permits the street-car companies to go into the general operation of busses for sight-seeing purposes.

There are in the District now eight companies, with an invested capital of about $1,000,000, that are operating busses for sight-seeing purposes. The busses operated cost from $15,000 to $25,000 apiece, and they are as beautiful busses as you can find anywhere. There has never been any complaint as to either their charges or the beauty of the busses operated.

What will be the effect of the passage of this bill with this enlarged privilege? Let me submit to you the situation as it will exist. The peak of the traffic is early in the morning between 8 and 9.30 o'clock, and in the afternoon between 4 and 5.30 o'clock. These are the hours that sight-seeing busses leave the city and return to the city, with the result that if we force away from the independent sight-seeing companies the right to operate busses—and that will be the effect whether it is intended or not—it will put the street-car companies in sole control of the operation of sight-seeing busses.

This will have one of two effects. First, inadequate sight-seeing bus facilities for the District of Columbia, because the street-car companies will change schedules to fix their convenience rather than the traveling public, and inferior equipment, because of the monopoly, or, second, a large amount of useless equipment will be required, which would mean overequipment during the offseason part of the year.

It seems to me the best thing this House can do is to confine the activities of street-car companies to the operation of street-car facilities and let the sight-seeing-bus business be operated by the efficient independent companies that are doing it now and doing it well.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LAGUARDIA) there were—ayes 15, noes 26.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the Capital Traction Co. is hereby authorized and empowered, upon the consummation of the aforesaid unification agreement, to dissolve and to liquidate its assets and make distribution among its stockholders in accordance with said agreement: Provided, That the existing liabilities of the said the Capital Traction Co. and the rights of its creditors shall not be affected thereby, and that such creditors shall have, as to the said Capital Transit Co., upon the transfer of property to it as provided in said agreement, all rights and remedies which they may then have as to the Capital Traction Co.: Provided further, That no action or proceedings to which the Capital Traction Co. is a party shall abate in consequence thereof, but the same may be continued in the name of the party by or against which the same was begun, unless the court in which said action or proceedings are pending shall order the Capital Transit Co. to be substituted in its place and stead: And provided further, That the fact of such dissolution in accordance with this provision shall be published once a week for two successive weeks thereafter in at least two daily newspapers of general circulation published in the city of Washington, D. C.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 24, line 3, strike out the figure "6" and insert the figure "5."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the Washington Railway & Electric Co. is hereby authorized and empowered to retain and hold stocks and bonds as provided in said unification agreement, and to issue from time to time stocks, bonds, and/or other evidences of indebtedness, subject to the approval of the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 25, line 1, strike out the figure "7" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "6."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That in accordance with said unification agreement, the Capital Transit Co. to be created as aforesaid is hereby authorized and empowered to purchase all or any part of the outstanding capital stock of the Washington Rapid Transit Co.; and said company shall be merged or consolidated with the said Capital Transit Co. when and if the Public Utilities Commission shall so require.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 25, line 8, strike out the figure "8" and insert the figure "7."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That nothing contained in this resolution shall be taken as extending or limiting the powers and duties of the Public Utilities Commission except as provided in this resolution and by said unification agreement, and all powers granted by this resolution to the Capital Transit Co. shall be exercised subject to the supervision of and regulation by the Public Utilities Commission as provided by law.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 25, line 16, strike out the figure "9" and insert the figure "8."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. The unification herein provided for shall become effective when but not until agreed upon by vote of more than a majority in amount of the stock of the respective companies and notices to that effect have been filed with the Public Utilities Commission of the District of Columbia within two years from and after the passage of this joint resolution.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 25, line 23, strike out the figure "10" and insert the figure "9."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. Any and all charges to the new company made by any corporation or person holding a majority of the capital stock thereof for any services shall be proved to be fair and reasonable, and only such part of said charges as the Public Utilities Commission, subject to the right of appeal to the courts, may decide to be fair and reasonable shall be considered in the determination of rates.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 26, line 6, strike out the figure "11" and insert the figure "10."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition to the committee amendment.

I wish to inquire of the gentleman who reported the bill the purpose of making this regulatory provision which says that any and all charges made by any corporation holding a majority of the capital stock thereof for any services shall be proved to be fair and reasonable. What is intended to be accomplished by the phraseology of this section?

Mr. BLACK. That is for the purpose of not requiring the new company, before it incurs any charges, while it is in a state of suspense pending final fruition of the merger, to go to the utilities commission and first get permission to spend money for this service or that service. If the commission deems that the charges are reasonable and fair and in the interest of the merger, then they are properly chargeable; if not, they are not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does this refer to the charges that may be made by the Potomac Power Co. to either of these utility companies that are about to be merged?

Mr. BLACK. No; it has nothing to do with that.

Mr. STAFFORD. To whom does it refer?

Mr. BLACK. It refers to any charges that have to be incurred by the new company when they are preparing their program to bring about the complete merger.

Mr. STAFFORD. The language is "for any services" that may be rendered.

Mr. BLACK. That would include legal services, for instance, or engineering expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. It is understood and agreed that nothing herein shall be construed as creating any new rights of franchise to use the streets in the District of Columbia for transportation purposes: Provided, That the new company shall exercise and succeed to all of the property, rights, and franchises of the Capital and the Washington Companies, which they are required herein to vest in the new company, subject, however, to the right of the Public Utilities Commission to order reasonable extension of or abandonment of tracks and facilities.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 26, line 13, strike out the figures "12" and insert "11."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 13. The Washington Railway & Electric Co., if the unification herein provided for shall become effective, shall remain subject to the jurisdiction of the Public Utilities Commission. Any sinking fund held by it shall remain available for the discharge of securities for which it remains liable and which are secured directly or indirectly by any lien on property turned over to the Capital Transit Co.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 26, line 23, strike out "13" and insert "12."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 14. That Congress reserves the power to alter, amend, or repeal this resolution.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out the figure "14" and insert "13."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the preamble has not been read.

Mr. BLANTON. I object to going back to the preamble.

Mr. STAFFORD. No objection can be raised to that. We have been considering it in the proper form, considering the body first and then the preamble is read to confirm the body of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I object to reading the preamble.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the gentleman's objection.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Is it suggested that the preamble has any legislative force at all?

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill is predicated on the preamble. The bill fails of its purpose unless the preamble is incorporated.

Mr. BLACK. The preamble sets forth the matter on which the resolution is contingent. These matters could be set forth in any kind of a public record, but they are put in the bill for the convenience of the House; they have no legislative value except a reference value.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the preamble.

The Clerk began reading the preamble.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, it is a quarter past 5, and I suggest that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-five Members present—not a quorum.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BANKHEAD) there were 53 ayes and 7 noes.

So the committee determined to rise.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. THOMASON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration House Joint Resolution 154 and had come to no resolution thereon.

RATIFYING AMENDMENT TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND AND PROVIDENCE PLANTATIONS,
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,
Providence.

The SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: In accordance with the request of the General Assembly of Rhode Island, I am inclosing herewith a certified copy of a resolution passed at its recent session.

Respectfully,

NORMAN S. CASE, Governor.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., April 23, 1932.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A. D. 1932.

Resolution relative to the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States fixing the commencement of the term for President and Vice President and Members of Congress and fixing the time of the assembly of Congress.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. PARSONS, for three days, on account of attending a funeral.

To Mr. DOWELL, on account of the death of his pastor, Dr. Charles S. Medbury, of Des Moines, Iowa.

To Mr. CHAVEZ, for to-day, on account of illness.

To Mr. THATCHER, for four days, on account of important business.

ECONOMIES IN GOVERNMENT

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Economy, I present to the House the following report from that committee, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama presents a report, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11597; Rept. No. 1126) to effect economies in the National Government.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The bill is referred to the Union Calendar and ordered printed.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the committee have until midnight to-morrow to file a report to accompany the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Is that on the economy legislation?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. And the House is going to have available the report when? We have had no printed hearings, and the report on this far-reaching bill is to be filed at midnight of the day before we are asked to consider it, under the gag rule. I object.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, the report is almost ready. It was not ready to be introduced with the bill to-day; and instead of asking unanimous consent to have until midnight to file the bill and the report, we have reported the bill and asked that we have until midnight to-morrow for the report. I shall ask that we have until noon to-morrow, if that suits the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. That has been the practice always. The committee has always been given the right to file a report later.

Mr. SCHAFER. And we will have only a half day in which to study the consolidation of the Army and the Navy and many other important provisions of the bill. Is that the liberal consideration that the gentleman from Texas talked about the other day?

Mr. BLANTON. That has been the practice all of the time.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair state to the gentleman from Wisconsin and to the Members of the House that the bill will not be printed unless there is some kind of a report accompanying it. Unless this request is granted, or a similar request, the bill will not be available to-morrow. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. SCHAFER. I object.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. SCHAFER. I withhold it, but I want to have a little time in which to study the bill and report.

Mr. McDUFFIE. We want to have the bill available to Members to-morrow, and we would like to have the privilege of filing the report at least by 5 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. When would the report be available to us?

Mr. McDUFFIE. The printed report would be available the next morning.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That would give us only a half a day to consider it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Certainly; but after reading the bill I am sure the gentleman would not want a great deal of the report.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I shall be frank with the gentleman and state that already my mind is made up on the subject.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will we have liberal debate on this bill?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I think so.

The SPEAKER. Let the Chair state that on Wednesday morning there will be a rule for the consideration of the tariff bill. The Chair understands that that will take probably an hour. He has been informed that there will be an hour's debate upon the rule for the consideration of the proposed amendment to the legislative appropriation bill. That rule provides for two hours' debate. If there is a roll call on it, it will probably take the entire day before we can begin to vote on the question of the amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I do not approve of this procedure where we have such radical legislation of great magnitude considered under perhaps a gag rule, without even having printed hearings available and without even having the complete report until the morning of the day the bill will be considered in the House. Since the gentleman indicates that the report is not going to contain very much information, I shall have to allow the gentleman and his so-called Economy Committee to take the responsibility. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

House Resolution 203 (Rept. No. 1127)

Resolved, That after the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order in the consideration of H. R. 11267, the legislative appropriation bill, for the chairman of the Economy Committee, or any member of the Economy Committee acting for him, by direction of that committee, to offer an amendment to said bill, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. On said amendment there shall be two hours of general debate, one-half to be controlled by the chairman of the Economy Committee and one-half by the ranking minority member of that committee. At the termination of such debate the amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill and shall be considered by titles. Each title as it is read shall be open to four amendments, said amendments not being subject to amendment, and no further amendments shall be entertained by the Chair. The provisions of clause 7, Rule XVI, or clause 2, Rule XXI, shall not apply to the substitute amendment offered to Title I of the Economy Committee amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, including the amendment offered by the Economy Committee as amended, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the Economy Committee amendment. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and Economy Committee amendment, including the amendments to the Economy Committee amendment to final passage without intervening motion except two motions to recommit, and such motions to recommit shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the rule provide that the time shall be equally divided between those for and against the resolution?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The rule provides that the control of the time on the discussion of the proposition shall be by the chairman of the committee and the ranking minority member of the committee, but I give the gentleman assurance that the usual arrangement will be made for an equal division of time.

COST OF MAINTENANCE OF HARBORS AND CONNECTING CHANNELS ON THE GREAT LAKES

Mr. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by having inserted in the RECORD certain data with reference to the cost of the maintenance of harbors on the Great Lakes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLTON. Mr. Speaker, in view of the present discussion of the reorganization and consolidation of Government departments, and particularly those suggestions involving the transfer of the rivers and harbors activities of the Corps of Engineers, War Department, to other departments, there is presented herewith interesting data from the Chief of Engineers showing the average cost per ton over the past 5-year period for maintenance of the several harbors on the Great Lakes, including the entire Great Lakes division, and similar figures for representative districts on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts; the first New York district; the Galveston district; and the Portland district. The tabulation also shows the average maintenance cost and the average commerce in tons, on which the average cost of maintenance per ton is based. It is believed a study of the accompanying data will indicate the justification of the various Great Lakes projects listed and the economic manner in which they are being operated.

The figures for the Great Lakes division, comprising all of the districts on the Great Lakes, were prepared for the calendar year 1930; and inasmuch as these are reasonably representative, new tabulation has not been prepared. The commerce on the Great Lakes for 1930 was about 6.6 per cent less than the average commerce for the past five years, so the maintenance cost per ton should be considered in this light.

There has also been prepared a statement showing Great Lakes commerce—a summary of the net average commerce, eliminating all known duplications, for the 5-year period 1926–1930. This amount is arrived at by eliminating from the tonnage shown for each port or connecting channel that commerce which is duplicated in the reports of two or more projects. For example, a shipment from an upper lake port destined for a lower lake port, or vice versa, may be reported on by that port, by the projects for St. Marys River, channels in Lake St. Clair, Detroit River, and by the receiving port. To arrive at the net maintenance cost per ton handled on the Great Lakes system as a whole such duplications have been eliminated in this table. This shows the average net cost per ton to be $0.022 when each cargo is counted but once, in spite of the fact that it is handled at least by 2 projects and often by 4 or 5 projects on the Lakes. It will be noted that the average cost per ton of maintenance, without eliminating such duplications, or the average cost per ton of maintenance of all projects on the Lakes, is $0.0062. On this latter basis the average cost per ton in the first New York district is $0.0022, in the Galveston district $0.0211, and in the Portland district $0.0366.

A further computation made by the Chief of Engineers for harbors in the first New York district, excluding duplications; car-ferry traffic, which in this district is carried on shallow-draft floats; and cargoes in transit, shows for the calendar year 1930 a net commerce of 128,544,854 tons, which, reduced to a maintenance cost per ton, gives an average cost of maintenance per ton of $0.00603, which is to be compared with the cost of $0.022 on the Great Lakes, where the net average commerce, eliminating duplications, for the 5-year period 1926–1930 was 135,241,077.

In this consideration it must be borne in mind that in practically each instance where the average cost per ton of harbors on the Great Lakes appears excessive this is due to the repair and improvement of superstructures during the past five years on old lumber piers and dikes by replacing the original wooden structure down to the water level, and in many cases below that level, with stone and cement structures which will require practically no maintenance in the future. In most instances these are harbors of refuge where the commercial tonnage does not seem to justify the upkeep but where the factor of safety makes it essential.

It must also be kept in mind that in making what are commonly known in the business field as capital expenditures for improvements of a permanent nature replacing obsolete or worn out equipment or improvements, the practice of the War Department is to charge such costs to maintenance. Naturally, where improvements are involved and charged to maintenance the average cost appears excessive as compared to other harbors where the only expenditures made were for dredging.

It may be of interest to note comparative figures on the maintenance cost per ton-mile of commerce hauled on the Great Lakes, and on other inland waterways of the United States. The total ton mileage of commerce on the inland waterways of this country during the calendar year 1930, exclusive of the Great Lakes, was 9,087,513,833. The cost of maintenance, and operating and care of locks and dams during the fiscal year 1931 on these waterways was $15,360,860, or $0.00169 per ton-mile of commerce. The total ton mileage on the Great Lakes alone during the calendar year 1930 was 77,365,558,000. The cost of maintenance during the fiscal year 1931 was $3,874,570, or $0.00005 per ton-mile.

The following are the tabulations referred to:

FIRST NEW YORK DISTRICT

Project	Average cost of maintenance last 5 years	Average commerce last 5 years	Maintenance cost per ton
		Tons
Port Chester Harbor, N. Y.	$4,955	422,737	$0.0117
Mamaroneck Harbor, N. Y.	5,513	337,132	.0164
Echo Bay Harbor, N. Y.	20	93,205	.0002
New Rochelle Harbor, N. Y.	53	160,255	.0003
East Chester Creek, N. Y.	15,272	574,413	.0266
Westchester Creek, N. Y.	1,051	382,789	.0027
Bronx River, N. Y.	5,667	659,653	.0086
Flushing Bay Harbor, N. Y.	11,969	1,651,963	.0072
Hempstead Harbor, N. Y.	7,560	6,901,982	.0011
Huntington Harbor, N. Y.	70	71,106	.0010
Port Jefferson Harbor, N. Y.	300	2,438,986	.0001
Mattituck Harbor, N. Y.	5,040	5,134	.9882
Great South Bay, N. Y.	3,120	36,556	.0852
Browns Creek, N. Y.	4,379	967	4.5284
Jamaica Bay, N. Y.	1,997	1,152,183	.0017
Sheepshead Bay, N. Y.	26	5,126	.0051
New York Harbor, N. Y.	66,860	143,153,455	.0005
Coney Island Channel, N. Y.	26,808	1,055,666	.0254
Bay Ridge and Red Hook Channels, N. Y.	243,952	21,994,512	.0111
Buttermilk Channel, N. Y.	31,459	6,328,221	.0050
Gowanus Creek Channel, N. Y.	32	4,729,033	.000007
East River, N. Y.	8,134	68,292,093	.0001
Wallabout Channel, N. Y.	29	1,942,082	.00001
Newtown Creek, N. Y.	13,906	6,043,488	.0023
Harlem River, N. Y.	18,576	7,548,430	.0025
Hudson River Channel, N. Y.	124,757	71,672,765	.0017
New York Harbor, collection and removal of drift	48,050
Tarrytown Harbor, N. Y.	3,722	309,090	.0120
Peekskill Harbor, N. Y.	3,907	100,497	.0389
Wappinger Creek, N. Y.	1,748	13,649	.1285
Rondout Harbor, N. Y.	430	223,459	.0019
Saugerties Harbor, N. Y.	6,224	38,729	.1608
Hudson River, N. Y.	84,263	3,219,064	.0262
Operating and care of lock and dam at Troy, N. Y.	22,370	2,523,323	.0089
Narrows of Lake Champlain, N. Y. and Vt.	319	120,224	.0027
Burlington Harbor, Vt.	2,977	17,146	.1741
Plattsburg Harbor, N. Y.	110	2,476	.0444
Port Henry Harbor, N. Y.	32	9,655	.0033
Otter Creek, Vt.	110	1,335	.0824
Total	775,767	354,232,579	.0022

GALVESTON DISTRICT

Sabine-Neches Waterway, Tex.	$402,977	57,436,256	$0.007
Johnsons Bayou, La.	2,567	1,254	2.0471
Intracoastal waterway, between Sabine River and Corpus Christi	97,544	732,664	.1331
Galveston Harbor, Tex.	137,939	19,303,324	.0071
Galveston Channel, Tex.	208,903	5,677,945	.0368
Texas City Channel, Tex.	209,104	3,724,980	.0561
Port Bolivar Channel, Tex.	16,070	327,014	.0491
Houston Ship Channel, Tex.	671,969	12,863,280	.0522
Double Bayou, Tex.	2,454	7,165	.3425
Anahuac Channel, Tex.	13,628	31,795	.4286
Turtle Bayou, Tex.	4,574	2,405	1.9058
Mouth of Trinity River, Tex.		17,679
Trinity River, Tex.	7,756	15,762	.4909
Cedar Bayou, Tex.	6,983	100,519	.0695
Clear Creek, Tex.	2,878	51,450	.0559
Dickinson Bayou, Tex.	3,800	108	35.1852
Chocolate Bayou, Tex.		111
Bastrop Bayou, Tex.	2,028
Freeport Harbor, Tex.	81,024	527,925	.1535
Aransas Pass-Corpus Christi Channel, Tex.	192,337	2,925,838	.0657
Pass Cavallo-Port Lavaca Channel	889	28,497	.0312
Guadalupe River to Victoria, Tex.		8,404
Port Aransas, Tex.	162,028	2,195,815	.0738
Brazos Island Harbor, Tex.
Cypress Bayou and Waterway between Jefferson, Tex., and Shreveport, La.	9,654	9,536	1.0124
Total	2,237,106	105,989,726	.0211

PORTLAND DISTRICT

Coquille River, Oreg.	$3,018	47,087	$0.1702
Coos Bay, Oreg.	208,876	997,167	.2095
Coos River, Oreg.	2,485	61,729	.0403
Umpqua River, Oreg.	29,908	15,323	1.9548
Siuslaw River, Oreg.	240	23,814	.0101
Yaquina River, Oreg.		267,232
Yaquina Bay and Harbor, Oreg.	5,505	287,848	.0191
Tillamook Bay and Bar, Oreg.	24,753	147,607	.1671
Columbia River at mouth, Oreg. and Wash.	3,122	6,767,508	.0005
Columbia and lower Willamette Rivers, below Vancouver, Wash., and Portland, Oreg.	375,860	9,761,631	.0385
Clatskanie River, Oreg.	3,383	256,400	.0132
Willamette River above Portland and Yamhill River, Oreg.	60,194	1,721,470	.035
Operating and care, Willamette Falls Canal	30,909	251,334	.123
Operating and care, lock and dam, Yamhill River, Oreg.	2,754	4,720	.5835
Operating and care, Cascades Canal, Oreg.	19,724	58,955	.3343
Operating and care, Dalles-Celilo Canal, Oreg.	17,073
Columbia River and tributaries, above Celilo Falls to Snake River	174
Snake River, Oreg., Wash., and Idaho	$64	22,823	$0.0029
Lewis River, Wash.	26	10,312	.0025
Cowlitz River, Wash.	2,025	819,948	.0025
Skamokawa Creek, Wash.	1,518	104,554	.0145
Grays River, Wash.		45,499
Deep River, Wash.	320	103,595	.0029
Total	796,931	21,781,556	.0366

PORTLAND DISTRICT—continued

Great Lakes commerce

ACTIVE PROJECTS

Project	Average maintenance	Commerce, 1930	Maintenance cost per ton
		Tons
Agate Bay Harbor, Minn.	$1,154	7,203,145	$0.0002
Algoma Harbor, Wis.	3,334	3,123	1.0675
Alpena Harbor, Mich.	1,801	1,734,933	.0010
Ashland Harbor, Wis.	1,311	6,440,944	.0002
Ashtabula Harbor, Ohio	26,802	10,775,744	.0025
Baudette Harbor and River, Minn.	1,717	13,923	.1233
Black River, Mich.	10,933	104,777	.1043
Black Rock Channel and Tonawanda Harbor, N. Y.	101,527	4,367,347	.0234
Buffalo Harbor, N. Y.	98,198	19,382,851	.0051
Calumet Harbor and River, Ill. and Ind.	117,432	11,508,282	.0102
Cape Vincent Harbor, N. Y.	333	5,401	.0616
Charlevoix Harbor, Mich.	17,450	8,800	1.78
Cheboygan Harbor, Mich.	4,038	11,024	.3662
Chicago Harbor, Ill.	128,024	1,601,330	.0799
Chicago River, Ill.	73,380	1,231,803	.0595
Cleveland Harbor, Ohio	101,132	11,950,493	.0085
Conneaut Harbor, Ohio	7,388	10,817,641	.0007
Detroit River, Mich.	13,681	94,155,889	.0001
Duluth-Superior Harbor, Minn. and Wis.	107,972	45,726,085	.0023
Dunkirk Harbor, N. Y.	32,758	16,464	1.988
Erie Harbor, Pa.	48,076	4,594,691	.0105
Fairport Harbor, Ohio	11,141	3,911,844	.0028
Fox River, Wis.	287,567	325,658	.883
Frankfort Harbor, Mich.	9,470	1,449,635	.0065
Grand Haven Harbor and Grand River, Mich.	31,950	1,610,559	.0198
Grand Marais Harbor, Minn.	759	2,599	.2920
Grand Marais Harbor of Refuge, Mich.	16,256	508	32.00
Great Sodus Bay Harbor, N. Y.	19,810	886,737	.0223
Green Bay Harbor, Wis.	14,415	1,809,802	.0078
Harbor Beach Harbor of Refuge at Lake Huron, Mich.	276
Holland Harbor, Mich.	24,170	18,120	1.334
Huron Harbor, Ohio	9,422	1,926,764	.0049
Indiana Harbor, Ind.	22,844	6,505,207	.0035
Kenosha Harbor, Wis.	9,790	33,360	.2903
Kewaunee Harbor, Wis.	14,740	460,186	.0323
Keweenaw Waterway, Mich.	131,908	1,160,234	.1137
Little Sodus Bay Harbor, N. Y.	11,407	17,975	.6346
Lorain Harbor, Ohio	12,907	5,613,734	.0023
Ludington Harbor, Mich.	33,710	2,212,872	.0152
Mackinac Harbor, Mich.	4,747	10,320	.46
Manistee Harbor, Mich.	35,330	86,513	.4084
Manistique Harbor, Mich.	2,446	274,475	.0089
Manitowoc Harbor, Wis.	25,400	1,913,757	.0133
Marquette Bay Harbor of Refuge, Mich.	17,681	2,707,085	.0065
Marquette Harbor, Mich.	4,431	810,191	.0055
Menominee Harbor and River, Mich. and Wis.	16,686	686,078	.0243
Michigan City Harbor, Ind.	47,105	9,202	5.1201
Milwaukee Harbor, Wis.	194,095	7,703,182	.0252
Monroe Harbor, Mich.	3,710
Morristown Harbor, N. Y.	96	1,066	.09
Muskegon Harbor, Mich.	7,360	669,427	.011
Niagara River, N. Y.	398	170,119	.0023
Ogdensburg Harbor, N. Y.	7,659	1,069,552	.0072
Olcott Harbor, N. Y.	8,600
Ontonagon Harbor, Mich.	23,192	28,880	.803
Oswego Harbor, N. Y.	29,897	394,718	.0757
Potoskey Harbor, Mich.	11,360	12,132	.9363
Portage Lake Harbor of Refuge, Mich.	3,600	268	13.4328
Port Clinton Harbor, Ohio		2,078
Port Washington Harbor, Wis.	7,230	12,032	.6008
Racine Harbor, Wis.	11,460	301,462	.038
Rochester (Charlotte) Harbor, N. Y.	17,985	1,096,794	.0164
Rocky River, Ohio	1,166
Rouge River, Mich.	42,354	4,875,927	.0087
Saginaw River, Mich.	71,778	1,110,471	.0646
Channels in Lake St. Clair, Mich.	47,277	81,684,158	.0006
St. Clair River, Mich.	8,041		.0001
St. Joseph Harbor, Mich.	22,410	35,748	.6269
St. Lawrence River, Ogdensburg, N. Y., to Lake Ontario		6,371,704
St. Marys River, Mich.	300,732	72,897,752	.0041
Sandusky Harbor, Ohio	17,643	8,297,563	.0021
Saugatuck Harbor and Kalamazoo River, Mich.	5,054	1,678	3.0019
Sheboygan Harbor, Wis.	26,040	424,876	.0612
South Haven Harbor, Mich.	17,230	21,494	.801
Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal, Wis.	40,826	1,195,648	.0341
Toledo Harbor, Ohio	214,140	19,523,122	.0109
Two Rivers Harbor, Wis.	26,360	23,456	1.1238
Vermilion Harbor, Ohio	1,656	3,136	.528

Great Lakes commerce—Continued

ACTIVE PROJECTS—continued

Project	Average maintenance	Commerce, 1930	Maintenance cost per ton
		Tons
Waddington Harbor, N. Y.	$14,368	150,508	$0.0954
Warroad Harbor and River, Minn.	21,809	6,774	3.2195
Waukegan Harbor, Ill.	45,871	286,625	.16
White Lake Harbor, Mich.	12,540	1,724	7.2737
INACTIVE PROJECTS
Arcadia Harbor, Mich.
Ausable Harbor, Mich.
Belle River, Mich.
Big Creek, Ohio
Black River, N. Y.
Cattaraugus Creek, N. Y.
Cedar River Harbor, Mich.
Clinton River, Mich.
Eagle Harbor, Mich.
Gladstone Harbor, Mich.		60,441
Grasse River, N. Y.
LaPlaisance Bay, Mich.
Maumee River, Ohio
Milwaukee (South) Harbor, Wis.
Minnesota Point at Superior, Wis.
New Buffalo Harbor, Mich.
Oak Orchard Harbor, N. Y.
Oconto Harbor, Wis.		357
Pensaukee Harbor and River, Wis.
Pentwater Harbor, Mich.		29
Pine River, Mich.
Portland Harbor, N. Y.
Port Ontario Harbor, N. Y.
Port Wing Harbor, Wis.	$25
Pultneyville Harbor, N. Y.
Rogers City Harbor, Mich.
Sacketts Harbor, N. Y.		8,400
St. Joseph River, Mich.		33,000
Sandusky River, Ohio
Schawaing Harbor (river), Mich.
Ticonderoga River, N. Y.
Whitehall Harbor, N. Y.
Wilson Harbor, N. Y.
Total	2,978,781	477,703,270	$0.0062
Net average commerce, eliminating all known duplications for 5-year period 1926–1930		135,241,077	.022

OUR PRESENT EMERGENCY AND SUGGESTED REMEDIES

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article and one editorial.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, how extensive is the article and the editorial referred to?

Mr. GARBER. I could not state the exact length of it. It is not a lengthy article. It is a very brief statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will it require more than one page of the RECORD or not?

Mr. GARBER. No; I hardly think it would.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARBER. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, the following letter from one of the leading representative citizens of the Southwest so ably expresses the progressive thought of the country and the constructive remedies for relief that I am exercising the privilege of incorporating it in full that other members may have the benefit of its perusal.

ENID, OKLA., April 20, 1932.

Hon. M. C. GARBER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JUDGE: I have been personally gratified in noting a few vibrant voices in this Congress that are demanding the enactment of a bank-deposit guaranty law. There would be no hoarded-money problems if depositors were insured against loss. I note they are also demanding an international conference to consider the "silver" question, and why not? I am sorry that President Hoover continues to ignore the mandate given him by the Senate last June to call such a conference. "Free coinage" of silver by international agreement is good Republican doctrine, or at least it was good Republican doctrine in 1896, and William McKinley was elected President on that issue at that time. The immortal William Jennings Bryan wanted silver coined free "without the help of any other nation on earth," and of course I think he was right.

Since our country's untoward and, in my judgment, unjustifiable action in destroying the value of silver by adverse legislation, especially since it is exclusively an American product, and since in consequence of this action the value of the money which over half the population of the world uses has been virtually destroyed, and since in consequence of the destruction of one-half the money metal of the world civilization itself seems to be tottering, it seems to me that we ought immediately to retrace our steps, and by remonetizing silver restore bimetallism—the gold and silver coinage of the Constitution. Washington established it. Hamilton and Jefferson concurred in it. Webster and Blaine defended it. What more can be said?

Surely the ruin which the gold-standard sponsors have brought, not only on our own country but on the whole world, ought to bar them from any further surveillance of our monetary affairs.

Any bunch of high-powered financiers, entrusted with the unlimited power to function as ours have been, and who can devise no other remedy for our distresses than by issuing billions of dollars of interest-bearing bonds, ought to be told by this Congress "to go away back and sit down."

Since a measure of inflation is both necessary and inevitable if debtors are ever to be able to discharge their debts, and since the alleged aim of the huge bond issues is to provide this inflation, and since outstanding Government bonds are now selling as low as 90 cents on the dollar, why can not Congress, solely as an emergency measure—a great emergency measure—authorize Secretary of the Treasury Ogden Mills to call in a billion dollars' worth of these discredited bonds and issue in exchange for them non-interest-bearing Treasury notes (currency) and at the same time declare them legal tender for all debts, public and private? This would reduce the national debt a billion dollars instead of increasing it by that sum. It would restore United States bonds to par and give the country the billion dollars in new currency that it needs.

I do not contend that this is the best way, but it is one way, and I believe it would provide instant, if not permanent, relief.

I believe Lincoln would do it if he were President now. In fact, he did do a more rank thing when he had Secretary Chase issue $300,000,000 in "greenbacks," and with which, after declaring them legal tender, he paid the back salaries of the soldiers of the Civil War.

Judge, it seems to me that the overshadowing issue, the issue that eclipses all other issues and without the solution of which all other remedial measures are futile, is a monetary one, and that unless it is solved by this Congress, and solved in the interest of the masses of our people, the present depression is but a mild zephyr compared to the whirlwinds of financial ruin that are destined to stagger the world.

Thousands of the best citizens in the great Southwest are losing their farms, their homes, and, through no fault of their own, the accumulations of a lifetime. Many of these are your neighbors and mine. They are dumb with amazement at the plight in which they find themselves and seem to wonder what it is all about.

Surely this Congress will not seek nor accept advice from the internationally minded financial pirates that have steered our frail monetary craft upon the rocks. It seems to me that it would be a wise policy to find out what they want, then vote against it.

I admire the clarity with which you elucidate every issue engaging the attention of this Congress. I enjoy reading your speeches in the RECORD and thus far have found nothing in them with which I do not agree. Please excuse this long letter.

Always wishing you well,
I am, sincerely yours, EDMUND FRANTZ.

THE SOLDIERS' BONUS

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by placing therein a statement made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] before the Ways and Means Committee this morning on the subject of the soldiers' bonus.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, this morning the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETTENGILL] submitted to the Ways and Means Committee a plan for the payment of the soldiers' bonus. The plan is so able and so constructive as to merit the careful thought of all interested in the solution of this vexing and pressing problem. Under leave granted me I extend it in the RECORD that the Congress and the country may be advised of it.

To the WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE,
House of Representatives.

Re: Soldiers' bonus.

GENTLEMEN: I suggest for your consideration the following plan:

First. At the option of the veteran, let him turn in his adjusted-service certificate.

Second. Less any amount due on loans previously made, ascertain its "present value" at a low rate of interest, say 2 or 3 per cent.

Third. For such present value deliver to the veteran $50 (or possibly $25) coupon bonds, all due in 1945, bearing 2 or 3 per cent interest. I think there should be such an interest differential in ascertaining "present value" and the rate on the bonds so that there will be a pecuniary object in the veteran retaining his adjusted-service certificate until 1945 as a paid-up annuity policy for himself when 13 years older or for the protection of his widow and children if he dies before then.

Fourth. For any odd fraction of the amount of such present value pay him in money (e. g., present value $717.50. Deliver bonds of face value of $700, 14 bonds at $50 par or 28 bonds at $25 par and $17.50 cash).

5. Except for date, maturity, interest rate, etc., these bonds to be practically indistinguishable for the so-called "Baby" Liberty bonds with which the public became familiar during the World War.

6. In order to help maintain a market value close to par on the bonds, I suggest this: The Government has already set up a sinking fund to redeem the adjusted-service certificates in 1945, 13 years from now. Let the Government undertake to purchase in the open market at face value, plus accrued interest, bonds totaling one-thirteenth of the issue each year. I would go further and purchase one-twelfth of such thirteenth every month. While at first, at least, more bonds might be offered than the Government had undertaken to purchase, nevertheless the fact that it is known that the Government is in the market at par would help materially to maintain face value despite the low interest rate. In this connection I call your attention to the plan of the Government to retire at face, on 60 days' notice, the low-interest-rate "antihoarding bonds."

For this plan I suggest that it possesses these advantages:

(a) Its utter simplicity. It does not go outside of established patterns of thought.

(b) It substitutes one obligation of the Government for another—bonds for adjusted-service certificates, both due in 1945, and both to the same creditor, the veteran. It does not increase the total obligation. If the credit of the Government is not impaired by the fact that adjusted-service certificates due in 1945 are outstanding, the substitution of baby bonds for a like amount, and a like maturity, would not seem capable of impairing confidence in the Government.

(c) It does not admit the principle that the Government is paying in advance of 1945 an obligation not due until then. It does not create the dangerous precedent of the Government paying this or other debts by paper money. Nevertheless, the veteran has something for immediate use.

(d) Except for the annual purchase of one-thirteenth of the issue each year, it throws no additional strain on the Government for the immediate future. Even this might be eliminated for the present, as it is suggested primarily to maintain a market substantially at par. Or the Federal reserve banks could purchase them in "open-market" operations, as they are now doing, presenting them to the Treasury for retirement in 1945.

(e) It would relieve distress and bring hope in hundreds of thousands of homes.

(f) Creditors of the veteran—his grocer, his coal man, his merchant, his mortgage holder, his doctor—would accept the bonds as money, and I think in most cases without discount, both because it pays a debt which he is glad to receive and for patriotic reasons also.

(g) It would bring Government credit to the grass roots—to every township in America.

(h) Because these small bonds would pass from hand to hand they would tend to produce a moderate degree of inflation or "reflation," which we all agree is imperative if commodity values are to be turned upward—without which buying, production, and employment will continue from hand to mouth. At the same time such inflation would not tend to get out of hand.

(i) Although these small denominational bonds would pass from debtor to creditor as money, nevertheless, for the very reason that they are not money, they would not cause the psychological shock which I fear would attend any scheme for "fiat" or "printing-press" money. Any such plan (granting its actual soundness for argument's sake) would, I fear, by reason of its intricate machinery, and public unfamiliarity with a new issue of money, tend to destroy confidence in the American paper dollar, and cause a disastrous withdrawal and hoarding of gold, both at home and from abroad. The stump may be a stump, but if the horse thinks it is a bear, the arguments of the driver are wasted. We can not overlook the psychological factor at this time. Confidence in the money of the Government must be maintained at every hazard.

(j) As against procuring money to pay the bonus by a bond issue to the general public, it does not deplete the resources of banks or disturb funds awaiting private investment.

(k) It does not "freeze" nor hypothecate nor segregate existing gold reserves behind currency issues—reserves which we may need to meet foreign withdrawals—or as a basis for credit expansion through the Federal reserve.

(l) Further, it seems to me to be a splendid thing in these critical times to have small Government bonds in the pockets of the people. It ties them to their Government. These bonds would become a visible symbol of our Ship of State as it plunges forward against heavy seas. They would make hundreds of thousands—yes, millions—of people in humble homes all over this broad land interested in preserving the integrity of the National Government against every foe, foreign and domestic. They would interest our people in our problems. They would give support for sound government, for honest government, for frugal government.

In closing I offer this only as a suggestion and with the sole desire to be helpful to the committee in working out a tremendously difficult problem. No doubt it can be improved. I invite your criticism. I realize that serious objections which do not now occur to me may be offered. It, however, seems to me to occupy sound middle ground between no bonus at all and putting the printing presses to work.

SAMUEL B. PETTENGILL, M. C.

JOSEPH HEWES

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, on April 28 there will be unveiled at Edenton, N. C., a monument erected by Congress to the memory of Joseph Hewes, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. Hon. Josephus Daniels has written a very fine editorial on Mr. Hewes, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting that editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, April 28, at Edenton, N. C., there will be unveiled a monument erected by Congress to Joseph Hewes, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and who was also chairman of the committee on marine of the Continental Congress. It was Hewes who commissioned John Paul Jones. Little has been known of Joseph Hewes, and his great contribution to the founding of the Republic, and we are indebted to Hon. Josephus Daniels for a most informative editorial appearing in the Raleigh (N. C.) News and Observer on Sunday, April 24, giving a most interesting account of the work of this great patriot. Under the authority given me, I am inserting this editorial in the RECORD:

JOSEPH HEWES, AN "ANGEL OF HAPPINESS"

"You are the angel of my happiness; since to your friendship I owe my present enjoyment, as well as my future prospects. You more than any other person have labored to place the instruments of success in my hands." (John Paul Jones, writing of Joseph Hewes.)

All roads lead to Edenton this week. The big event in North Carolina occurs there on next Thursday, when the congressional monument erected in Edenton to the memory of Joseph Hewes will be unveiled with appropriate exercises and speeches by distinguished Americans. The event will carry to Edenton many thousand people in response to the hospitable invitation which has been extended by the mayor of Edenton and the Joseph Hewes committee. The Hewes monument will be in historic surroundings, for in and near Edenton lie buried some of the most notable men this State and country have produced. It was said of the port town of Edenton in the early days: "Within its vicinity there was in proportion to its population a greater number of men eminent for ability, virtue, and erudition than in any other part of America." With most of them Joseph Hewes was a contemporary.

Edenton was a small village when it was the home of Joseph Hewes, James Iredell, and Samuel Johnston, to mention only three of the illustrious men of the Hewes era. Iredell was, of course, the leader of the bar, and afterwards in learning gave luster to the bench. Johnston, a natural executive and leader, served his State and country in high station. But to Joseph Hewes came the distinction of distinctions—the opportunity which he embraced of attaching his name to the greatest document that has been signed since Runnymede. Hewes, along with John Penn and William Hooper, attached his name to the Declaration of Independence as representative of the patriotic people of North Carolina. It happened in that case, as in many others, that the men to whom was given the distinction of voicing the fixed will of the people had not all been leaders in the movement culminating in the great event.

Hooper was called by Jefferson "a Tory," not because he had not been patriotic in the war, but because in the formative days of the Republic, Mr. Hooper was an ultra-Federalist and Mr. Jefferson, regarding the two parties in America after the names in England, called the Hamiltonians Tories and the Republican-Democrats Whigs, and his designation, like all transplanted designations, was not always accurate. But in the day when Jefferson, Madison, and Macon were putting the country on the democratic tack, Hooper sided with the Federalists. John Penn was an ardent Jeffersonian. Mr. Hewes, closely associated with Iredell and Johnston, was a conservative man and was slow to believe that the Colonies could win and came to believe in independence only when he lost hope that the British would treat the Colonies fairly, and when he found the people determined upon self-government. It has been suggested that the controlling influence which caused Mr. Hewes to become a champion of independence was the pressure following the historic Edenton tea party. It was attended by 51 women who engaged themselves "not to conform to that pernicious custom of drinking tea, and the aforesaid ladys would not promote ye wear of any manufacture from England until such time that all acts which tend to enslave this our native country shall be repealed." Phillips Russell has written of this incident: "The colonial female of the species being more deadly than the male, and Hewes being a bachelor, it is small wonder that he gave ground, abandoned Quaker tenets, and threw his interests in with the Colonial lot; and was thereafter active in all continental and provincial councils."

The truth is that Joseph Hewes was more of a merchant and mariner than a statesman. He was a man of affairs and property, and feared what might happen if the country cut loose from England. He, however, resolved all these fears in favor of the prevailing opinion and stood with the more ardent and early believers in independence.

For a time these more enthusiastic and forward-looking advocates of breaking all relations with England were doubtful where Hewes would stand, and fearful he would oppose their dream of a free America. They knew that his close personal and political associates were so tied to England that they feared he would not rise to the occasion, voice the prevailing patriotic sentiment of the colony of North Carolina, and make himself immortal. John Adams, a leader in the Continental Congress, gave this picture of the mental stress of Hewes and how he came to see the light and follow it:

"One day while a member was producing arguments to show the general opinion of all the colonies was for independence, and among them North Carolina, Hewes, who had hitherto constantly voted against it, stood suddenly upright and lifting both hands to Heaven cried out, 'It is done and I will abide by it.'"

And Adams further commented, showing how obstinate was the opposition to separation from England:

"I would give more for a perfect painting of the terror and horror upon the face of the old majority at that critical moment than for the best piece of Raphael."

Adams also gives us the best pen picture that we have of Hewes when he said: "Hewes has a sharp eye, a keen, penetrating sense, but what is of more importance, is a man of honor and integrity." William Hooper, a co-signer of the Declaration with Hewes, and with whose so-called Tory opposition Hewes was in earlier debates in harmony, writes of Hewes: "He was my intimate friend. I knew and had probed the secret recesses of his soul, and found it devoid of guile and replete with benignity."

Mr. Hewes was a native of New Jersey and engaged in business and maritime pursuits in Philadelphia. Later he moved to Edenton, induced thereto by the fact that there was considerable commerce from the West Indies. He was a large exporter and importer and owned a large fleet of merchant vessels which he later placed at the disposal of the country during the Revolution. His ships could make the trip from Edenton to these islands, furnishing many products to the colonies, much quicker than from Philadelphia. He prospered in Edenton and became what in those days was regarded as a man of wealth so that in his will he was able to bequeath to his family many thousand pounds. He early obtained the confidence of the people of his adopted home and took interest as a public-spirited business man in all that concerned the people of the colony.

It was while serving in the Continental Congress that the opportunity came to Mr. Hewes to obtain a brevet title of Secretary of the Navy of the Colonies. Of course, he had no such legal title, but when General Washington and other leaders, among them Mr. Hewes, saw that means must be found to waylay the ships bringing supplies to the British Army, the need for a continental navy was seen. There was, therefore, organized the marine committee of the Congress, composed of John Adams, Stephen Hopkins, Richard Henry Lee, Robert Morris, and Joseph Hewes. Hopkins had been trained to the sea but Hewes had had large experience with ships and seamen in the actual direction of seamen and merchant marine, and he became what was called "the work horse" of the committee and its chairman. In truth, it was a distinction to be the leader of such a distinguished committee, but some of the members were slow to follow Mr. Hewes. In fact, some of them never did follow him. The New Englanders, led by Adams and Hopkins, wished to control the new Navy and name their hand-picked officers to direct it. One of them asked, directing his words to the southerners on the committee: "Haven't you filled the Army with your precious Washingtons, Lees, and other Virginians?" and added: "Keep your Army spoils, but the Navy is our meat." But there were two members of the committee, Joseph Hewes, of North Carolina, and Robert Morris, of Philadelphia, who were unwilling to turn the Navy over entirely to New England officers.

Morris didn't think that anything could go on in America successfully unless a Philadelphian had prominent place in it, and so he demanded that Nicholas Biddle be given a commission. Joseph Hewes was firm in his insistence that North Carolina must have an officer on the list of the first officers of the young navy. He suggested for a commission as captain a man who had never been heard of by the other members of the committee, John P. Jones. If he had suggested that John Paul be given a commission, the other members might have heard of that romantic sailor who said of himself that he had been "a son of fortune." However, though Morris and Hewes were able to compel the commissions in the lower grades, Morris making Biddle a captain of the Andrea Doria, Hewes had to be contented with a first lieutenantship for John Paul Jones, who was given the task of arming and manning the flagship Alfred. Most of the new officers were New Englanders, and worse than that, most of the appointees were either relatives or friends of Stephen Hopkins and John Adams, Members of the Continental Congress. Nepotism is nothing new. It resulted then, as almost always, in injury to the public service, for within a few months most of these favorites who had been given commissions had lost their ships, been cashiered, tried on charges, or told to find a port and rest. Jones once wrote: "When I applied for a lieutenancy I hoped in that work to gain much useful knowledge from men of more experience than myself. I was, however, mistaken, for instead of gaining information, I was obliged to inform others. A few of them did almost everything except prick themselves with their own swords." Phillips Russell says: "Only two men in this historic list of the first American naval officers came out of their first tests with laurels, and they were the last two chosen—Nicholas Biddle and John P. Jones. Because he owed his appointment to Hewes, the latter was thenceforth known as 'the North Carolina captain.'"

This is not the time nor place to discuss the somewhat disputed question as to how John Paul received the name of Jones. There has long existed in North Carolina a tradition, which was accepted without question for many years, that after John Paul Jones had killed a man on board his ship and it was necessary for him to hide himself for a time, he came to North Carolina and lived in the homes of Willie Jones and Allen Jones. The story of how this happened, whether historic or traditional, is very interesting. It is that John Paul had formed the acquaintance and secured the friendship of Joseph Hewes in Philadelphia, and Hewes had invited the young sailor to visit him at his home in Edenton. Therefore, unannounced, John Paul appeared in Edenton to accept this generous invitation. When he arrived in Edenton he found that Mr. Hewes had gone on one of his ships to the West Indies, and the disconsolate young sailor, without friends and without money, was sitting on the wharf in Edenton Bay when the great patriot, Willie Jones, went to the wharf to take a boat to return to his home in Halifax. In a small town like Edenton the presence of a stranger, particularly a stranger of the attractiveness of John Paul, caused Mr. Jones to inquire about him and how he happened to be there, and so he approached the young man and asked:

"What is your name?"

"My name is John Paul," was the answer.

"What brought you to Edenton?" asked Mr. Jones.

"I was invited," said John Paul, "by Mr. Joseph Hewes to visit him in Edenton, and I came hoping to find him. I now learn that he is in the West Indies and will not be back for some time and therefore I am in great distress."

Thereupon, so the story goes—it is history or tradition, whichever you choose to call it—Willie Jones, who had doubtless heard of John Paul, and who had a flair for promising young men, invited John Paul to go to his home. The invitation was accepted and for a time John Paul was a resident in his home, alternating between the home of Willie Jones in Halifax and the home of his brother, Allen Jones. The attachment became very strong between the nomadic and brilliant young sailor and these two distinguished patriots of that era. Later when Mr. Hewes was able to obtain a commission for the young sailor in the American Navy, the officer asked that the commission be not given to John Paul but to John Paul Jones, and the Halifax story has always been that he made this request, saying, in substance: "My name was John Paul, but out of admiration and gratitude to the men who gave me refuge and kindness and friendship in a day when I sorely needed them, my name is henceforth John Paul Jones." In the Navy Department at Washington there hangs a beautiful sword on which is the inscription: "This sword was presented to John Paul Jones by Willie Jones, of North Carolina, and is loaned to the Navy by Admiral Nicholson, whose father came into possession of it."

This interesting story or scrap of history has, of course, been questioned because neither Willie Jones nor his brother nor John Paul Jones left any scrap in proof of the incident or reason why John Paul changed his name, but if he didn't take his name from the North Carolina family, of which Willie Jones was the head, where did he get the name Jones and why did he take it? These questions have puzzled historians who have not agreed upon the answer.

The story of the organization of the new American Navy, after the failure of some of the early officers, is one of the most glorious stories in the American chapters of service afloat. Lieutenant Jones claimed to have pulled up to the masthead of the Alfred the first American naval flag. It was not the banner with 13 stripes but a rectangle of yellow silk bearing the picture of a rattlesnake and the legend, "Don't tread on me." This device had been previously used by the Culpeper riflemen of Virginia. Among the other contentions in the story of the life of John Paul Jones there is much of mystery and more of romance. There has been the question as to who hoisted the first American flag. Captain Barry, called by some "the father of the American Navy," laid claim to that honor as did John Paul Jones. John Adams has left on record this statement: "Both these vain boasts I know to be false. It is not decent or just that those emigrants, foreigners of the South, should falsely arrogate to themselves merit that belongs to New England sailors, officers, and men." He claimed the honor belonged to Capt. John Manly, commander of the Lee, which brought in four prizes. Of course, John Adams, in using the words "emigrants," "foreigners from the South," was referring to John Paul Jones. However all this may be, one thing is certain, that the first salute to the American flag was given in French waters when John Paul Jones sailed his famous ship, the Bon Homme Richard, into the French harbor.

The first work that John Paul Jones was ordered to do was convoy duty for ships carrying supplies for the defense of New York. He returned to Philadelphia from a successful convoy voyage three weeks after the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Phillips Russell writes: "Joseph Hewes was now satisfied that he had made no mistake in his man. He was also convinced that this fellow had a spot of genius in him, and that he had not the temperament to endure incompetent or lackadaisical superiors. He therefore set to work to obtain for Jones a command in which his initiative would have elbowroom. Meantime Jones went to John Hancock and obtained from him, as President of the Continental Congress, confirmation of the captain's commission given to him by Hopkins. It was dated August 8, 1776, the first awarded after the Colonies had pronounced themselves to be a separate Commonwealth."

Jones proposed to Hewes that he be sent to the west coast of Africa to intercept and harass British trading ships, and was very earnest in urging upon Hewes that a naval war should be not only defensive but offensive. There was difference of opinion in the Marine Committee, but from that committee Hewes emerged with an unlimited order to Jones for a free-lance cruise to last "6 weeks or 2 or 3 months." The story of John Paul Jones is the most romantic of any sailor in the whole history of the American Navy. His early successes are told in letters which he wrote to Joseph Hewes, and he continued to write to him as long as he lived, and to regard him as his "angel of happiness."

To be sure, the day Joseph Hewes attached his name to the Declaration of Independence was the greatest day in his life, the one event that gives him immortality. If he had followed the suggestions of those friends who were slower than he to see that independence was America's destiny, Edenton would not be holding a great celebration in his honor on Thursday of this week, and no congressional monument to his memory would rise on the beautiful sward overlooking the beautiful Edenton Bay. There were men in that day who had opportunity to sign the declaration who denied themselves immortality because of doubt or fear or hostility. Hewes, as he slowly but surely came to see that independence was the destiny, had the vision in time to gain immortality and to give such service to his country after the signing of the Declaration of Independence as would have given him lasting distinction. But he would have lacked that capstone of immortality which ever surrounds the names of the men privileged to sign that immortal document.

One of the true tests of the capacity of a man called to great position is his ability to judge men and call to his assistance and to public service men who will grow into such large usefulness as to justify his faith in them. Judging by this standard, Joseph Hewes was a great man. Devoted as he was in the Continental Congress, chiefly to the building up of the young Navy that could cope with the great British Navy, he had the genius to see that John Paul Jones was a genius. Much greater than Joseph Hewes was John Adams, but John Adams lacked that vision. He saw in John Paul Jones nothing but "emigrant," "foreigner from the South," "a son of fortune," and perhaps thought of him as a murderer and little better than a pirate. Joseph Hewes had vision. He divined that in this young man was the spark of genius needing only an opportunity.

He threw to this intrepid young man the life line of opportunity. When John Paul Jones seized that life line thrown to him by Hewes and made the British stand in terror of his intrepid superiority, the names of Joseph Hewes and John Paul Jones became inseparably linked in history. There is no tradition about this; it is history. When estimating the value of the achievements of John Paul Jones it must be remembered that it was Joseph Hewes who opened the door to him, which he embraced, to frighten the British ships within an inch of their lives, to terrify the children of the British coast by scaring them with stories about John Paul Jones, the "pirate," as they called him, and to win for the American Navy in France such recognition as might not otherwise have been won. To the quiet merchant and mariner, Joseph Hewes, goes the lasting credit of having seen farther into the possibilities of that wonderful young man when John Adams could see nothing in him except a rover. Hewes was not ignorant of the history of John Paul. He knew that he had been a sailor and rover for years. John Paul had confessed the story of the killing of the man in the Tobago misfortune. He knew at first hand, but he was not the man to deny to intrepid youth, whom he realized had great ability, a second chance. One wonders indeed what might have been the history of John Paul Jones if Joseph Hewes had not seen in him, when he was unknown, what all the world came later to recognize.

Therefore, on Thursday, when the congressional monument to Hewes is unveiled in Edenton, young people will be asking, doubtless, why Hewes deserves all this honor, and there will be two answers.

First, that he signed the Declaration of Independence. That, surely, is enough honor for any man and makes him worthy of the highest tribute.

The second answer will be that Joseph Hewes gave to the young American Navy and to the world John Paul Jones. If he had done nothing else, that power to see the capabilities of a great man in an unknown youth would justify the honor that is to be paid to Joseph Hewes. To be sure, the people of Edenton and North Carolina would hold him in esteem, even if he was not held in national and international esteem for these two contributions to his country for all generations, for his business judgment, his marine enterprise, and his civic virtues.

Hewes died at the age of 49. It was said that one of the reasons why he moved South was to seek a warmer and more salubrious climate and to escape the rigors of the winters of the North, for tuberculosis early claimed him. Edenton holds in its heart the tragedy of his beautiful romance. He was said to have been engaged to Miss Isabella Johnston, daughter of Samuel Johnston. His fiancee died during their courtship, and Hewes went to his grave saddened by the wreck of his romance.

It will be a pious pilgrimage which North Carolinians and others will make this week to have a part in honoring a son who won immortality by appending his name to the Declaration of Independence.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short letter from the supervisor of postal employees of the State of Alabama protesting the salary reduction for postal employees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question about the program for the balance of the week.

Mr. RAINEY. I will state to the gentleman that on Tuesday we will have Calendar Wednesday business. To-morrow night from 8 o'clock until 11 o'clock there will be a call of the Private Calendar; the next day, Wednesday, the legislative appropriation bill, with the Economy Committee amendments, and we expect to have night sessions Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, in an attempt to get through with the legislative appropriation bill. On Saturday we will consider Muscle Shoals legislation. On Wednesday of this week, also, the tariff bill will be taken up under a rule, to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman is going to force the program from this time on so that there will be no question but what the House will get through with its business early in June and not have to remain here all summer?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes, sir; that is the plan.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of course, we have had no relief legislation yet.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The Speaker announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 3570. An act to amend the act entitled "An act confirming in States and Territories title to land granted by the United States in the aid of common or public schools," approved January 25, 1927.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 26, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Tuesday, April 26, 1932, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

WAYS AND MEANS

(10 a. m.)

Continue hearings on soldiers' bonus.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

(10 a. m.)

Amending appropriation act relating to licenses, etc. (H. R. 5335).

Authorizing appropriation for Casualty Hospital (S. 1307; H. R. 8076).

To exempt from taxation property of Colonial Dames (H. R. 4509).

To exempt from taxation property of Sons of Revolution (H. R. 10138).

To exempt from taxation property of Daughters of 1812 (S. 1203).

(10.30 a. m.)

To amend the District Code relating to kidnaping (H. R. 10054, H. R. 10089).

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. KERR: Committee on Immigration and Naturalization. H. R. 6710. To repeal certain laws providing that certain aliens who have filed declarations of intention to become citizens of the United States shall be considered citizens for the purposes of service and protection on American vessels; with amendment (Rept. No. 1124). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. STEAGALL. Committee on Banking and Currency. H. R. 8931. A bill to amend Title II of the Federal farm loan act in regard to Federal intermediate credit banks, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1125). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. McDUFFIE: Committee on Economy. H. R. 11597. A bill to effect economies in the National Government; without amendment (Rept. No. 1126). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BANKHEAD: Committee on Rules. H. Res. 203. A resolution making in order amendments to be offered by the Committee on Economy to H. R. 11267, the legislative appropriation bill; without amendment (Rept. No. 1127). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SWANK: Committee on Claims. H. R. 3727. A bill for the relief of Mary Elizabeth Fox; with amendment (Rept. No. 1119). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. CHRISTGAU: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5801. A bill for the relief of Clyde W. Edwards; without amendment (Rept. No. 1120). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. PITTENGER: Committee on Claims. H. R. 5947. A bill for the relief of John Moore; with amendment (Rept. No. 1121). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. PITTENGER: Committee on Claims. H. R. 7655. A bill for the relief of Dr. Charles T. Granger; with amendment (Rept. No. 1122). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H. R. 11461. A bill for the relief of C. N. Hildreth, jr.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1123). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. JONES: Committee on Agriculture. H. R. 10124. A bill for the relief of A. Zappone, disbursing clerk, United States Department of Agriculture; without amendment (Rept. No. 1128). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H. R. 11591) to limit the salaries payable to officers and employees of national banks or banking associations in the Federal reserve system; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. PERKINS: A bill (H. R. 11592) to protect trade-marks used in commerce, to authorize the registration of such trade-marks, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 11593) to collect additional tonnage dues from vessels of foreign nations that default in their debts to the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. MAAS: A bill (H. R. 11594) to prohibit the sale, lease, or dismantling of certain naval vessels used for training purposes by the United States Naval Reserve; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H. R. 11595) to amend sections 328 and 329 of the United States Criminal Code of 1910 and sections 548 an 549 of the United States Code of 1926; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11596) to authorize the exchange of small tribal acreage on Fort Hall Indian School Reserve in Idaho for adjoining land; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. McDUFFIE: A bill (H. R. 11597) to effect economies in the National Government; committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. BANKHEAD: A resolution (H. Res. 203) making in order amendments to be offered by the Committee on Economy to H. R. 11267, the legislative appropriation bill; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. FISH: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 373) requesting the President to instruct the delegates to the disarmament conference for a further reduction of battleships and cruisers; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, joint resolution (H. J. Res. 374) creating a commission to investigate the sales of foreign securities; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. COLLIER: A bill (H. R. 11598) for the relief of Gottlieb Luhm, deceased; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CONNOLLY: A bill (H. R. 11599) granting an increase of pension to Theresa E. Herse; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11600) granting a pension to Margaret M. Hooven; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11601) granting a pension to Anna D. Volz; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FIESINGER: A bill (H. R. 11602) granting an increase of pension to Sarah Abbott; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULMER: A bill (H. R. 11603) granting a pension to Ella Elizabeth Ayers; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GUYER: A bill (H. R. 11604) granting a pension to Elmer B. Williams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LICHTENWALNER: A bill (H. R. 11605) for the relief of William A. Libka; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: A bill (H. R. 11606) to authorize an appropriation for the reimbursement of Stelio Vassiliadis; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mrs. OWEN: A bill (H. R. 11607) for the relief of Harry Burton-Lewis; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PARSONS: A bill (H. R. 11608) granting an increase of pension to Nancy C. Austin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAINEY: A bill (H. R. 11609) for the relief of Freddie D. Venable; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RAMSEYER: A bill (H. R. 11610) granting an increase of pension to William H. Tullis; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TABER: A bill (H. R. 11611) granting a pension to Georgianna Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEST: A bill (H. R. 11612) granting an increase of pension to Almyra O. Humphrey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WITHROW: A bill (H. R. 11613) for the relief of Howard A. Marshall; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11614) for the relief of Mueller Motor Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

7020. By Mr. ARNOLD: Petition of citizens of Pinkstaff, Ill., urging proper regulation of trucks and busses engaged in interstate traffic; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7021. By Mr. BOYLAN: Letter from the Baugh & Sons Co., Baltimore, Md., opposing Government operation of Muscle Shoals; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

7022. Also, resolution adopted by the board of directors of Dairymen's League Cooperative Association (Inc.), urging that no drastic cuts be made in appropriation for vocational training in high schools and other institutions of learning; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7023. Also, letter from the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, Chapter No. 17, Castle Point, N. Y., favoring the payment of adjusted compensation; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

7024. Also, letter from the Brooklyn Industrial High School for Girls, Brooklyn, N. Y., opposing any reduction in the appropriation for vocational education; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7025. Also, letter from the assistant commissioner for vocation and extension education of the University of New York, Albany, N. Y., opposing any reduction in the appropriation for vocational education; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7026. By Mr. BRUNNER: Resolutions passed by the New York Department of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States at Albany, N. Y., on April 8 and 9, 1932, opposing reduction in military appropriations, etc.; urging upon Congress to provide an appropriation sufficient to provide inactive duty and flying training for air reserve combat pilots, etc.; and favoring the inclusion in the Budget of funds sufficient to permit training of the Group 1 combat pilots of the air reserve during the fiscal year 1933; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7027. By Mr. CHAVEZ: Petition urging price stabilization on grain and cotton by farmers of McAlister, Quay County, N. Mex.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

7028. Also, petition protesting against compulsory Sunday observance, by citizens of Farmington, N. Mex.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

7029. Also, petition of farmers of Rio Grande Valley of Texas and New Mexico (Elephant Butte project); to the Committee on Agriculture.

7030. Also, petition of farmers of Pecos Valley, N. Mex.; the Committee on Agriculture.

7031. By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of San Antonio Chapter, No. 1, Disabled Emergency Officers of the World War, urging Congress to reaffirm the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1920, as the premanent military policy of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

7032. Also, resolution of the board of directors of the Laundryowners National Association of the United States and Canada, urging that immediate steps be taken to reorganize governmental departments and bureaus on a sound economic basis to eliminate duplication of work, effort, and expense; to the Committee on Economy.

7033. By Mr. GIBSON: Petition of C. L. Allen and other residents of Windham County, Vt., protesting against compulsory Sunday observance; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

7034. By Mr. JAMES: Telegram from Louise Tauch, twelfth district committeewoman, Marquette, Mich., favoring a tariff on copper; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7035. Also, petition from junior high school students of Pewabic School and residents of Quincy Mining Co.'s district, Houghton County, Mich., favoring a tariff on copper; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7036. Also, telegram from Chapter No. 24, Disabled American Veterans, of Escanaba, Mich., through Henry Breauly, commander, favoring immediate payment of balance on adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7037. Also, petition from Knights of Kaleva, No. 3, of South Range, Mich., through Charles Tuomela, John Juntilla, and Tauno Tervo, committee, favoring a tariff on copper; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7038. By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: Petition of N. L. McCullough, of College Station, Tex., opposing salary reduction of Government employees; to the Committee on Economy.

7039. Also, petition of Grady E. Davis, of College Station, Tex., opposing salary reduction of Government employees; to the Committee on Economy.

7040. Also, petition of Arthur Shepperd, N. C. Leamon, C. H. Fox, and Joe Glasscock, rural mail carriers, of Thornton, Tex., opposing legislation requiring rural carriers to take reduction in salary and also discontinuance of equipment allowance; to the Committee on Economy.

7041. By Mr. KVALE: Petition of Joseph Oien Post, No. 198, American Legion, Boyd, Minn., favoring full payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7042. Also, petition of Melvin E. Hearl Post, No. 21, American Legion, Moorhead, Minn., favoring full payment of adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7043. Also, petition of Franklin Avenue Commercial Club, Minneapolis, Minn., favoring full payment of adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7044. Also, petition of Farmers Union, Edison Township, Appleton, Minn., favoring full payment of adjusted-compensation certificates; to the committee on Ways and Means.

7045. Also, petition of William Erickson Post, No. 186, American Legion, Olivia, Minn., favoring full payment of adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7046. Also, petition of Minneapolis Bearcat Post, No. 504, American Legion, Minneapolis, Minn., favoring full payment of adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7047. Also, petition of the Minnesota section of the Society of American Foresters, protesting against any cut in Federal wages and salaries; to the Committee on Economy.

7048. Also, petition of Leon A. Williams, chairman second district rehabilitation committee for American Legion, Department of Minnesota, Slayton, Minn., protesting against legislation curtailing compensation or hospitalization of disabled veterans; to the Committee on Economy.

7049. Also, petition of American Legion Post, No. 227, Danube, Minn., protesting against legislation curtailing compensation or hospitalization of disabled veterans, and urging enactment of widows and orphans' pension bill; to the Committee on Economy.

7050. By Mr. LAMNECK: Petition of John J. Kruse, J. L. Gressel, and numerous other citizens of the city of Columbus, Ohio, protesting against the elimination of Naval Reserve training cruises and decommissioning of the U. S. S. Wilmington as economy measures; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7051. Also, petition of George H. Huhn, Hazel Metzger, and other citizens of the city of Columbus, Ohio, protesting against the withdrawal of appropriation for vocational-education work; to the Committee on Economy.

7052. Also, petition of Joseph Martin, John Patrick, and numerous other citizens of the city of Columbus, Ohio, protesting against the elimination of Naval Reserve training cruises and the decommissioning of the U. S. S. Wilmington; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7053. Also, petition of Charles Bigler, John E. Blenkner, and numerous other citizens of the city of Columbus, Ohio, protesting against the elimination of naval reserve training cruises and the decommissioning of the U. S. S. Wilmington as economy measures; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7054. By Mr. LINDSAY. Petition of National Casket Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., opposing the payment of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7055. Also, petition of Disabled American Veterans of the World War, Dayton Chapter, No. 9, Dayton, Ohio, opposing reduction for disabled veterans to the amount of $70,000,000; to the Committee on Economy.

7056. By Mr. McCLINTIC of Oklahoma: Petition of citizens of Hobart, Okla., protesting against the repeal, resubmission, or modification of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7057. By Mr. NIEDRINGHAUS: Petition of 35 World War veterans of St. Louis, Mo., protesting against any cut in compensation or any reduction in the rights now being enjoyed by disabled veterans; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7058. Also, petition of the vocational agricultural class, Mound City, Mo., protesting against the discontinuance or suspension of Federal funds for vocational education; to the Committee on Economy.

7059. By Mr. PARKER of Georgia: Petition of Thomas L. Bailey and 38 other citizens of Georgia, urging the passage of railroad pension bill, H. R. 9891, and voicing opposition to House bill 10023 and Senate bill 3892; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7060. By Mr. RAINEY: Petition of Herschel H. Heaton and 64 members of the Jacksonville (Ill.) Chapter of the Future Farmers of America, favoring appropriations for vocational education; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7061. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of J. T. Matchett Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., opposing the proposed tax on candy; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7062. Also, petition of Adelaide Eller, 94 Vanderveer Street, Brooklyn, N. Y., and six other citizens of the Greater City of New York, with reference to tax on fountain pens; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7063. Also, petition of National Casket Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., opposing the payment of the soldiers' bonus; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7064. Also, petition of George F. Arata, of New York City, favoring a tax on beer; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7065. Also, petition of A. H. Stiehl Furniture Co., New York City, favoring the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and also legalize the sale and taxation of light wines and beer; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7066. By Mr. SHANNON: Resolution of Tacitus E. Gaillard Post, No. 2069, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Kansas City, Mo., urging payment of adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE

TUESDAY, APRIL 26, 1932

(Legislative day of Monday, April 25, 1932)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 3570) to amend the act entitled "An act confirming in States and Territories title to land granted by the United States in the aid of common or public schools," approved January 25, 1927, and it was signed by the Vice President.

RAILROAD MERGERS (S. DOC. NO. 86)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Attorney General, submitting, in response to Senate Resolution 173 (submitted by Mr. KING), certain information relative to recent railroad mergers and the policy of the Department of Justice with respect thereto, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Blaine	Capper	Cutting
Austin	Borah	Caraway	Dale
Bailey	Bratton	Carey	Dickinson
Bankhead	Brookhart	Connally	Dill
Barbour	Broussard	Coolidge	Fess
Barkley	Bulkley	Copeland	Fletcher
Bingham	Bulow	Costigan	Frazier
Black	Byrnes	Couzens	George
Glass	Jones	Norbeck	Steiwer
Glenn	Kean	Norris	Stephens
Goldsborough	Kendrick	Nye	Thomas, Idaho
Gore	Keyes	Oddie	Thomas, Okla.
Hale	La Follette	Patterson	Townsend
Harrison	Lewis	Pittman	Trammell
Hastings	Logan	Reed	Tydings
Hatfield	McGill	Robinson, Ark.	Vandenberg
Hawes	McKellar	Robinson, Ind.	Walcott
Hayden	McNary	Schall	Walsh, Mass.
Hebert	Metcalf	Sheppard	Waterman
Howell	Morrison	Shipstead	Watson
Hull	Moses	Shortridge	White
Johnson	Neely	Smoot

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is absent owing to illness.

Mr. GLASS. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is still detained from the Senate in attendance upon the disarmament conference at Geneva.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senate resumes the consideration of Senate Resolution No. 199.

ALABAMA SENATORIAL CONTEST

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 199), reported by Mr. GEORGE and Mr. BRATTON from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

Resolved, That JOHN H. BANKHEAD is hereby declared to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Alabama for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1931, and is entitled to a seat as such.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Mr. Heflin is entitled to the floor for two hours.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President and Senators, I am deeply grateful to the Senate for extending to me the privilege of appearing in my own behalf and discussing my contest. I shall never cease to be grateful for the kindness and the justice that has been done me in this regard.

The Master said, "Know the truth and the truth shall make you free," and Pilate asked, "What is truth?" But he would not wait for an answer.

Every contest that comes to this body ought to be carefully and thoroughly investigated. I have not had such an investigation. My rights have been denied me to close my case. I have not been permitted to take testimony in the middle portion or in the southern portion of Alabama. At Birmingham, when we went down to take testimony in January, agreeing that a commissioner might preside, it was our belief, and probably I should say our understanding, that we would take testimony for weeks. On the second day of the first week, when we had no notice that we would have to cut off the investigation for the contestant, Senator HASTINGS sent a telegram, I understand at the instance of Senator GEORGE, that we could have three more days and no more and we must close our testimony. We had to dismiss a number of witnesses that were subpœnaed for that week and we never had the opportunity to summon other witnesses in the middle and southern portions of the State.

Senator Bankhead was then given a week, and we have been denied the right of rebuttal. We have not been allowed to summon a single witness and take testimony to answer Mr. Bankhead's witnesses. Senators, I submit that such treatment of the contestant is without parallel in the history of this body. It embodies the idea of letting the contestee close the case, cutting off the contestant, saying "Your case is closed." What sort of justice is that?

We were not permitted to take the testimony regarding the primary at Birmingham, and that, as I understand, was under the instructions of Senator GEORGE. I am going to tell the Senate something about this case to-day that the Senate does not know and would not know but for my speaking here. I have always tried to be very frank and fair and honest and just, and I ask that treatment at the hands of my former comrades.

It was rumored that I would not be permitted to speak here, and three very prominent men said they would hire the biggest hall in the city for me to speak in if I was denied that right. It shows that the spirit of fair play is in our people, and it is fortunate that it is true. But I have permission to speak, and I am going to discuss some things of vital importance in the case.

I have told you what happened in January in Alabama. We fully expected to go to Montgomery, the capital of the State, and put the former governor, Governor Graves, on the witness stand. We expected to prove something important by him, which I shall discuss later. We expected to have probably 100 witnesses summoned there, very important witnesses. Then we expected to go to Mobile, in the southern part of the State, and take testimony, but we have not had the chance to do that.

When we came back the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. HASTINGS, who has given a great deal of attention to this question, who has been very painstaking and very industrious and very fair, reached the point where he thought the case ought to go to the full committee for advice as to what should be done further in the matter. He stated in his report that the contestant was still asking to have testimony taken, and when it got to the full committee Senator BRATTON and Senator GEORGE, of Georgia, objected—Senator GEORGE, who represents in part the State where my father was born, and in that State there are probably 500 to 1,000 voters blood relatives of mine. I have a brother, a minister of the gospel, Rev. M. R. Heflin, in that State. Senator GEORGE and Senator BRATTON favored closing the case; and, if it had not been for my good friend Senator SHORTRIDGE, who has always been a man of fairness and of superb courage and splendid ability—if it had not been for him and his sense of fair play and his good fighting spirit, we would not have had an hour to consider the case at all any further.

The committee finally decided to refer the case back, to give us a chance to show what we wanted to do, and Senator GEORGE resigned his place on the subcommittee, as did also Senator BRATTON; both of them declined to serve. That is the kind and cordial treatment that I have received from some of the brethren of my own party.

Then I was called upon to speak in the State so ably represented by my good friends Senator GLENN and Senator LEWIS, to speak at Mount Morris, to the college students there, and lo and behold, while I was gone, the contestee and his friends on this side, by the aid of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE], decided to take action in my absence and closed my case.

Senators, I am appealing to the sense of fairness and to the courage of Senators in this body on both sides. My case has been closed, and I have never closed it. I repeat, I have never been permitted to take rebuttal testimony. Hundreds of witnesses we had intended to summon and examine. My case is closed; the door is shut; the door is locked; and the key is thrown away. And these same Senators were kind enough on yesterday to vote to deny me the right to come in here and be heard here. I regret that. It hurts me in here [indicating].

There was a little boy, a little stepson to a stepmother, whose father married a second time and had two or three children more. On Christmas the father bought some nice little shoes and other gifts for his children by his last wife. He brought them in. He had bought a pair of rough, brogan shoes for the boy. The boy put them on and sat there with his face in his hands, and tears ran down his cheeks. His father said, "Why, what is the matter? Don't the shoes fit?" The boy said, "They hurt me." The father said, "Why, I thought they were large enough"; but the boy said, "They hurt me in here [indicating]." Senators, this hurts me in here [indicating].

If you kill off the courageous men in your party, if you destroy the spirit of independence in your party, what have you left? Grover Cleveland once said, "What is the use of election or reelection if you do not stand for something?"

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], strong, able American patriot, supported Governor Smith in 1928; I supported President Hoover. Did they read Senator NORRIS out of his party? Did they deny him the right to run in his primary?

Senator Simmons, the ablest legislator who has served in this body in my lifetime from the South, supported President Hoover. Did they undertake to read him out of the Democratic Party in North Carolina? No; they permitted him to run in North Carolina.

My grandfather Heflin was born in that State, and my good friend the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] voted yesterday to seal my lips and deny me the chance to come in here and speak in my own behalf, with the last opportunity that I would have to present my case to those who are to pass upon it finally.

So Senator Simmons was not read out of his party; Senator NORRIS was not read out of his party; but I was read out. Why? Because it was generally conceded by the Bankhead leaders that I would be nominated if I got into the primary, and the only way to keep me from being nominated was politically to assassinate me; and that is what that brazen bunch on that committee undertook to do.

Senators, you are entitled to know something of the background of this primary before I discuss the legal phases of it. This little coterie down there was arranging to fix up a primary to nominate Mr. Bankhead. He was the only candidate suggested in opposition to me. He was suggested in 1920 and again in 1924. He did not get enough encouragement in 1924 to run. I had no opposition in 1924, but was nominated without opposition. So the governor of the State, a Democrat, sent his secretary to poll the committee of 50 members and got pledges from 34 to vote for a fair-for-all primary and inviting all Democrats in, regardless of what had taken place in 1928.

My former colleague, Senator BLACK, who on yesterday voted against permitting me to speak here, was strong against the machine then; he fought it to the bitter end, and issued a statement against its conduct that while he lives will ring around the State. I shall read it later. He was outraged at the committee's conduct. He wrote the committee a letter not to take such a stand; so did I, and so did 8 of the 10 Members from Alabama in the National House of Representatives do that. The governor of the State, both Senators, 8 out of 10 of the Democrats in Congress from Alabama appealed to the committee not to do it; but they took the action.

Now, what happened? When the committee met, the chairman of the committee, Pettus, an Alabama power attorney and a Mr. McQueen; another member who spoke to bar me, an Alabama power attorney, Lynn, who offered the resolution, an Alabama railroad attorney, put the resolution through.

Who voted on that committee? R. W. Patrick, from Norfolk, Va., who had formerly been a member of the committee from the Mobile district but went to Norfolk in 1927 and paid his poll tax in that State in 1928 and 1929. They took him to Montgomery on December 16, 1929, and voted him to bar me out of my party when he was a citizen and a voter of another State.

They had a man named Bugg. They filled a vacancy with him. He lived in my old district and was a newspaper man, an editor. He is the bitterest political enemy I have got in the State. Doctor Farguson resigned and they filled the vacancy with Bugg. If it had been in a courthouse, I could have objected to him and he could not have served on a jury where my dearest rights were involved; but they put this bitter enemy of mine upon the committee and permitted him to vote at that meeting, violating by so doing the rules and regulations of the committee. Long, long ago they fixed the rule that in filling a vacancy at a present meeting the man who filled it could not vote, because they might get men to resign and fill these vacancies in order to put something over.

There was a man on that committee who was strong for letting down the bars. I referred to this in part 1 of the hearings. His financial stress and strain was relieved. He had been openly for letting down the bars, but he voted for putting them up. Another man on the committee who had borrowed money from a prominent man, who held his note, sat by him on the committee when he voted to bar me from the primary. I have discussed that in part 1 of the hearings.

Every Alabama Power Co. attorney in the State but two were strong partisans of Mr. Bankhead; and yet Senator GEORGE and Senator BRATTON have got in their minority report a letter from a cranky old fellow down there who said he was for me, but the trouble with me was that I had lined up with the power company. I wondered when I read the letter why they were printing that rambling thing from that old fellow; but that was it; they were trying to shield and screen the contestee, who was their candidate. Every Alabama Power Co. attorney and the president of the company were all supporting Mr. Bankhead and opposing me, and that effort in the minority report was to make it appear that Senator Heflin was lined up with the Alabama Power Co.

Senators, when they got through they called the roll down there and voted to bar me. Bankhead partisans in the committee room clapped their hands and said, "We have got him where we want him now—outside the party"; and the work of political assassination for a time was complete.

Then what? Senator BLACK and I and others conferred. It was decided that the best thing to do was to go down there and stir up public sentiment and get the committee to meet and rescind its action. I went down upon a speaking mission. I delivered about 12 speeches and addressed over 60,000 Democrats. I polled them at every place I spoke—those who voted for Smith and those who voted for Hoover. I said, "All of you who repudiate the committee's action and want the action rescinded stand up and hold up your hands." I never had as many as five in any meeting to indorse the committee's action. Sweeping the State like wildfire, the committee's action was repudiated and what action did we get? The chairman of the State committee, this Alabama Power Co. attorney, said, "I do not care how many people protest; I am not going to call the committee together; that is settled." That was another step in the work of the political assassination of me.

Then it was suggested to me that there was a provision in the rules and regulations by which we could force the committee to meet on the request of 15 members. Twenty-one had already voted on my side, so we could easily get 15 to compel them to meet and hear the protests of Democrats whose party it was that was involved. What do you suppose we found upon investigation? We found that the chairman of the committee and his other Alabama Power Co. attorneys repealed that provision at that same meeting. My God, Senators, think of that—denying us every recourse where we could get away from the hand-and-foot-tied political machine! They repealed the provision that allowed 15 members to force a meeting of the committee.

Does that look as though it was all fair, and there was nothing rotten and stinking about the action of the State committee?

These are the steps leading up to the most corrupt primary every held in my State. The primary itself reeked with corruption from beginning to end; but I am telling you how they reached it, what led up to it.

Then at a conference, where Senator BLACK sat with Judge Wilkinson and Hugh Locke and David J. Davis and Crampton Harris, they agreed that they would enjoin the committee, and that that was the proper action, and not mandamus, as the Senator now claims was the remedy. You can not mandamus in my State, under the statute in a case like mine. There is a statute against it; and I was surprised at the stand taken by the Senator the other day in what I thought was a very misleading speech.

I had nothing to do with this action. I was out on the hustings, condemning the committee's action, and trying to get up sentiment to cause them to rescind it. Judge Wilkinson, my chief counsel—the best lawyer in my State by all odds, and we have some very fine lawyers there—brought the action. He is my chief counsel in this contest. The other able lawyer associated with him was Frank Hampton, of North Carolina. They presented arguments in this case that are unanswerable, on behalf of the people of Alabama.

Who pays for the primary? The taxpayers. Should they be taxed to pay for an illegal and unlawful primary? No. Well, then, what was the step to take? To enjoin the committee and prevent the taxpayers' money from being spent in an illegal party program for Mr. Bankhead, myself, or anybody else.

What did the judge of the lower court hold? He held that he did not have jurisdiction over the matter. Then the appeal went to the supreme court. What happened there?

Senators, I have told you that I was going to be frank and talk plainly. The intimidating power of the State executive committee threw its terrible shadow over that court. There is not the slightest doubt of that. It has been argued here by Senator BLACK that the court has passed upon the legality of this primary. I beg leave to differ with him. It is not true. They never touched it. They said they had no jurisdiction over it; and the able Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] showed the other day that the case they cited was not on all fours with the case of Wilkinson at Birmingham, the case that went to the supreme court. It is a different case entirely.

The supreme court of my State never have touched the merits of this primary case. They never have passed upon the provisions involved in that; but, just between us, they "passed the buck." That is what happened.

Four judges said, "We have no jurisdiction." But, you know, it looks as if God Almighty has some one man in nearly every responsible place who will stand up at the right time and cry out on behalf of truth and right and justice. Here is what was said by Judge W. H. Thomas, the ablest man on the bench, the most cultured and most courageous:

> This case is here, and the taxpayers have a right to have a decision on the merits, and I am going to give it.

What did he decide? He decided that the primary was null and void and not the kind of primary for which the taxpayers could be taxed.

Gentlemen, that has been settled in my State. A supreme court judge of Alabama held that. They never have declared that the monstrosity pulled off down there has been approved by them. It is not true.

Then what? Judge Thomas is one of three candidates, I believe, running for reelection; and this machine has got out a candidate against him to punish him and to kill him off because of the courage he displayed in doing his duty under his oath before God, and his duty to the taxpayers of the State who were being imposed upon by a monstrous primary born in sin. It is not right to tax the people of the State to pay for it, but they did. They did not stop then.

Mr. Bankhead knew what sort of primary he was running in. He had a hand in it. They tell you that he is innocent; that he has not had anything to do with it. Well, now, let us see. They tell you that he issued a statement that he wanted me to run. He did have a statement in there, some time before the meeting of the committee, that it was all right with him for me to run; but as the committee meeting drew near, watch his conduct. He issued a statement—Senators, get this—saying that some of the members had pledged themselves to him to vote to let down the bars. "But," he said, "I here and now release you from those pledges"; and he turned them loose for the Alabama Power Co. and the other interests to use them and work their will on me. He released them. He, in effect, said to them, "Go to it! If you want to take part in the political assassination, you are free to do it." Does that look as if he had anything to do with it?

What else? Mr. F. H. Creech, of North Carolina—one of the investigators for the Nye committee—went down to Mobile in his investigation. He encountered Mr. Frederick I. Thompson, editor of the Mobile Register and Alabama Journal, candidate against Mr. Bankhead in the primary after they barred me. The machine did not intend that he should have any opposition, but Thompson ran; and here is what he told Mr. Creech: Creech had it in his report, which was turned over to this committee; and I asked for the opportunity to summon Mr. Thompson, and that was denied me.

What did Mr. Creech say that Mr. Thompson told him about this primary? Mr. Thompson told Mr. Creech that when he asked Chairman Pettus, of the State committee, "What did you get out of the senatorial race for? I saw that you were going to be a candidate," Pettus said, "No; I was not going to be a candidate. I just did that to get two votes out of Bankhead's congressional district"—that is, John H. Bankhead—"on the State committee to bar Heflin and other supporters of Hoover from being candidates." Who were those two members? Ogden and Cobb. Well, they voted to bar me, and Thompson told Creech that Pettus told him that Bankhead got those two votes. They voted to bar me from the primary. Does that not tie him in with it?

But that is not all. Sam Childers, of Jasper, was a member of the committee, and Mr. Ogden, or one of the Bankhead friends, went to see him and said, "John"—referring to Mr. Bankhead—"wants you to vote to put up the bars." Sam Childers said, "I can not do it. I shook hands with Arthur Fite and Gibson"—the other members of the committee from that district, five in all—"and told them that I would vote with them to let down the bars, and I am going to do it." Then what? Then Ogden, or whoever it was, said, "John says that if Heflin gets in the primary he will be nominated."

Senators, there is a picture of part of what took place down there—just a part. Did Mr. Bankhead have anything to do with it?

What followed? Judge Arthur Fite, a member of the committee living in Mr. Bankhead's home town, appealed to him and told him that this thing would disrupt our party, that it was unfair and unjust and wrong, and said to him, "Will you not join with me and others in asking the committee to meet and rescind it?" And Mr. Bankhead declined outright to do that. Does that look as if he was responsible for it in any way? Was he using his influence to get me in? No, Senators; he was not.

Then Judge Fite said, "If Heflin and Locke"—that is, the independent Jeffersonian candidate for governor against the Alabama Power Co. candidate—"have their names stamped on the ticket or written on it"—now listen—"the Democrats all have been invited in to vote in this primary under the committee's action. If when they come in they do not want to vote for you or anybody else whose name is on the ticket, but want to express their own honest choice, will you permit them to write Heflin's name on the ballot and vote it?" Mr. Bankhead said he would not.

Then they said, "Suppose they do write it on, and he beats you in the primary"—as I would have done, 3 or 4 to 1—"will you, if he gets a majority, submit to his being the nominee and not ask yourself that you be certified as the nominee?" Mr. Bankhead said, "No; I will not."

That is the trail of the serpent that is over it all; and yet Senator BLACK would have you believe that Mr. Bankhead had nothing to do with it. Senator BRATTON would have you believe that he had nothing to do with it. Why, he was walking around with folded arms, an innocent abroad, in the State when they were preparing to strike me down and politically assassinate me. All the while he looked on with approval.

Senators, what occurred a little later on? After we saw that Pettus, the chairman, had announced in Chattanooga, intimidating the supreme court, or seeking to do so, "If the court does hold that Heflin's name shall go on the ticket, we have two other ways to keep him off"—that is, in the proceedings—what were they doing? They were admitting, as they did all over the State—I could have shown it, and intended to by 50 or 100 witnesses—that I would be nominated if I got in, and the only way to keep me out was to strike me down ruthlessly, illegally, as they did. Mr. Bankhead had notice that that primary was illegal. Senator BLACK, of that State, issued a strong statement showing beyond all question that the primary was illegal and un-Democratic and un-American. That is his language. Judge Anderton, an able judge in Birmingham, who is now a candidate against Senator BLACK in the primary, issued a strong statement, and he supported Bankhead. He said, "If this case is ever tried by a competent tribunal, it is bound to declare the primary illegal, null, and void." Mr. Bankhead had notice that this conglomerate mess the State committee had cooked up was an illegal thing, an obnoxious, unlawful thing.

But that is not all. From the highest court in the State Judge Thomas sent down a ringing opinion. It sounded in Mr. Bankhead's ears long before the primary. He had time then to get the committee to meet and rescind its action. But, Senators, they never expected this case to come here. They thought that if they could steal 50,000 majority and put it on my back, I would not contest. They did their best to keep me from contesting. I expected to put witnesses on the stand who would swear that they intended, if I would accept what happened and go with them, they would beat BLACK with me in 1932. "Go on and take your medicine. Get in line!" I said, "I would not have any respect for myself if I did that. I was honestly elected. The people of this State are entitled to have their choice represent them. If I accept your skullduggery, your crookedness, and your corruption, and permit you to defeat their will and crucify me by waiting for a deferred election two years hence, I would never have any more respect for myself. So help me God, I will fight it to the death. I will take it to the Senate. There are, I think, enough honest men in that body to give me a fair trial, and that is the only body to which I can take it and get a decision on this primary."

It has never been decided yet by a tribunal, except by one judge on the supreme court bench down in Alabama.

Senators, that is a brief picture of the primary; but it does not stop there. I went out on the hustings and I said, "They have repealed the provision of the committee rule which allowed 15 members to compel the committee to meet and rescind its action. We can get no relief there. A majority of the supreme-court judges have said they have no jurisdiction. The door is shut in our faces there. One judge has pointed the way through the wilderness and I am following the trail. It is an illegal primary, and the only thing left to do is to condemn it, repudiate it, stay out of it."

What do you suppose happened in the primary? Out of 340,000 Democrats, 125,000 participated in the primary. That shows in advance where two-thirds of the Democrats were; and there were 50,000 Republicans on top of that. Three-fourths of them were for me. There is the picture.

What do you reckon happened then? Senator BLACK has been very glib in quoting what the newspaper said, as has Senator BRATTON. Newspaper reports following the primary election said this vote and that was there. Let me tell you what the newspapers said. With all the counties but one heard from in the primary, and that a small county, Choctaw, with a vote of less than 2,000, they said, "Bankhead has 81,000, Thompson 42,000, making 123,000 in all." And I give them 2,000 more from Choctaw. They would not have it, but I give it to be fair, making 125,000 out of 340,000 Democrats, in the most exciting and bitter election held in my State in my lifetime.

Did they announce the results? No. What does the law provide? That the State committee shall meet in the office of the secretary of state at Montgomery.

I refer now to the report of Mr. Aarhus, investigator of the Nye committee; and, by the way, I want to say right here that Senator GEORGE and Senator BRATTON would not consent for us to employ any employee of the Nye committee to run down this evidence. Who else could run it down? If I had gone and consulted 50 men and they told me how to get certain testimony, and then the opposition could deny me the right to go back and get it, who could pick up the lost trail and carry it through? But this is what Mr. Aarhus, one of the ablest and bravest and most honest investigators who ever represented this body in a field like that, said. He said the executive committee did meet in the office of the secretary of state in the usual manner.

The meeting was for some reason adjourned, and the returns and records were taken to Selma, Ala., by E. W. Pettus, chairman of the State committee, and the returns were tabulated in the office of the tax assessor, and that to this date no public statement has been made as to the relative standing of each candidate. Not until September 1—from August 12—were the names of the successful candidates made public, and then only the votes received by candidates for United States Senator and governor.

There is ring rule for you. There is bossism and rank corruption gone mad. Why did they hold out those returns? Why did they not canvass them in the office of the secretary of state as of yore? They had to do some work on them. What was the matter? They said, "Heflin's followers have already repudiated the primary. Two hundred and odd thousand have stayed out of it. A hundred and twenty-five thousand have voted in it. We are beaten. The people will cry out 'You are already destroyed before the general election.'"

What did they do? Thompson wired Bankhead conceding his nomination—42,000 against 81,000. Then the boys decided that the vote had to be lifted up; it was rather feeble and weak. So they lifted it up and padded it; and when they wound up, they had nearly 200,000 participating in the primary, after weeks of working and maneuvering and figuring.

Then what occurred? Judge Horace Wilkinson wrote an open letter to the press of the State giving the figures, and he charged the State committee with padding the returns by over 40,000 votes, charged that they had lifted up the Bankhead vote. But they could not lift him without lifting Fred Thompson, because Fred did not want to be beaten 3 or 4 to 1. So they were good and kind-hearted; they would give Bankhead an increased vote, and they dropped a few over in Frederick's political pan. So they lifted his vote to about 57,000, and ran Bankhead away up yonder to one hundred and forty and odd thousand, or something like that.

Judge Wilkinson charged that they had padded those returns. He gave the figures. They have not denied it to this day. That is the case they have here, which some of my friends were trying to railroad, and deny me a hearing over here on the Democratic side, men who ought to have known the inside facts about this case.

Now, I want to read a document appealing from Philip drunk to Philip sober, Senator BLACK's statement. He declined to let my good friend Senator HASTINGS read it to him the other day. You know, one of the hardest jobs a man ever has in public life is trying to answer himself. This is what Senator BLACK said:

> A study of the resolution convinces me the majority has acted in contravention of existing laws and statutes. The committee, in my judgment, has no legal authority to adopt one rule of qualifications for voters in the primary and another rule of qualifications for candidates in that primary. The rule must be uniform with reference to both. The law does not contemplate a special privileged class to run for office and a subordinate class who can vote but not hold office. Citizenship carries with it the right of an elector to vote and hold office. An attempt to abridge the sacred rights of citizenship is fundamentally un-American. If a citizen is barred as a candidate for political office, as party punishment, he must be barred as a voter. If barred as a voter, he must be barred as a candidate. This is clearly provided in section 612 of the Alabama Code of 1923, limiting the authority of the committee on this subject, as follows:
>
> "All persons who are qualified electors under the general election laws of this State shall have the right to participate in such primary elections, subject to such political or other qualifications as may be prescribed for its candidates."
>
> This law is not ambiguous. It is plain. It means what it says. A rule which bars a candidate bars a voter and vice versa.

He was ringing clear and true then.

> The Alabama Legislature evidently intended to protect ancient constitutional liberties and privileges and prevent any small group from perpetuating a favored office-holding class over and above the average man. The committee did not wish to bar as voters those who failed to vote for Governor Smith. It is clear, however, that they have barred thousands of voters if they have barred them as candidates.

Listen to this:

> The courts should not be called upon to settle a question upon which there can be no reasonable grounds for disagreements.

I commend that especially to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], who looked so solemn the other day when he differed from this view.

Senator BLACK continued:

> It is a situation which calls for the best thought and action of all Democrats who respect the ancient rights of citizenship and who love the traditions and principles of the Democratic Party.

Senators, is not that a strong appeal for fair play and justice? How different that note sounds from the present utterances of my one-time friend who pleads the cause of the contestee on this occasion.

Then I added:

> Mr. Bankhead had read Senator BLACK's statement, and he had notice from Judge William H. Thomas, the only supreme court judge in Alabama who passed upon the merits of the case, and the primary provided for in Alabama by the State committee was illegal, null, and void, and Mr. Bankhead's name was never legally upon the senatorial ballot in Alabama.

Some Senators do not want to pass on this primary question. It must be passed on. I hope the Senate will have the courage to pass on it. I hope the buck will not be passed here, using the parlance of the street. I want Senators under their oaths to grapple with this problem and decide this question: Was that primary legal or illegal? We did not hesitate—myself among the number—to go after Frank Smith, a Republican. We did not hesitate to go after William Vare, a Republican. And I dare say, just speaking amongst ourselves, not to go any further, that if Bankhead had been a Republican, my friends over here on the Democratic side would have been almost solidly in favor of taking him out.

Who warned us against that thing called party spirit? George Washington, in his Farewell Address, warned against it. He said that party spirit was a most dangerous thing, and that unless inspired by love of right principles, and a desire to promote clean and honest government, it led to all sorts of extravagances, of fraud and corruption, and would result in the destruction of human liberty. Washington warned us against that. When W. P. G. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, helped, with Wall Street, to bring on a panic in 1920, I was urged not to fight him because he was a Democrat and had been appointed by a Democrat.

My answer was that all crooks look alike to me, Democrats and Republicans. I led that fight single-handed and alone. When I started out there were four Senators with me in the fight—Senator TRAMMELL, the able Senator from Florida, who, whether he agrees with you or not, has always had a sense of justice and fair play; Senator FLETCHER, of Florida, who has become an institution in that State, God bless him, the able, upstanding statesman, he was with me; and Senator Simmons made the third that I recall. When I wound up that fight, there were 57 Senators who would not vote for Harding's confirmation. I drove him off of the Federal Reserve Board, and I am proud of the fight I made. It was one of the greatest in my career. I fight a crooked Democrat just as I fight a crooked Republican, and I want this case passed upon on its merits.

Senators, the primary was legal or illegal, and the Senate must decide. In the case of Parrish versus Powers in Kentucky, Parrish was nominated in the primary as the law required. The committee through another way put Powers's name on the ticket, a Democrat. Powers got the election and beat Parrish. Parrish contested. The Supreme Court of Kentucky held that Powers's name was never legally on the ticket; and although he got a majority of the votes cast, that Parrish was entitled to the office, and the court gave him the office.

We have legal processes in this country. We ought to have. We have law and order and legal methods of getting on the ticket, and—get this, Senators—a nomination in my State is necessary to get on the legal ballot. You have to get on there as the law prescribes. If you hold, as the able Senator from California did on yesterday, and as the Senator from Delaware holds, that this primary was illegal, Mr. Bankhead takes his hat and goes back to the State and I serve in this body to which I was honestly elected in 1930, November 4.

Senators, there was never before a campaign like it in my State. We had a crusade. They could not buy the voters who were supporting me. The work was done at the election and after the election at the courthouse. There is where the skulduggery was done to me. Senator BLACK says that if all this crooked work went on, that I am accusing some of my managers. No; but I will tell you what I was advised of even before the election, that Bankhead's friends had some stalking horses saying they were for Heflin and if they were in there as managers he would get a fair count, and they got appointed managers for me. The Lord have mercy on me! Some of those fellows credited to me helped to steal the election for Bankhead.

Down at Tuscaloosa, where Judge Brandon is the probate judge, our witnesses swore that in the biggest precinct in the county, with six or seven boxes, a Democrat, my friend, was sitting in there with two Bankhead managers. They have three. This fellow was on the job and he was courageous and the election had not run over half an hour until they whispered around and called the judge out, and he said, "You come out of there," and he took him out and he put another man in, and Judge Wilkinson said, "Whom was the other man for?" He said he was a Bankhead man. That is the way I had a fair election—all three of them Bankhead men. I never had a manager in many of the places. Sometimes they gave me a clerk and called that representation, and the clerk sitting there with his eyes on the paper writing down names they called. He did not know whether they called them right or not. And so the game went on. They did the work in the general election that was started in the State executive committee and carried on in the primary.

NOW, what happened in the primary? Mr. Bankhead threw his hands up and hollered to the Nye committee that Thompson was spending a great deal of money, sending out literature to 400,000 voters. He wanted the committee to come down there and see if they could not stop Thompson. The bunch that represented the State committee was too slick for anybody to catch them, but they wanted Thompson headed off. Then Mr. Bankhead was appealing for Federal interference, for which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] has criticized me for asking the United States Senate to investigate the senatorial election in Alabama.

That is not all. In 1926, when Mr. BLACK was a candidate and Mr. Bankhead was running against him, he wrote a letter to the Reed special committee of the Senate, calling on them to come and investigate Mr. Bankhead and the others running against him, and was kind enough to say about Mr. Bankhead that it would not do any good to elect him; that if the Senate investigated him they would not seat him. In 1926 BLACK wanted help when the machine was in operation in my State. I have never courted its favor. I have fought it and always whipped it; and whipped it in 1930, and what did they say? "We do not care how big his crowds are. We do not care how many votes he gets. We have got the machinery, and we will get the election."

I have a number of witnesses here, Senators, who testified that they heard the Bankhead followers saying that they were going to steal the election from me. But before I get to that, I want to show you the most convincing thing in it all, if you needed anything to convince you that the primary of 1930 was illegal.

The Bankhead legislature, following that election, adopted an amendment giving the State committee the power to fix two separate and distinct qualifications, one for candidate and one for voter. They adopted that since the election of 1930. The statute now provides that the committee can have separate and distinct qualifications. Senators, as honest men, what conclusion are we to draw from that—honest, intelligent Senators—that they never had the power in 1930, but to make sure this time when they read me out again that they did have the power and to make sure if the Senate did declare the primary illegal that the statute as now amended would stand hard and fast for such purposes in the future.

There never was as much skulduggery practiced in any single State that I know anything about. I will put those affidavits in, but here is the way they read. A witness says, "I heard So-and-so, a Bankhead supporter, say that Heflin will get the votes, but what they don't buy they will steal." We could have produced probably 500 witnesses over the State who would swear that—one of them from Judge Arthur Chilton, confirmed by this Senate not long ago as district attorney for the middle district of Alabama. He had come in from the field Saturday before the election on Tuesday. Mr. Tom Knight was then running for attorney general, and he had no opposition; we did not oppose the State ticket or the county ticket. We just had three candidates in the field. There were two or three county tickets out. Mr. Knight, the attorney general, said to Judge Chilton, "What do you think of the election?" He said, "Heflin's majority will be between 50,000 and 100,000. What did Mr. Knight say to that? He shook his head and said, "No; we have got the machinery and we know how to use it."

We expected to put Mr. Todd, a newspaperman, on the witness stand. He is sitting in the gallery now. We expected him to swear that Russell Kent, correspondent for the Montgomery Advertiser and the Birmingham News, supported Mr. Bankhead. He went to Alabama and came back two or three weeks before the election. He said, "They have not got a chance to beat Heflin. He will win his fight in a walk." He went back again and returned just a few days before the election. He said, "They have got it fixed. They are going to get him now."

Oh, Senators, you would not think all these things took place when you heard the speech of the Senator from Alabama—the junior Senator from Alabama—[Mr. BLACK], because I am entitled to the senior part of it myself. [Laughter.]

Senator BLACK told you that the State committee members had been reelected. Certainly. Whom did they have to run before? The same machine that read me out. It was the greatest machine arrangement you ever saw. Of course they were reelected in that circle where 125,000 Democrats operated and the other two hundred thousand and odd stayed out. We had nothing to do with it; we could not get in as candidate and refused to go in as voter. They would not let anybody in there to vote except the fellows who would vote for Bankhead. Of course they were renominated.

But it will not always be thus. If the Senate will do its duty, you will sound the death knell of that machine in my State. Human rights and liberties do not appeal to that machine. Right and justice have no place in their program. "Put it over! Put it over!" That is the slogan of that bunch. "Put down the coin." Do you know what I said all over that State? I said that I believed the ring spent $50,000 on that committee. I believe it, as God is my judge—bought like sheep in the market place to barter away a man's rights. I have been in public life since my early young manhood, never obtained an office except through just, clean, and fair means, would spurn an office any other way. I have always fought in the open, and I have been rewarded by the people of my State. But when this effort was made to deprive them of their right to nominate me in their party, I unsheathed my sword and went into the field and fought them to the uttermost. What happened?

In the last 19 days of the campaign this Bankhead bunch followed my speaking and kept close count of those who heard me, and they reported that 69,000 heard me in the last 19 days of the campaign. What do you suppose happened with their crowd? They were addressing 100 to 150 in the courthouse, and they were the same old fellows that went to all the meetings. They were like the fellow that Bill Howard, of Georgia, used to tell about in the House. The old fellow would get drunk every summer, and they would turn him out of church and take him back and rebaptize him. They said they baptized him so often at the same place in the creek that all the old, horny-headed fish recognized him when he came back. [Laughter.] So they were the same fellows they mustered up to come in and hear the speakers and clap their hands, and everywhere I spoke they had to have an amplifier, and there was not a hall in the State that could hold them.

Fellow cit—fellow Senators, what did that mean? I was about to address you as "fellow citizens." Some of you will be soon. [Laughter.] There is nothing personal in that to either side.

What happened? Judge Wilkinson and I went up to Gadsden. I was going to speak in the adjoining county. They had big placards saying the big guns, Bankhead and Miller would speak.

The radio was spreading the news out over seven or eight counties. The time for meeting arrived in a court room which seats about 480 people. There were about 435 in it, notwithstanding all this advertising over the radio and in the press. Judge Wilkinson and I sat in a hotel a hundred yards away. Mr. Bankhead was up speaking. He was telling them how grateful he was for this great outpouring of the people, talking over the radio to nine counties. Just at that juncture the chairman, Jerome Fuller, an Alabama Power Co. man, jumped up and said, "Do not leave, gentlemen; there are plenty of vacant seats in the rear." [Laughter.]

You have heard of hired funerals, have you not, where, when a fellow dies, they employ mourners to walk behind the casket in the hearse? Well, that is what it looked like in that State. They had to get them up and drum them up to go out to a meeting.

How do you suppose they tantalized my forces—the brave crusading men and women of my State? They said, "We do not give a d—— how many votes he gets; he will not get the certificate of election." That is the atmosphere in which I made that fight. You know we got a lead on some of the work they were doing. One of them was we got notes to the effect that they would "put me on the spot," and there was a big blue-pencil mark across that and in big letters, "No." They were kind enough not to have me murdered. "No; do not assassinate him." Why? Do you want me to tell you why? They had already had notice from my side that if anything happened to me it would be "good-by"; and it would have been good-by to some of them.

This primary was cut and dried against me and for Mr. Bankhead. Mr. Bankhead ran against me in 1924. He wrote, I have been told, 15,000 letters with return postage and got back 11,000 telling him not to oppose me. He did not oppose me and I was nominated without opposition.

In 1928 I supported Hoover and Mr. Bankhead supported Smith. I said, "Give me a fair primary, and if the Democrats want to punish me for my course, I will take it like a man, with head erect and light upon my face"; but no; they said, "If you let him in, the Democrats will nominate him." That is what they have done; they have denied self-government in my State; they have denied the right of Democrats to select the candidate they wanted to select after inviting them into the primary to vote.

Senators will remember that in the old days of Rome, just before Rome tottered and fell amongst her beautiful hills and died, the decree went forth establishing two classes of people—the plebeians and the patricians. The patrician could vote and hold office, but the plebeian could only vote; he could not hold office. In Alabama they made me and those who supported Hoover of the plebeian class. They said, "You can vote, but you can not hold office"; but to the others, the Bankhead group, including Senator BLACK, they said, "You can vote and hold office." They set up that distinction in my State. It is un-American, undemocratic, unjust, unfair, inexcusable, and indefensible; that is what it is. Yet they tell you that it is all right; that the committee had a right to order any kind of primary. I was utterly astounded at the position taken by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE]. I do not see how a man of his ability could get off on the wrong foot so badly.

Senators do not understand the case. The Mayfield case is not at all like my case. What have they done in my case? Here [exhibiting], Senators, are the ballots. They are about from 14 to 16 inches long and ten inches wide. The have got the Democratic rooster and the Liberty Bell that we adopted as our emblem.

The slot in the ballot box was about from 4 to 4½ inches long and less than a half-inch wide. In hundreds of instances those ballots were found just as clean and white as that [holding up a blank sheet of white paper], with the stubs untouched, no initials on them, folded in the middle, and lying in the box in sheaves. Could those ballots have been put into the box through the slot? No. How did they get in there? They got in there by the box being unlocked and they being put in by somebody who had no right to put them in. Those ballots are there in sheaves by the hundreds.

What are you going to consider that to mean—that they were trying to purify elections in my State; that they were sitting up of nights trying to give me a fair deal? Oh, how they did love me [laughter], when they were sitting up, losing sleep, monkeying with ballots and fixing them up for their dear friend, John H. Bankhead.

The State committee had ordained that he must be nominated; they manipulated it and fixed it. They ordained then that everybody should be whipped into line and I must be crushed. They saw that could not be done. In county after county the officials told them, "It is not worth while to fight him; he is going over." They said, "If you do not get into line"—listen—"If you do not get into line and help us to beat him, beat him any way, we will read you out. He is an independent running outside of the party." Before they got through with it they had the probate judge and the sheriff and the circuit clerk in 61 out of 67 counties openly, boldly, and brazenly supporting Mr. Bankhead and fighting me; and the word went down the line, "If you can not get it any other way, take it"; and they took it.

What else do we find? We find ballots by the hundreds folded clean and tight. They had never been handled; they were lying in the boxes like that, in stacks [indicating]. What does that mean? That means that that box was fixed at the courthouse and swapped for the box that came in from the precinct. They are there; they speak for themselves. What does it mean? It means what I tell you.

Now, they marked many of these ballots, we find, like this. They were fixed in the pads. You do not vote that way. They tear off a ballot each time a man or a woman comes to vote, and the voter takes the ballot, marks it, and hands it in. These were fixed in the pads. I will show you what happened. They marked that ballot [indicating] in the circle under the rooster, and there is an indentation in the circle under the rooster on the next ticket, showing it was fixed and marked in the courthouse before the voters ever went to the polls. What did they do on the second ballot. They did not follow that course; they marked a cross mark in front of Bankhead's name. They alternated each time. Do you know what the Bible says about that? It says: "Be sure your sins will find you out." So when you raise that ticket [indicating] there is the indentation on the next ballot in front of Bankhead's name. Then they marked again under the rooster, and there is the indentation in the circle under the rooster, and on down we find that to be true. Senators, there never were as many varieties of methods employed to steal an election as were employed to steal this one from me.

I will tell you of another system which was employed. They changed a lot of the ballots that were for me by rubbing out the cross mark for me, and showing that a straight State ticket was voted, without voting for Senator. There were 5,000 of those. So I lost 5,000 votes by that method.

On tickets where the voters used a pencil mark for me, the mark has been erased. That is another method they employed. But this indentation business I am telling you about was smooth work. They never thought anybody would ever catch that up; but Judge Chilton, recently appointed district attorney, caught it. He took the first ticket off and, going to the light, saw that indentation on the second ticket, and so on. He traced I do not know how many hundreds of them.

What else? These issues were not involved in the Mayfield case; not at all. They have never been involved in anybody's else case that I know anything about.

Senator BLACK says that I failed to take steps to keep Senator Bankhead's name off the ticket in the general election. Senators, how weak and miserable is that argument! If the primary was void, it is dead; dead from the beginning. I could not breathe life into it if it was illegal—not voidable, but void; and it was. A supreme court judge said it was. Senator BLACK says it was. I did not have to take any steps. The law would not recognize a void thing, and the Senate certainly will not recognize a void thing. His nomination is not worth 5 cents. After all they have done to procure his nomination and election it falls flat; it has not a leg to stand on—not one.

Now, what else? The certificates of election. There must be three of them, one of which is sealed and sent to the probate judge. What is that for? It is to be used if the one returned to the canvassing board is lost or not presented. Another one must be posted at the polling place. But what do we find? We find Mr. Bankhead's friends saying that they had to go into these ballot boxes to get the certificate of election. The law in my State does not require that; it is not done. He says that is why these boxes were opened. Senator BLACK emphasized to you that there were 900 boxes out of 2,043 that were sealed when the agents of the Senate got them. Well, what does that mean? It disputes the other proposition that they had to open them in order to get the certificates of election. How did they get those certificates of election? Answer that. How did they get the certificates of election from the 900 boxes that were sealed when we got them? Is not that an interesting point? One of two things happened. They got the certificate as the law requires, sent separately to the canvassing board and to the probate judge, or they had been fixed and sealed and locked at the courthouse already to be turned over to the agents of the Senate when they went down there.

Now, Senators, if you recall when I brought this contest to your attention here in January, 1931, I said I wanted these ballots seized as quickly as possible. Senator BLACK took the position that the boxes were not being opened. You will remember that little colloquy we had. I insisted they were opening them, that they were going into the boxes. They had notice of my contest at midnight on the night of the election. As soon as it dawned on us that they had stolen the election in 57 counties out of 67 I gave notice of a contest; and Senator BLACK said "No." He sent a telegram or two down there to resent this "reflection" that I was making on the State.

Oh, how he and Senator Bankhead have grown enthusiastic about how I was "reflecting" on the State! I am not reflecting on the State. God knows I would not reflect on that dear State. I was born in it, and in its sacred soil sleep the remains of my ancestors. That State has honored me with nearly every office within its gift, and I am not through yet. The people of that State have been for me. They have been kind and generous to me. Reflect on that State? No! I would give my life to protect its good name and its honor. I am fighting for my State.

I am fighting for the humble factory girl who stands all day at the loom and weaves, who was intimidated by the bosses of the mill to vote for Bankhead against me. I am fighting for the boys who wear lamps on their caps and go down in the bowels of the earth to dig coal and iron. I am fighting for the farmer in the furrowed field, the merchant, the clerk in the store. I am fighting for the school-teachers, who were browbeaten in wholesale fashion, telling them they got their jobs from the Democrats, and if they did not vote for Bankhead they would lose them. I am fighting for a fair deal for these people all down the line. I am fighting for the day when the voters can walk up to the polls unafraid, unintimidated, undisturbed, cast their votes, and express their free will at the ballot box in every precinct in my State.

That is what my sin consists of—fighting for the good of the people of Alabama, fighting for the good of the principles of my party; not party machinery, crooked and corrupt, but honest, clean, political principles in Alabama.

What do you suppose they did during that senatorial campaign? They turned citizens down on jobs. They would ask them, "Who are you going to vote for—Heflin or Bankhead?" "Heflin." "Nothing doing!"

What did they do when the election was over? The governor's office had printed a questionnaire that was given to every man and woman who applied for a job in the highway department, where the Federal Government furnishes half the money to build roads. The fifth question was, "For whom did you vote for Senator in 1930?" The State government's machinery has been drawn into this matter, and they are making people disclose the secrecy of their ballots, and tell the machine fellows how they voted. That is what happened; and when people said they voted for me, they said, "There is nothing doing."

One fellow down in Randolph County—my native county—a preacher with two or three children, asked them to give him work. He and his family were about to starve. Their highway man, who supported Bankhead, told him, "We have got your number. You will not get any work from us"; and this man of God was turned away. There is nothing so pitiless and cruel as this machine in my State.

Now, I want to touch on the question of absentee ballots for a moment.

I have written to several States to find out how many absentee ballots were cast in 1930. The secretaries of state write me that the only way to get that information is from the counties, and I did not have time to do that; but I got them from Arkansas, most of them—half of them. There are 75 counties. Forty counties voted 1,200 absentee ballots, making about 2,400 for the State out of 75 counties. Arkansas has seven Members of Congress and we have nine. There is that difference in population. How many do you suppose they voted in Alabama for Bankhead? More than ten thousand!

I challenge Mr. Bankhead, Senator BLACK, or anybody else to show me another Southern State that ever in its whole history voted as many as half that number. You can not do it! You can not do it!

Senators, there never was such a dragnet arrangement sent out to get in absentee ballots. Why, we showed by three or four witnesses that they employed a man in Shelby County to go into Jefferson County, where Birmingham is, and get up a hundred and odd names, applications signed, sworn to, absentee ballots fixed, and returned up there in wholesale. That is not disproven. It is not disputed. They went out after them everywhere; and in their enthusiasm and anxiety to get votes for Mr. Bankhead what do you reckon they did? They went to New Orleans and voted a woman who never knew that she was being voted. She lived in Bullock County, Ala., 14 years ago—15 years, now. She had been living in Louisiana all these years and is a voter there. We sent out questionnaires and this woman got one. "Did you request a ballot?" It is against the law to provide them without a written request in my State. "Did you request this absentee ballot? Did you get one? If so, for whom did you vote?" "I never requested one. I never received one. I never voted. I am not a voter in Alabama."

And yet her ballot is over yonder now in the sacred ballot box, marked for John H. Bankhead for United States Senator! And yet the Senator from Alabama, Mr. BLACK, tells you that we have had opportunity to prove this and that and we have not done it! I answer him by saying there are 1,500 witnesses, and maybe more, that I would have called to show the most corrupt condition that ever existed in any State in a senatorial election.

He told you I had this information, or a chance to correct these names as marked for Bankhead and me, since September. Let me tell you what occurred.

The appropriation gave out in August, and Congress did not meet until December. We could not do a thing. We could not take testimony; and those working on the ballots here worked on without their salaries until Congress could convene. That is how we have been handicapped. Then I told you what occurred at Birmingham, when they stopped us, shut us off, under the suggestion of Senator GEORGE and Senator BRATTON; and Senator Black has never protested against that, nor has Mr. Bankhead. I really think, just between us, it was done at the instance of Mr. Bankhead, the contestee.

The contestant has rights. He has a right to have a fair deal. Senator BLACK said in the beginning that he wanted a thorough investigation if they were going to have one. We have not had it; and he was making his final speech the other day, when I do not suppose he had any idea that I would have a chance to say a word in the Senate.

What did Mr. Aarhus say in his report? It is in my letter to the committee, begging for time and money to take the evidence. What did Mr. Aarhus say? He said Logan Martin, the brother of the president of the Alabama Power Co., was present in a meeting when Mr. Bankhead's candidacy was indorsed for the Senate.

What else did Mr. Aarhus say? I am prepared to put upon the witness stand 300 reputable witnesses to establish almost universal corruption in the State. I have not had a chance to take a line of that testimony. I could not get Mr. Aarhus. Senators GEORGE and BRATTON would not let us have anybody who had had anything to do with the Nye committee.

My God, Senators! Does it not come with bad taste for them to stand up here, as the Senator from New Mexico did yesterday, and tell you that I had had ample opportunity to be heard, and had gone into all these things, when you had not heard a word about what I have been telling you to-day, and you never would have heard it if I had not been permitted to speak? It is unfair to me. It is unfair to the people of the State. It is unfair to the Senate. It is unfair to the Government. If you put yourselves on record as approving this bastard primary in my State, you have sanctioned that sort of rotten, corrupt conduct for other States. You have set a dangerous precedent.

The way for you to put down this sort of business is to stamp it out now. The time to treat a cancer is in its incipient state. The time to treat disease is as soon as you find it has hold of you. Kill it out. Say to every man who runs for the Senate, "We want that office open to the humblest boy, whether he is a rail splitter like Abe Lincoln"—the great humanitarian statesman who walked from the rail-splitter's place in the woods to the highest office in the gift of the greatest people in all the world. "We want that office open to them. Let them aspire to it. Do not let somebody tell them, 'It is useless for you to run. The machine is for this man,' or 'the machine is for that man.'" They are already telling them in my State, those who have courage and independence of spirit, "You had better take warning from what we did to Heflin. We will do the same thing to you"; and the result of it is to cow, to stifle, to stamp out the spirit of courage and true Americanism that we have in this country.

It makes not much difference to you, as far as individuals are concerned, whether Bankhead serves or I serve. The country could get along without either one of us; but my God! how much depends on keeping this office spotless, clean, far above the crowd of corruptionists and the miasma of the plain. Hold it aloft and say, "If you aspire to that office, if you come into this body, you must come with clean hands. There must not be a spot on your certificate, and not a rotten thing in your record of election." When you do that, you will serve your country.

Do you know what happened in the Frank Smith case? You served notice on the money kings, "You can buy the office, but you can not have it." What effect does that have? "We will not put up the money, because they will not let us have the office if we buy it." That is the answer to it, and that is the appeal that is coming to you to put this thing down every time it shows its head.

If you do not want to say that the primary was illegal and that Bankhead should be unseated and I should be seated, that it was tied up with the corruption and stealing of the general election, refer it to the people of my State, where we will have to have a special election in three months, and let the people of Alabama say. That will settle this question once and for all; and with the skullduggery that they have practiced down there, and the people being acquainted with it, it will be exceedingly hard for them to repeat it and then the places that know the contestee now would soon know him no more forever. What is wrong in that proposition?

Mr. President, I am not going to be able to close in 15 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the contestant will expire at 2.10 o'clock.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wonder if I could get a half hour more?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the limitation of two hours be dispensed with, and that Mr. Heflin be allowed to conclude his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be entered. Mr. Heflin will proceed. [Manifestations in the galleries.]

The Chair must admonish the occupants that they are here by the courtesy of the Senate and must maintain order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I appreciate this courtesy and kindness on the part of a man with whom I have served for many years in both branches of Congress, and I am writing a chapter about him in my book, "Courage and Cowardice in Congress." [Laughter.] "Courage and Cowardice in Congress"—a euphonious title, and it will be a truthful document when I get through with it; and I am drawing a very good picture of the Senator from Nebraska. I saw him when he first commenced to fight "Cannonism" in the House. He was a progressive, able, brave fighter then, and he has kept it up all down the line. I believe he is about the only one I know of who has been right on the trail all the time, the old "strike" dog from Nebraska.

Mr. President, there are many things that I will not have time to touch on, and I am not going to impose upon the Senate any longer than I have to. I want to cite the Senate to an editorial from the Southern Labor Review, published at Birmingham. I do this because the minority report of Senators GEORGE and BRATTON of the subcommittee quotes an editorial from it following the election in 1930, and that editorial said that the election was over, that it was fair and that we should all accept the results and go on down the road rejoicing. That was before they knew what had been carried on in the nighttime on the night of the election and in the days that followed all over the State.

This is what they wrote a year from that time:

[From the Southern Labor Review, December 2, 1931]

THE SENATORIAL SITUATION

Next Monday will bring the Heflin-Bankhead contest before the United States Senate. The eyes of the Nation will be focused on the Democrats in that body more especially.

It is the duty of every Senator, but more especially the Democrats, to see that no one becomes a Member of that body who obtained his certificate of election through law violation or fraud or corruption. The Senate and the Senate alone can drive fraud and corrupt practices from senatorial elections by stopping the beneficiaries of such practices at the door of the Senate.

The Senate in recent years has shown itself to be keenly sensitive on this all-important question. It has courageously challenged and rebuked political crooks and corruptionists by holding their candidate at the threshold of the Senate. Democrats contributed materially to those results. The purity of the ballot and the integrity of the ballot box must be preserved inviolate. At a time when Democracy is making a bid for national confidence the country will await with interest the attitude of Democrats toward the Alabama situation. Democrats and Republicans alike should stand solidly against the man and the forces that seek to obtain a seat in the Senate by illegal and unlawful methods and the practice of fraud, coercion, and corruption in senatorial elections.

The Alabama senatorial contest is between two Democrats—Senator J. Thomas Heflin and Mr. John H. Bankhead.

It will be interesting to observe in this case whether Democratic Senators are as willing to bar a Democratic holder of a certificate of election as in the past they have been willing to bar a Republican in similar circumstances.

Mr. Bankhead's nomination and election were notoriously illegal, high-handed, and corrupt. The Nation will be interested in what course Democratic Senators will now take. It seems to us that they should show as much—yes; and more—anxiety to punish corruption when their own party is concerned than when the charges involve the opposing party.

I have taken that position myself. It is my duty to drive crooked Democrats out, not to shield and harbor them; to keep my party clean. When I do that, I am serving my party and serving the country.

I ask again, suppose a Republican had come here as Mr. Bankhead did, under a primary law violated as he has violated the primary law in Alabama, and it could be shown that the ballot boxes were in the hands of Republican supporters all over the State, that they had opened and entered them, that ballots were not self-proving, that some were numbered and some unnumbered; what do you reckon would have been done? Again I say, just between us, they would have voted him out of here before breakfast. I would have voted to turn him out myself, whether Democrat or Republican. If you show me that they opened over half the ballot boxes in a State, when the law required them to be sealed and locked and kept inviolate, to be used in a contest, opened up and displayed, as they were deposited on the night of the election, I would vote to turn him out. He has no business here. That is the situation to a "T" right here to-day.

Yet my one-time friend, HUGO BLACK, stood up here and told you they were not opening any ballot boxes down there. I do not think Senator BLACK really knew they were doing that. He did not know. He is just like a lot of good people down there who said to me, "Tom, I went down and voted and everything looked all right. I did not see them stealing any ballots and running off with them. I think the election was fair." I said, "They do not do it that way. They work in the night time, when you sleep. They call the ballots off wrong and the clerks put them down, and when they get through doing that, they tally up what the clerks have put down, and the ballots are put in the boxes and the tally sheet or the certificate shows 350 for Bankhead and 150 for me, and the ballots will show 400 for me and 100 for Bankhead. They are in the boxes. One certificate is put up outside. The other is sent to the courthouse, and the ballot box is opened to make the ballots correspond with the certificate." I said, "Is not that nice?" That is what happened to me, a thousand and odd ballot boxes opened and burglarized. Yet the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] just waves that aside and says, "Why, just minor irregularities." It is a violation of the law, and there is a $500 fine for these violations. There are hundreds of them.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] just waved that aside as being merely directory. Senators, directory statutes never carry a penalty. When a statute carries a penalty it is a mandatory act, and these are mandatory acts, not directory.

I suppose they would say, "Well, what is stealing ballots among friends?" [Laughter.] They needed the ballots, they knew where they were, they knew how to fix them, and they did fix them. That is what happened.

Here is an editorial from down there in south Alabama which shows just the situation. This paper could not be biased. It has nothing to do with the contest, except as it throws light on a rotten condition in this matter in the State. The editorial reads:

In looking over the names in beat 7—

This is down in Geneva County—

In looking over the names in beat 7 we found the name of our old friend, E. S. Sheehan, who used to work in the News-Herald office. He has been dead about five years. This put us to thinking, and upon further investigation we found the names of nine persons whom we remember to be dead. On the same list in beat 7 we found the names of 25 persons who do not reside in the county, and 25 others who do not reside in the State; some of them have been gone 10 years or more.

We do not think we are sufficiently acquainted in beat 7 to detect the names of all who are dead or all the absentees; but on the basis of the number we detected we estimate that in the published list for the whole county are the names of 60 dead people and the names of 334 nonresidents—394—enough to hold the balance of power in the usual election in this county.

That is in a little county, and that condition existed in 1930, and those people were voted in that election. That condition obtained all over the State. They have not purged the polling lists in years and years and years. The case of the Louisiana woman shows that. She left Bullock County 14 years ago, but they are still voting her in Alabama, and she does not even know it. They are so rude and discourteous they do not even let a lady know when she is voting an absentee ballot in an election in my State. [Laughter.]

Senators, it is worse than you thought it was. Senator BRATTON and Senator BLACK told us that this would have to be a state-wide conspiracy; that these things seemed to be general. Certainly; that is our contention. They never intended to steal in a few counties and leave the others alone. They worked the system out. It is the smoothest scheme on record. Of course, they worked it out. Listen! Senator BLACK stood here and showed you how in north Alabama Bankhead got fifty-odd per cent of the votes and I got forty-odd per cent; in south Alabama he got fifty-odd per cent and I got forty-odd per cent; in east Alabama he got fifty-odd per cent and I got forty-odd per cent, and in the western part he got fifty-odd per cent and forty-odd per cent were for me.

Do you not know that it takes a smooth fellow in arithmetic to do that? People were voted just as they wanted to vote them. In some places it would be almost solid for me and a light vote for Bankhead, and in other places vice versa; but fifty-odd and forty-odd all over the State.

They got that idea from the gambling machines. You go into one of these gambling establishments and drop a quarter or half a dollar or a dollar in, you turn a crank, and your money is gone. A fellow will say, "I will try that again," and puts in another half dollar and cranks the machine, and that half dollar is gone. The proprietor says, "Keep on; your luck will change after a while." He keeps feeding his quarters and halves in until finally it will shell out 75 cents to him. He gets it and says, "My golly, I had better go before they take my clothes." [Laughter.]

That is what happened in Alabama with the machine. The gambling house always wins. You win sometimes a little, but when the day is done and the machine is waited on and the money taken out, the house makes money every day. Why? Because it is a machine that will not let the house lose; and that is the kind of a machine they had for Bankhead and Heflin. They had it fixed so that whatever the vote was, it was running true to form in the four sections. Bankhead was always on top and I was on the bottom. But in the actual ballots cast I was on top. When they counted out the ballots Bankhead was winner.

Senators, it was the quietest situation following that election that you ever witnessed. No drum beat or sounding of the fife there. All was quiet and calm. You could see the Bankhead followers grouped around the courthouses. They were not clapping their hands for joy; they were not hurrahing and celebrating. They were quiet, whispering around in little knots and groups; there was no rejoicing.

They phoned from all over the State to me and to Judge Wilkinson at Birmingham, "We never saw anything like it. The other side is not rejoicing; there is no handclapping, no cheering and applauding." And old man Reese, down at Eutaw, Ala., wrote me a letter that explains it. He said: "Did you ever know of a thief going down the street in possession of stolen goods hollering about it?"

That is the situation we had. They had stolen it, and they did not holler. Then what? They said: "Now, Tom, you are a brave warrior. You made a good fight. You ought to be satisfied getting 100,000 votes on an independent ticket." I said, "Yes; I got over 200,000." They said, "If you will be a good fellow and take your medicine, we will be back with you in 1932. You go out March 4, 1931, and just rest until 1932, and there will be no trouble at all. We will just put you right over." I would not accept the deal.

They said, "Bankhead has 50,000 majority. You will have a hard time overcoming that." I said, "Yes; they could have given him 100,000 and got the votes from where they got the 50,000, just as easy as they could have given him 50,000. I am going to take it to the Senate. We have a place, thank God, where sworn men from sovereign States of the Union will go to the bottom of it. I am going to have the ballot boxes taken to Washington. I am going to take the election papers up there. I am going to have a thorough investigation, and when it is over you will be vindicated, I will be vindicated, and Mr. Bankhead and his crowd will be repudiated."

But what have we had done? Shut off before our case is more than one-third finished, denied the right to produce rebuttal evidence, or to go on taking testimony to prove the things we had laid out to prove. That is the situation we have.

I want to read a line about the law on mandamusing. Senators, you who are interested in this law proposition, listen to this statute from Alabama. Section 549 of the Alabama Code provides as follows:

No jurisdiction exists in or shall be exercised by any judge, court, or officer exercising chancery powers to entertain any cause or proceeding for ascertaining the legality, conduct, or results of any election except so far as authority to do so shall be specially and specifically enumerated and set down by statute; and any injunction, process, order, or decree from any court, judge, or officer in the exercising of chancery powers, whereby the results of any elections are sought to be inquired into, questioned, or affected, or whereby any certificate of election is sought to be inquired into or questioned, save as may be specially and specifically enumerated and set down by statute, shall be null and void, and shall not be enforced by any officer or obeyed by any person; and should any judge or other officer hereafter undertake to fine or in anywise deal with any person for disobeying any such prohibited injunction, process, order, or decree, such attempt shall be null and void—and an appeal shall lie forthwith therefrom to the supreme court then sitting, or next to sit, without bond, and such proceeding shall be suspended by force of such appeal, and the notice to be given of such appeal shall be five days.

That is the State statute reply to Senator BLACK—

Why, Mr. President, you can not get out a mandamus in my State against a primary. That matter was all discussed in the conference where Senator BLACK sat and they agreed that injunction was the process, and that was employed. One supreme court judge sustained it, and the other four merely passed the question by by saying they had no jurisdiction over the case.

There is another matter I want to bring to your attention. Here is a letter from Judge Wilkinson, my chief counsel, to me, April 24:

The press reports of debates in the Senate indicate that some attention is being paid to the proposition that you did not take any steps through the courts to prevent Mr. Bankhead's name from being on the ballot in the general election, or rather I should say that Mr. Bankhead's supporters are apparently stressing that proposition. I do not believe that any lawyer who has studied the case would claim that there is any merit in that suggestion.

First, get it clearly before the Senate that under the law of Alabama nomination is a condition precedent to the appearance of one's name on the ballot. This is not the law in many States of the Union. It is the law of Alabama. It does not make a particle of difference whether anybody raises the question before the election. The law raises the question at all times and under all circumstances. There is no authority of law for placing a person's name on the ballot in a general election unless the person whose name was printed on the ballot was nominated in one of the ways prescribed by the statute of the State.

Section 462 of the Code of Alabama is the sole authority for officials in Alabama printing the names of persons on the ballot in a general election. That section of the code limits the authority of the officer to cause to be printed on the ballot to the names of persons who have been nominated in one of the ways prescribed by statute. If Mr. Bankhead was not nominated in the way and manner prescribed by statute, then there was no authority of law for printing his name on the ballot in the general election. There was not only no authority for printing his name on the ballot but it was a violation of law to do so.

Mr. President, I shall include the remainder of that letter in my remarks.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Second. If Mr. Bankhead's nomination was void, because he was not nominated in the kind of a primary recognized by the laws of the State, as Judge Thomas so aptly expressed it, then no action or failure to act on your part could impart any vitality to a thing that never came into existence.

Judge Thomas very clearly holds, on page 267 of the Two hundred and twenty-first Alabama Reports, "that the primary election called is not the kind of primary that may be held under the law and at public expense in the State of Alabama." If the Senate agrees with that, and it must do so or repudiate Senator BLACK, who agreed with Judge Thomas, and Judge Anderton, who supported Mr. Bankhead and who is now running against Senator BLACK, then Mr. Bankhead was not nominated. The alleged primary was an abortive affair. No nomination could come from it.

Not having been nominated, the law denied Mr. Bankhead a place on the ticket in the general election.

To argue that any failure on your part to prevent his name from being printed on the ticket affects the matter one way or the other, is to argue that your conduct must determine whether Mr. Bankhead's name was lawfully on the ballot in the general election, instead of the law of the land determining that fact.

It was up to Mr. Bankhead to get his name lawfully on the ticket or suffer the consequences of his failure so to do. You had a right to get your name on the ticket and run as a candidate before the people. Your candidacy did not in any way amount to a waiver of Mr. Bankhead's failure to get his name on the ticket. You could not waive it if you wanted to. The law and not some candidate determines whether a man's name is lawfully printed on the ballot. A failure to object does not change the proposition in any way. A thing that is void is void. Mr. Bankhead was either lawfully on the ballot or he was not lawfully on the ballot, and no conduct on your part can properly be looked to in determining whether his name was lawfully printed on the ballot. What the law said he must do, and what he in fact did, are the factors that settle that question.

You will of course make it plain that in every speech you made in Alabama you challenged the lawfulness of Mr. Bankhead's nomination, and his right to have his name printed on the ballot in the general election. Mr. Bankhead was advised by Judge Anderton that any election held under the resolution adopted in December, 1929, "would necessarily be declared null and void on insistence of the party discriminated against" (pp. 49–50 my original brief).

Third. The Senate should be informed of that line of authority holding that a contest of the election is the only way in which this kind of a question can be raised. I do not have those authorities at hand, but I recall some of them in my investigations in the Supreme Court library at Washington. Courts have expressed themselves as being reluctant to stop the printing of a name on a ticket, as cases involving questions of that kind come up during the heat of a campaign and quite frequently the time for deliberation is very short.

Mr. Bankhead was nominated in August if he was nominated at all. Our supreme court was in vacation and did not resume until the last of October or early in November. It would have been an impossibility for you to have gotten a case through the supreme court between the date following the primary, when a certification of his name was attempted, and the date of the general election. I mention that to show the soundness underlying the rule referred to.

It is considered the better practice to decide these questions afterwards rather than before the election. For that reason you will find the authorities holding that a contest is the approved way of determining the lawfulness of a nomination, or rather that the lawfulness of a nomination is one of the things proper for determination in a contest.

Don't lose sight of the fact that every voter in Alabama was denied the right to write or stamp your name on the primary ballot, by an official ruling of the chairman of the committee.

The Senate should be impressed with the fact that the Democrats of the State were denied the right to nominate you and that you were denied the right to become a candidate.

It is as clear as the noonday sun that Mr. Bankhead was never nominated and for that reason could not have been elected.

Elections derive their force and effect from conformity to law, not from the fact that so many persons participated in a performance that was called an election. There is no such thing as a voluntary election or a de facto election. An election is valid or void. There is no middle ground. For that reason the alleged primary election was void, and being void it could not become the basis of a valid election in November following.

With best wishes, yours sincerely,

HORACE C. WILKINSON.

Mr. HEFLIN. We have heard much said here about there being no fraud and corruption in this election. Mr. President, we do not have to prove that a person was out buying votes to show there was corruption in the election. There are other ways to show fraud and corruption. Opening and going into ballot boxes in violation of the law is corruption. You are corrupting the very sources of the election power, the ballot box itself, with the ballots sealed and locked within it. When they break and go into that they are doing it for a purpose. They are guilty of fraud and corruption when they do that.

I think I have shown beyond question that Senator Bankhead had knowledge of all that was done regarding the primary and was a party to it and is the beneficiary of it. Now, I want to discuss another phase briefly. I can only touch upon the different phases.

They said that some of my own witnesses said, "Yes; the election was fair." "Were you there when the votes were counted?" "Yes." "And it was fair and square?" "Yes." On cross-examination Judge Wilkinson asked, "Were you where you could see the names that were on the ballots?" "No, sir." "Then you do not know whether he was calling them correctly or not?" "No, sir." "You heard them called and if you were clerk you put them down?" "Yes, sir." "And they counted up what you had on the sheet?" "Yes, sir." "Then you do not know of your own knowledge whether the names were called off the ballots right or not?" "No, sir." "Who called them?" "One of the managers." "Who was he?" "He was a Bankhead man."

Not in one instance in the whole State have we been able to find where a Heflin manager or representative called off the ballots. Senators, that is significant. If they wanted a fair deal they would have said, "Heflin has already given notice that if this election is stolen he is going to contest it. We want it to be so fair and clean and just that he will have no ground. Let this thing be fair. John Jones, you are a Heflin manager, call off these ballots. Then when you get through with them roll them as the law provides and seal them and lock them, and when we go to get them we will find them in that condition." That would have been fine. That is the way to hold an election. That is the way to have the proof so it will mean something when you bring it here. What is a ballot worth in a box that is opened when you bring it here? You can not tell who voted it. There were 58,000 not numbered at all. Half the others were numbered in some fashion and the other half unnumbered. How does that happen? Some were numbered with pencil and some with ink. How does that happen?

The law provides that they shall be numbered in ink, not that they shall be voted in ink. That impression has been made here, but it is not true. You can vote with pencil if you want to, or with pen and ink, but you have to number them with ink. Why? Because you can not erase an ink figure like you can a pencil figure. It was done to prevent the ballot-box thieves from manipulating the election. That was the purpose of that provision. Now they stand here and do not deny they did not number them in ink. They say they numbered them in pencil and it does not make any difference. The law says it does, but these Senators say it does not. Which are you going to accept, the law or Mr. Bankhead's partisan supporters in this body? That is the question.

I want to cite to you some of this testimony and just what it means. Mr. Evins asked if the ballots were counted correctly. "Yes, sir." Then Judge Wilkinson cross-examined him.

Mr. WILKINSON. You don't know whether the results were correct or not?

Mr. DEMOTT. I know what they called out.

Mr. WILKINSON. You took the results of what they called out?

Mr. DEMOTT. I took the results of what they called out; yes, sir.

Mr. WILKINSON. You could not see how the tickets were marked as they were called?

Mr. DEMOTT. No, sir.

Mr. WILKINSON. Who called out the ballots in the box?

Mr. DEMOTT. Grover Hancock.

Mr. WILKINSON. Was he a Bankhead man?

Mr. DEMOTT. Well, I don't know. I don't know how Grover voted, but my supposition of it is that he was a Bankhead man. Arguments we got out of him once in a while, I suppose he was. I wouldn't think he would be for the other fellow.

Mr. WILKINSON. Did he argue for Bankhead?

Mr. DEMOTT. Yes, sir.

Then, again, Mr. Evins asked the question:

Mr. EVINS. Were you present when the vote was counted?

Mr. COONER. Yes.

Mr. EVINS. Who called the ballots out?

Mr. COONER. I think Mr. Legree, manager for the Bankhead Democratic ticket (see p. 617, book C), called the most of them.

Mr. EVINS. Did you look at them?

Mr. COONER. I saw them, but I did not look at every ticket; but so far as I know, that box was all right.

Mr. WILKINSON. The man that called the ballots that night was a Bankhead supporter, wasn't he?

Mr. COONER. Supposed to be.

Then the next—this is from Senator HASTINGS's minority views:

I refer next to section 3 of your report—

This is Mr. Hampton's statement about that report—

"Efforts by corporations to influence their employees," to which I think the contestant has clear ground for exception.

We take exception to Senator HASTING's report on this particular point.

You state that there were 17 witnesses who testified that certain corporations were endeavoring to influence their employees to vote for Mr. Bankhead, but that you were not greatly impressed with these charges. I am forced to believe that the synopsis of the testimony which was submitted to you for the purpose of your report must not have clearly stated the substance of the testimony with reference to this charge. I hope that you and the committee will not be content until you read the testimony itself upon this point. To show you how impressive the testimony indeed was and just how outrageous were the conditions portrayed by the witnesses, I will refer briefly to the testimony of Mr. J. A. Greene, who voted in beat 21, Walker County—and who testified as to the pressure, influence, and intimidation brought to bear in Mr. Bankhead's behalf by the Alabama By-Products Co., operating in that locality. The election there was held in the office of the Alabama By-Products Co. Mr. Greene's testimony begins at page 54 in book A. He was a watcher for the independent ticket headed by Senator Heflin. He testified that Mr. Miller, engineer for the Alabama By-Products Co., was one of the managers of the box. That Mr. Sherrod, commissary manager for the Alabama By-Products Co., was one of the managers of the box. That a man named Harve Davidson was known there as the "pistol man" for the Alabama By-Products Co., and acted as one of the managers and as the officer at the election, and stayed around the polls talking and generally assisting in holding the election. That Davidson was what is generally known there as a "company deputy"—that is, that he had been appointed a deputy sheriff in the employ of the Alabama By-Products Co. He was known as the "pistol man," presumably because he went armed with a pistol. The witness Greene stated that he presented at the polls his written appointment as a Heflin watcher and it was received by this "pistol man" for the Alabama By-Products Co., Harve Davidson, but that he, Greene, was not recognized and no attention was paid to his appointment as a watcher.

That is Mr. Bankhead's home county—

Yet you are told that I had representation at all these places.

Testimony upon this point was as follows:

"Mr. WILKINSON. All right; now what happened when you presented your watcher's certificate there?

"Mr. GREENE. Well, not anything, except they just didn't appear to pay any attention to it; that is all."

Then Mr. Hampton said:

The witness Greene further testified that the company deputy, the "pistol man" of the Alabama By-Products Co., who was helping hold the election, cursed him and told the witness Greene that if he, the witness, was going to vote for Heflin he might "get his junk off of the company's land, pasture, fences, and all."

And yet Senators are told what a sweet, nice, balmy day election day was and how everything went off smoothly, with no intimidation, no coercion, no fraud, no corruption. Yet here is the "pistol man" lording it over the people at the polls and telling this man who was supporting me to get "his junk off the company's property," driving him away from the polls. That is what happened down there; and yet Senator BLACK says that Senator Heflin has had time to show corruption and fraud and intimidation and he has not done it. Well, here is a sample of it that we plucked down there in six days' examination of some of the witnesses. We were told on the evening of the second day that we would have to quit in three more days. We happened to get them to agree to give us four days, and then we had to dismiss hundreds of witnesses without even touching the bulk of our testimony in middle and south Alabama, which is still untouched, still ready to be produced to establish my case and close it in due and legal form.

The witness stated that he was at that time renting land from the Alabama By-Products Co., upon which was located a pasture in which he was keeping cattle. This witness Greene further testified that his brother, Robert Greene, who was at that time working for the Alabama By-Products Co., voted for Senator Heflin—and that two days thereafter the company discharged him.

Listen—

Yet Senator BLACK does not seem to know about this. He is not as well acquainted with my side of the case as he is with Mr. Bankhead's side. The company discharged this man. In my State the law provides as a penalty for the intimidation of voters a fine of $500 and imprisonment if the judge sees fit to impose it. Have any of these people been prosecuted? Not one. Have they been indicted? Yes; in some places; and a Bankhead partisan judge has dismissed the indictments and no prosecutions have been had.

That is another part of the trail of the serpent of corrupt politics in my State. Prosecuting attorneys have discharged county solicitors for supporting me. They did it in my own home county. A young man by the name of Jackson, one of the finest young citizens of my State, a good lawyer, and county solicitor, supported me, and the circuit solicitor fired him for doing that. Intimidation! There it is; rank. Coercion! Telling these people, "If you are going to vote for Heflin, get your junk off the company property." His brother comes up, a free-born white man, standing at the threshold of that greatest of all places, the ballot box, to cast his ballot as he chooses. He is turned upon by the pistol man and told to get off the premises, to move out, to quit; he is discharged. That is the reception they got around the Bankhead polling place, and this was in Mr. Bankhead's home county.

I will tell you another thing they did down there. They had a fake telephone in the polling place right on the table or the counter where they were holding the election. A Bankhead manager by the name of Williams would take up this phone like he was talking to the outside and say, "Hello, hello; is that Huntsville; is that Gadsden?" "Yes." "How is everything?" "Everything is going for Bankhead?" "That is good." "Everything is going for Bankhead?" "Yes." Then, "How is it down there?"—he is telling this, you know—"It is going for Bankhead down here, too." "Is that so?" "Yes. Heflin has withdrawn from the race." That was right in Mr. Bankhead's home county, and this manager was a Bankhead manager and a Bankhead witness at Birmingham, and he was making the statement as voters came up to vote, to frustrate, annoy, intimidate them, reporting that Bankhead was carrying the State in great fashion, and that I was being beat and that I had withdrawn. That phone was not connected with any phone outside; it was a dead, dummy arrangement; and yet that went on in Mr. Bankhead's home county by one of his managers. But Senator BLACK would have you think that the whole thing was a sweet-smelling geranium. [Laughter.]

The witness stated that the company's "pistol man" was there when his brother voted and saw him vote for Senator Heflin. The witness further testified that this company deputy or "pistol man" was active in the polling place supporting Bankhead and was watching how people voted, looking at their tickets.

That is in the evidence taken at Birmingham. We have got a secret ballot or are supposed to have. You have got no right to intrude yourself upon the privacy of the sovereign citizen as he expresses his will at the polls, but here was a pistol man walking up and prying into these affairs and peeping over and watching how people voted, intimidating them. If he saw them voting for me, it meant the loss of their jobs. If they questioned his right to look at them doing it, they would lose their jobs. So they submitted. Senators, that is the situation we had, and this was in Mr. Bankhead's own county.

The witness stated that the company's officers, Miller and Sherrod, managers of the election, were both supporting Bankhead and that the conditions were such that he, the witness, a Heflin watcher, left the polls in the afternoon, and he did not return because he did not think there was any use of going back.

Senators, an old Baptist preacher up in Shelby County voted an absentee ballot for me. His ballot is over here marked for Mr. Bankhead. The supervisors found it marked for him. When he went in to deposit his absentee ballot, what do you suppose he said? This gives you an idea of the general impression about what they expected the Bankhead managers to do. When he deposited his ballot he said, "Something told me that my ballot was a gone goslin'." And it turns up here marked for Bankhead. What impression does it make on your mind that that man believed that his ballot would not be counted as cast? And he believed right. It is here marked for Bankhead.

Senator BLACK tells you that in 13 or 14 instances a ballot voted for Bankhead turned up marked for me, and in 13 or 14 instances ballots marked for me turned up here marked for Bankhead—six in one and half-dozen in the other; there is the old slot machine again. What is that for? To say, "Oh, well, both sides engaged in this practice. Heflin's people changed ballots to him from Bankhead and Bankhead's people changed ballots from Heflin to Bankhead." Now, let us see about that.

Mr. Bankhead admitted before the committee that the county officers who controlled the election in 61 counties out of 67 were his partisan supporters. Who were in charge of the ballot boxes on election day? Two Bankhead men in every precinct except in 6 counties; they were absolutely in charge; they were in the majority. Who had charge of the ballots and the boxes after the election in 61 counties out of 67? Bankhead partisans—sheriff, probate judge, and circuit clerk—and how could anybody change any tickets from Bankhead to me except it was done for a purpose, to make it appear that these irregularities were generally practiced by Heflin's folks and by Bankhead's? I repudiate the suggestion; there is not a ballot tampered with in all the boxes that they can charge to me. My friends were not in control at the polls. They were not in control at the county courthouse. We never had access to the ballots. They had them all the time. So whatever changes have been made, it lies at their door to explain, and they can not explain. That is what you have.

Now, a little further on the purchasing of votes. I want the Senator from Alabama to hear that.

With respect to paragraph No. 2—

This is Mr. Hampton speaking to Senator HASTINGS—

of your report of the testimony, under the head of "Purchasing votes," you state that there were 14 witnesses who testified either to the direct purchase of votes or the offer to purchase votes, but you conclude your paragraph by stating, "There is no testimony connecting Mr. Bankhead with the purchase of votes."

My good friend from Delaware just miscued on that a little. They do not have to connect him with it. If that were true, all you would have to do would be to supply the money to your campaign forces and go to Europe; and when you came back, the election would have been bought and then your friends could say, "Why, he had nothing to do with it. He was away when the theft and the purchase were made."

Newberry tried that. He said, "I did not spend all that money. My brother John spent it." But the Senate said, "Whoever spent it, it was spent in your behalf, and you are responsible for it, and you will have to pay the penalty." Finally, lashed and pursued by the gallant fighter from Wisconsin, young BOB LA FOLLETTE'S father, he resigned his place in this body and sought the tall timber in Michigan.

You do not have to connect the candidate himself with these things, although we have shown in the testimony that Mr. Bankhead contributed money in January. The primary was not until August 12. He contributed money in January, and the circuit clerk who received it said this fund was raised to pay poll taxes; and the law of my State says that if you pay another's poll tax, you violate the law. There is a penalty provided for it. That is what was done.

We have a lead in Mr. Aarhus's and Creech's reports of $3,500 that was spent through Congressman BANKHEAD'S office in behalf of his brother up there in Lamar County, I believe it was.

We have a lead that $3,500 was sept through Congressman MCDUFFIE'S office, through his secretary, in Clarke County, Ala.

We have a lead that Mark Black, of Luverne, in Crenshaw County, handled $5,000, and that another man down there—McGovern, I believe—handled $5,000.

That is not all. We have a lead there that would startle the Senate and the country. Mr. Pettus, chairman of the State committee, came to Washington to get some campaign funds from Mr. Jouett Shouse, chairman of Mr. Raskob's committee. Mr. Pettus came up and asked Mr. Jouett Shouse for some money for the campaign in Alabama for Mr. Bankhead. Mr. Shouse said he did not have very much money, and he needed it for the congressional districts, but he gave Mr. Pettus $1,000 and told him to go to New York and see Mr. Raskob. Mr. Pettus went to see Mr. Raskob, and Mr. Raskob told him, "I do not like the situation in Alabama. The people do not seem to be taking any interest in Bankhead. They do not seem to be for him; but if you will go back down there and raise $50,000, I will get up $250,000 more, and get it to you by the 25th of October to use in the closing days of the campaign."

We have not had a chance to follow up that lead by Mr. Aarhus. Senator GEORGE and Senator BRATTON would not agree to employ anybody, it made no difference what they had, who had ever worked for the Nye committee.

I submit that that position is untenable. I can not understand it. There it is—$250,000; and Aarhus, commenting on it, says, "There must be truth in this." Pettus returned, and he called on Crawford Johnson and a banker down there, Oscar Wells & Crawford, another, and the Bardeleben Coal Co., worth a million dollars, each of them, easily, to double their subscriptions, and they did.

We have not been able to follow up that lead; but the Senator from New Mexico, Mr. BRATTON, tells the Senate solemnly that I have had full opportunity to be heard and close, although these are the facts that I am giving you.

We have a lead on New Orleans. Mr. Creech, the other agent, has the notes where $800,000 was handled, giving the names of those who handled it and the names of the men in Birmingham who distributed it in the State. We have not had a chance to run that down. We do know that either two or three days after the election, Mr. Bankhead went to New Orleans. The papers announced his presence there immediately following the election. Whether there is any significance in that I do not know; but I am telling you what these investigators have upon the program for investigation that we have never had the opportunity to investigate.

Now for a little more of this purchasing of votes.

The chairman said, "There is no testimony connecting Mr. Bankhead with the purchase of votes." Why, certainly not. You know that if a candidate would let them catch him buying votes himself, you would not have to hit him with a club. You could just thump his brains out. Of course, you are not going to catch a candidate connected with buying votes. Thump them out! You could not catch a child doing a thing like that.

Mr. Bankhead says, "I had nothing to do with it. I know nothing about it." You do not have to connect him with it. It is enough to know that he got the fruits of it; and the Bible says, "By their fruits ye shall know them"; and it says another thing: "I brake the jaws of the wicked, and plucked the spoil out of his teeth." That is what I am asking for here.

They got away with this. They politically assassinated me with the primary machine they had, and Mr. Bankhead was nominated in a primary that was illegal and void, in a primary where all sorts of crooked practices were resorted to. They held back the returns for days and days and days; and instead of publishing them in the open, as always heretofore, they go down to the secret tax assessor's office in Pettus's home county and count them there, and give out only the returns for governor and Senator on September 1. Why did they delay all that time? Let them explain.

> For ways that are dark and tricks that are vain
> Let Ed Pettus rise and explain.

He can not explain it.

I would call attention in this connection—to the testimony given in book C with respect to the purchase of votes and the offers to purchase votes in Jasper, Ala., Mr. Bankhead's home city, and particularly to the testimony of John W. Madison, beginning at page 656 in volume 3 of the official report of the testimony. Mr. Madison testifies that he was approached by Drew Argo, of Mr. Bankhead's home county, who inquired of him as to which senatorial candidate he intended to vote for. Upon being told that Mr. Madison intended to vote for Senator Heflin, Mr. Argo informed him that if he would vote under the rooster (Democratic) there was something in it for him. Argo went on to inform Madison that he, Argo, was paying $2 each for votes.

Mr. Hampton says—

I want the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] to get that.

Argo went on to inform Madison that he, Argo, was paying $2 each for votes.

In answer to a question, he informed Mr. Madison that he wanted Madison to vote for Mr. Bankhead and stated that he was making that offer in the Bankhead interest. Mr. Madison refused Argo's offer; but later on election day when Madison was in the sheriff's office in the courthouse in Jasper, Argo sought him out again and told him he would pay $4 each for the 5 votes in Madison's family.

That ought to be comforting to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

He told Madison he would give him scrip or an order that he could take to Phillips & Stanley's store and that Phillips & Stanley would pay the money on the order. Phillips & Stanley's store, according to the testimony, is in the same building in which Mr. John H. Bankhead's law offices are located, Mr. Bankhead's office being upstairs and that store being downstairs on the ground floor. Mr. Madison testified that for a period of an hour he stood around in Phillips & Stanley's store and watched people come from the courthouse, where the election was being held, and go in Phillips & Stanley's store and present scrip to Bill Stanley, who was paying out the cash upon the scrip.

Does not that connect them up with buying ballots? Yet Senator BLACK says we summoned witnesses from all over the State, and they proved nothing of corruption and buying votes. If he had just read this part of the testimony, he would have been better informed.

Mr. Madison stated that he saw this scrip being presented and money being handed out in return for it. Mr. Madison put the number of people that he personally saw present scrip and receive money for it at five or six.

Just one witness telling that he saw voters going into the voting place, voting for Mr. Bankhead, and taking scrip from Mr. Argo, and the scrip was honored down there by Phillips & Stanley in the building under Mr. Bankhead's office. They were paid the cash. Madison saw it—money received, bartering the ballot in Bankhead's own county in the State of Alabama!

Senators, if we had been permitted to get testimony down there for six or seven more weeks, we would have honeycombed that State with the most corrupt political machine situation you ever witnessed. They shut us off, deny us the right to get the evidence, deny us the money with which to do it, close the case in my absence, bring it to the floor of the Senate, and then stand here and assert that I had been heard on all the phases of the case!

Senators, it is inexcusable and indefensible to make those statements here. They are absolutely untrue.

I want the truth known to this body. I want the country to know it, and there is one place where they will know all the facts, and that is in a forum in my State, the State of Alabama. God bless that dear old State. It has never turned its back on me, and I have never lowered my arm in battle for it, and, so help me God, I never will.

They said it would be better for me financially and otherwise to accept the verdict of the machine, fall in line with it, and go on, that they would return me to office. I would spurn such return to office. I do not want office that way. I do not want any person to vote for me who does not want to vote for me. I do not want a vote procured for me through the use of money or intimidation. It has never been done. I would not permit it. I have been elected by the people in the free exercise of their ballots for 27 years, in the House and Senate, until a corrupt, purchased machine, purchased as you would buy a sheep in the market place, determined to strike me down politically.

As a direct result of all this fraud and corruption and illegality, a nomination came out of a void concern. Mr. Bankhead's name was no more legally on that ticket in Alabama than the name of one who lived in another State and was not a candidate for the office.

This is what they said: "You go ahead and put him over, and in the general election we will take care of it. We will give Bankhead such a majority, and we will do it so smoothly, we will spoil out the tracks of the 'trickters.' They will have a hard time proving we stole it, and Bankhead will stay up yonder and our conduct will be approved." Then in the future good-bye to all honest, God-fearing candidates. They will take possession and rule as they choose.

Senators, you must not do that. You want to smash this thing, crush it, put it down in its incipient state. If you put the stamp of your approval on it, you set a dangerous precedent. They will be rising up and saying, "Oh, well, you know what they did in the Heflin-Bankhead case. They did not prove this, and they did not prove that." We stand ready to prove it all. We stand at the door and knock to get evidence, and we can not get a chance to produce it.

The case was closed in my absence. Did you get that? I was on the train returning Saturday night. Senator HASTINGS, chairman of the subcommittee, had been told by me that I was going out to speak in Illinois on Friday. He said, "Yes; go ahead; the subcommittee will not meet until Monday." Nobody contemplated a meeting of the full committee, and I left. I was sitting in the train coming home when I read, "Bankhead recommended favorably by 9 to 8 in the full committee." It was astounding to me, of course. I was somewhat interested, being the contestant. The committee had been called to consider the Dickinson resolution and the Bailey case; and while they were there, my "friends" decided they had a majority, and they put it to the test and voted to close the case, with me, the contestant, away.

I had never had notice of the meeting. My attorneys never had notice. We had had no agreement to close our case. We have not closed it yet. Yet they closed it and shut the doors in my face, and we are forced upon this floor to fight when my case has not been closed; and there are hundreds of witnesses down there who could testify to all these corrupt things, but we have not been able to get them.

Is that fair treatment? Is that the way to treat a contestant? Is that the way to treat a man who served in this body with you for nearly 11 years? And without boasting, I state that you can not point your finger to a single dishonorable act of mine. You can not point to a vote I cast that was not on the side of good government and on the side of the masses of the people of this country. I never lifted my voice or my hand in opposition to the great fundamental principles of my country and the welfare of the people of my country.

It is just a few months since I stood here in my own right; but I come back and find some of my Democratic comrades voting to deny me the right to appear here and say a word, after closing my case in my absence. It hurts me in my heart, I repeat.

This was election day that Mr. Madison was talking about, in Mr. Bankhead's home town. I read further:

> This was on election day and while the voting was going on at the courthouse. It is true that other people had offices in the same building.
>
> I, of course, do not contend that the testimony here given would convict Mr. Bankhead himself of bribery or that it definitely connects him with Argo's unlawful conduct. This much can be said, however, the offer to bribe was committed in Mr. Bankhead's interest, according to the testimony; and for the purpose of showing that the election was corrupt, the result is the same whether the bribery was done by Mr. Bankhead's order, knowledge, and consent or by his agents or supporters upon their own initiative. It is significant that 14 witnesses brought from the very limited territory covered in the Birmingham hearings testified as stated in your report, either to the direct purchase of votes or the offer to purchase them, and that in every case this bribery and attempted bribery was perpetuated in the interest of Mr. Bankhead.

Senators, there is not a scintilla of testimony that I or any of my followers violated the law. We were fighting to uphold it. There is not a piece of testimony which seeks to establish that I or any of my followers spent any money in trying to buy votes. They did put one witness on the stand down there, a Doctor McCullum, a Bankhead witness, to swear that a fellow by the name of Leith offered him $500 to support me and Judge Locke. Judge Wilkinson turned to the book, as the supervisors found the votes cast, and found that Leith and his wife had both voted for Bankhead and that McCullum himself had voted for Bankhead. They brought that miserable story in there, that one man had offered $500 to get them to support us. There was not a word of truth in it, and Judge Wilkinson on cross-examination said:

> Are you the same man who had a store burned up there not long ago?
>
> Yes, sir; I had one burned.
>
> You moved the goods out just before the store was burned, did you not?
>
> Well, no, no.
>
> Well, the State marshal and adjuster would not pay you for it until you compromised. Is not that true?
>
> Yes; that is true.
>
> You can stand aside.

He was the only witness who swore that money had been offered for us, and he almost admitted that he burned his own store for the insurance money. That is the trail of the crooked political serpent that is over all of this stuff. I will put some of these other references to the same character of doings in the RECORD.

Mr. President, let me show a little something about the condition of some of the ballot boxes, how they were found, in some of the counties down there, the condition in which the supervisors found the boxes when they went to get them. The ballot box is supposed to be locked and sealed and the ballots preserved inviolate, so that if there shall be a contest, the ballots will show just what took place in the voting precinct. But not so as to these ballots.

Here is the record of the county of Dallas, the county of the chairman of the State committee.

Precinct 36, box 6: Locked but not sealed.

Precinct 36, box 3: Locked but not sealed.

Box 4, box 2, box 1, box 5, in the same precinct, all locked but not sealed.

You know how easy it is to unlock a lock when you have the key, but if you break a seal, that will tell the tale. So the seal was gone, and the box was just locked, and they had the key. So it goes all down, except as to eight boxes out of twenty-odd, I believe. That was in his home county; and thereby hangs a tale.

I spoke in the town of Selma to more people than there were voters in the county. I spoke to about 4,500 or 5,000. I polled the audience, asked that all who were going to support me to stand up, and asked those standing to hold up their hands. It was a glorious sight. After they sat down I asked all who were going to vote for Bankhead to hold up their hands, and there 4 out of over 4,000. That was in this one county. They told me that I would carry the county by seven or eight hundred majority, but the Pettus crowd said, "He will get 700 votes." And they gave me 700. They are good mathematicians, I will say that for them. They said I would get 700 votes, and that is what I got. So the way the people voted did not count in the general election.

Here is the record of the county of De Kalb, which I carried by probably two or three thousand; but they gave it to me by three or four hundred.

Mr. Creech says:

> My first effort to check on the ballot boxes, April 7, 1931. Deputy Sheriff William R. Biddle stated that Sheriff Sidney W. Pope was out on a raid and did not know when he would return; that neither he nor the sheriff had the key to the cell in which the ballot boxes were stored. Former Sheriff L. J. Campbell had the key to this cell. That Sheriff Pope had never had this key.
>
> Probate Judge George L. Malone related to me some of the conditions existing in their county. I was impressed with the importance of the committee securing the boxes in this county.
>
> Deputy Sheriff Biddle made an effort to locate former Sheriff Campbell and returned to the courthouse, stating Mrs. Campbell had received a telephone message from Mr. Campbell saying he was at some distant point and would not get back that day.
>
> At 7 o'clock on the morning of April 11 I telephoned Sheriff Sidney W. Pope that I would be out about 9 o'clock to check up on the boxes and be with him to see they were delivered to the postmaster. He told me he would be prepared to turn them over for shipment.

Now listen:

On my arrival, and meeting the sheriff, he informed me of the conditions having been changed since my telephone conversation with him. He had an order from the judge of the ninth judicial circuit court—restraining him from delivering the boxes until April 11, 12 o'clock noon. This order was extended to April 18, same hour, 1931, until further orders. It became more fixed in my mind that this county was the most important county out of the 16 I had checked. We need positive information that the poll sheets are in the boxes with the other records.

A supporter of Mr. Bankhead, of course—

What happened there? In order to keep this county out of our hands they pretended that they had a contest locally and would not let us have the boxes. We finally had to get an order from the Federal judge down there to get the boxes. And yet, according to the speech of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] we have had a chance to do all things that were necessary to be done and everything has been done most graciously to serve us. We had to get these papers through a writ in the Federal court to ever bring them here at all. What else?

Down in the county of Bibb, which I carried by anywhere from 1,000 to 1,200, they gave it to Bankhead by 700. In the county of Henry, which I carried probably by a thousand, and in the county of Houston, which I carried by a thousand to fifteen hundred, they gave Henry to me by less than 100 and Houston to Bankhead by over a thousand; and when we went down to get the ballots, what did they tell us? They said the ballots had been burned. And yet Senator BLACK and Senator BRATTON would have you believe that everything was lovely and that everything was done to serve our needs and help us get evidence.

They violated the law. They burglarized these ballot boxes. They saw that I had carried those counties. They certified that Bankhead had carried them and they burned the ballots to destroy the evidence. That is what happened. What other conclusions can you reach? The law requires the ballots to be kept locked and sealed for six months. They were burned in December or January, as soon as my resolution was offered here to seize the boxes. Did anybody encourage them in burning them? A strong Bankhead supporter, Probate Judge Crosslin at Montgomery, Ala., the capital of the State, was quoted as saying that they could burn the ballots. The Montgomery Advertiser, a paper supporting Bankhead, had an article saying, "When the Senate committee comes to Alabama to seize the ballots they will find nothing but ashes." And yet the Senator from Alabama, Mr. BLACK, and Mr. BRATTON would have you believe that all was lovely down there, and that nothing out of the ordinary had been done.

You can not find another contest like it in the history of our country. Cite me to another place where they laid ballots in by the sheaves that could not be put in the slot. Cite me to where hundreds of ballots were found neatly folded like money stacked in a bank in a pad, never unrolled or unfolded, just like they were in the original package. Find me a place where they opened and entered the boxes as they did in such wholesale fashion in Alabama.

Find me an instance where they burned the ballots as they did in my State.

Senators, what does the law provide? It provides that they shall have metal boxes with slots in them, and when they go to vote they shall put the ballots through the slot and at the end of the counting those ballots shall be rolled up. I will show you. Here is what the law provided, that they should roll up those ballots like this [illustrating] in great big rolls and then seal them. They used adhesive plaster in some places and wrapped and sealed them up, tied them, and put a sealed paper across there with the names of the three inspectors written on them. That is done according to Hoyle, according to law. Were these done that way? No. They were not found that way. Who had tampered with them? They were in the hands of Bankhead managers and in the hands of Bankhead county officials all over the State with the exception of six counties.

Just one other matter on that line. Those Bankhead people down there who burned these ballots, of course, have never been prosecuted. Not the slightest effort has been made to punish them. They were Bankhead supporters. They had charge of the county affairs. They had charge of the precinct affairs. The best way to destroy the evidence they had was to burn it and they burned it; and yet we are told here that everything was all right down there and that Mr. Bankhead has a clean bill of health and that there is nothing wrong at all in the certificate of his election.

I have shown that certain corporations sought to intimidate the voters. I have not the time to go into that except to tell you that we have shown that at the cotton mills in Alexander City, in Tallapoosa County, and other places, they sought to intimidate the workers in the mills who did not vote for Bankhead. They sought to intimidate the mine workers in St. Clair County and discharged some there who would not support Bankhead. They sought to intimidate them in Birmingham and in various other places over the State.

We intended to show by evidence that certain bankers had intimidated merchants, and certain merchants had intimidated farmers. The banker told the merchant, "If you do not vote for Bankhead, we can not take care of your account any longer." The merchant told the farmer, "If you do not vote for Bankhead, you will have to buy your goods somewhere else. I can not run you any longer," as they call it, "carry your account and supply you with provisions." The farmer said, "I can not go anywhere else. You have a mortgage on all I have. I could not go anywhere else." "Then fall in line for Bankhead."

We have shown how they undertook to intimidate schoolteachers and we intended to show that all over the State they told the school-teachers that if they did not line up and vote for Bankhead they would lose their jobs. Senators, we had one case of a fine young lady teaching school. They asked who she was going to vote for. She said, "I am going to vote for Senator Heflin. My father was for him and so was my mother." "But he is not a Democrat." "Yes; he is. He is as good, if not the best, Democrat in the State." "But he is running outside of the party." "You drove him out. He tried to run inside and wanted you to have a fair-for-all primary. I am going to vote for him." They said, "If you do, we will take your job away from you." She said, "I am supporting a widowed mother and my little brother. You would not take my job?" She cried and they told her, "If you vote for Heflin, you will lose your job." We were going to put her on the witness stand.

We had numbers of instances like that all over the State, acts of intimidation galore, but somehow they were in a hurry to close the case; some on this side—the Democratic side—especially were in a hurry to close it Was that prompted by party spirit? Was that prompted by the fact that Mr. Bankhead is an Al. Smith Democrat? Was the effort being made to use the Democratic machine to sustain a Democrat, whether he is right or wrong? If that is true, that is the wrong principle, and it can not stand up before the gaze of the honest electorate of the United States.

Highway employees were dismissed, precipitously thrown out, because they did not vote for Bankhead. Others seeking jobs were asked to sign a questionnaire, "For whom did you vote for Senator?" disclosing their secret ballots to those men who are holding up, in the interests of the party machine, a club over the head of every man and woman who sought employment in the State in these hard, depressing times. That is the fruit of this machine, and "By their fruits ye shall know them."

My supporters were annoyed and driven from the polls. Women testified at Birmingham that the situation was so annoying and distressing in Walker County and other places that they did not intend to vote any more unless those conditions changed, and yet they tell you it was all lovely down there.

Here is an incorrect qualified list for Tuscaloosa County. They were allowed to vote regardless of whether their names were on the qualified list or not. Senator HASTINGS's report said:

In one precinct there were several persons who could vote at all the boxes in the precinct on the same day.

Senators, just think if that. I think in one beat they had seven boxes, so a man could go to box 1 and vote, and then to box 2 and vote, and to box 3, and so vote on around. What happened? They had a contest in that county before the general election, and I think it was 1,500 voters that were disqualified who had participated in the city election, and, Senators, those same 1,500 voted against me and voted in the general election November 4, 1930, no doubt.

Houston County is one of the counties where the Bankhead supporters burned the ballot boxes. They were Bankhead supporters in every county where the ballots were burned. No Heflin man burned a ballot. There was no violation of law by my supporters. Senator HASTING's report shows that one of the Alabama State examiners of conditions in Houston County said that for the year 1929 there were 530 names published by the judge of probate as qualified voters more than were shown by receipts for the poll tax paid. Listen to a line from his report:

Incident to this investigation it is very evident to the casual observer looking over the lists of the people published as qualified to vote in Houston County that there are numbers of names of persons who were not only not qualified to vote for not having paid poll tax but numbers of names appear thereon of persons who are dead, who have moved from the county. The published list of qualified voters in Houston County is not an authentic one nor is it a list that could be certified as being correct.

That is in Houston County, one of the counties where they burned the ballots.

The door of opportunity was wide open for any designing person to perpetrate any kind of fraud within his desire or to change or to falsify the real true conditions of the list of qualified voters of Houston County.

We have shown that in some places ballots were marked for Bankhead before they were handed out to the voters. We have shown that Bankhead managers left the polls and went off and got ballots, marked them, brought them back, and voted them for Bankhead. We showed in one instance—it was amusing, though it was right grim to me—that to one of our watchers it was suggested that the Bankhead manager about 4 o'clock was going out to get the vote of a certain person, and he was told, "You had better go with him and see that he gets it." This poor fellow got it in his head that that was more important than staying there and watching and preventing them from stealing the election. He went traipsing off with this Bankhead manager to watch him get this one vote and bring it back; and he said when he got back they had the ballots all out on the table and were working with them. Judge Wilkinson said, "Did it occur to you that they had taken you 'snipe hunting'? He said, "Not until I got back." [Laughter.] And then it did occur to him. "What did you do finally?" "Well," he said, "I knowed they had done whatever they were going to do, and I just went on home."

Oh, Senators, the whole impression everywhere was that they were going to take that election; the word had gone forth to take it. They had said that all around the State, "Heflin's friends will cast the ballots, but we will count them; it does not make any difference how many votes he gets, he will not get the certificate of election." We can prove that by 500 witnesses, a thousand witnesses, 2,000 witnesses—there is no telling by how many witnesses we could get that proved. I have the affidavits here, a few which I will put into the RECORD, in which the affiants swear that they heard Bankhead's supporters say, "Heflin will get the ballots, but he will not get the election." One of them said, "We will steal the votes from Heflin south of Birmingham as fast as they put them in the box." Oh, they are smooth artists, Senators; they know their business. The buying of an election has become for certain politicians the most lucrative business in my State. There are 250 men in my State who are under the domination of this machine who can nominate any candidate for governor, United States Senator, or Representative. Just get that machine and they will fix it. One can vote the other way, but the ballot will not be counted that way. I want you to help my State get back on the high plane where ballots will be counted as cast. That is all I ask.

The affidavits referred to are as follows:

STATE OF ALABAMA,
Walker County:

Before me, the undersigned authority in and for said county and State, personally appeared J. P. Braden, who being by me first duly sworn deposes and says that during the 1930 senatorial campaign in Alabama he heard J. L. Johnson, election inspector at Jasper, Ala., say in substance and effect concerning the election as follows:

Mr. Johnson said that Heflin might get the votes but Bankhead will get the office.

J. P. BRADEN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 26th day of March, 1932.
KENNETH L. JONES, Notary Public.

STATE OF ALABAMA,
Walker County:

Before me, the undersigned authority in and for said county and State, personally appeared S. S. Buzbee, who being by me first duly sworn, deposes and says that during the 1930 senatorial campaign in Alabama he heard J. E. Ross (coal operator) at Jasper, Ala., say in substance and effect concerning the election as follows:

Mr. J. E. Ross (a coal operator) said in presence of me and Mr. S. M. Hinton that they had the money and machinery with Bankhead and this would elect Mr. Bankhead regardless of how people vote.

S. S. BUZBEE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 29th day of March, 1932.
P. J. COMART, Jr., Notary Public.

STATE OF ALABAMA,
Walker County:

Before me, the undersigned authority in and for said county and State, personally appeared J. H. Nunnelley, who being by me first duly sworn, deposes and says that during the 1930 senatorial campaign in Alabama, he heard H. Cam Smith at Jasper, Ala., say in substance and effect concerning the election as follows:

Said that if Heflin got three-fourths of the votes he would not get the office, because it is already settled in Bankheand's favor. Mr. Marshall Lovelady and numbers heard Smith.

J. H. NUNNELLEY.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 29th day of March, 1932.

P. J. COMART, Jr., Notary Public.

STATE OF ALABAMA,
Walker County:

Before me, the undersigned authority in and for said county and State, personally appeared S. S. Buzbee, who, being by me first duly sworn, deposes and says that during the 1930 senatorial campaign in Alabama he heard Berry Hutto (candidate for board of revenue) at Jasper, Ala., say in substance and effect, concerning the election, as follows:

Mr. Berry Hutto said "I'll steal them, buy them, change them, and do anything to make the rooster crow. I have done all this and I'm now ready. We'll beat Tom some way."

Mr. Frank Shaddix says he'll swear that he heard Mr. Berry Hutto say this in effect. Mr. Hutto was returning officer, beat 23.

S. S. BUZBEE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 29th day of March, 1932.
P. J. COMART, Jr., Notary Public.

STATE OF ALABAMA,
Walker County:

Before me, the undersigned authority in and for said county and State, personally appeared S. S. Buzbee, who being by me first duly sworn, deposes and says that during the 1930 senatorial campaign in Alabama, he heard Richard (Dick) Bates, ex United States marshal at Jasper, Ala., say in substance and effect concerning the election as follows:

Heflin will get the votes but Bankhead has the machinery and it is oiled and greased and will give Bankhead the office. Mr. G. W. King also heard Mr. Bates say this.

S. S. BUZBEE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 29th day of March, 1932.
P. J. COMART, Jr., Notary Public.

Mr. Richard (Dick) Bates was returning officer beat 2, box 2.

Personally appeared before me, M. A. Springfield, a notary public in and for said State and county aforesaid, D. D. Wright, who, being by me duly sworn, deposes and says that he heard Roy Baird, a druggist in the town of Guin, Ala., say on several occasions during the campaign of 1930 that if old Tom Heflin won the election for the United States Senate that they, the Bankhead crowd, would steal the election. Also affiant further says that he heard W. H. Cashion say that they were going to carry the Hamilton beat by 200 majority for Bankhead or steal it.

D. D. WRIGHT.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this the 22d day of March, 1932.

M. A. SPRINGFIELD, Notary Public.

Personally appeared before me, M. A. Springfield, a notary public in and for said State and county aforesaid, S. K. Henson, who being by me duly sworn, deposes and says that he heard Roy Baird and R. L. Crump say a number of times during the 1930 campaign that if the Bankhead crowd could not buy the election they were going to steal it, that they were not going to let old Tom Heflin have it, and also said they had the machinery to do it with.

S. K. HENSON.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this the 22d day of March, 1932.

M. A. SPRINGFIELD, Notary Public.

Before me, the undersigned authority in and for said county and State, personally appeared R. H. Riddle, who, being by me first duly sworn, deposes and says that during the 1930 senatorial campaign in Alabama he heard A. M. White, Hartselle, chairman of the speakers' bureau, say in substance and effect, concerning the election, as follows: "There is no possible chance for Heflin. South of Birmingham they will count his votes out as fast as they are put in."

J. H. RIDDLE.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this ——— day of April, 1932.

I. J. KAENT, Notary Public.

Before me, the undersigned authority in and for said county and State, personally appeared Clarence Sums, who being by me first duly sworn, deposes and says that during the 1930 senatorial campaign in Alabama, he heard R. V. Ford at Falkville, Ala., say in substance and effect concerning the election as follows: "Heflin may beat John Bankhead, but it will be taken away from him, like the election was taken from Herbert Hoover in 1928."

CLARENCE SUMS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 2d day of April, 1932.

V. O. CLARY, Notary Public.

Mr. HEFLIN. Senators, it is a serious thing to strike a man down who has fought his battles in the open, as I have; it is a serious thing that a man who dares to defy the machine, with its corruption, with its evil practices and wrongdoings, who tells it that he will not submit to it, and that he will fight it in the open, may be struck in the back and shot down like a dog, deprived of his rights, deprived of the right to have his own party brethern and sisters say to him whether he did right or wrong in 1928; to approve or disapprove his conduct. I was denied that right, and the man most responsible for that denial is John H. Bankhead, of Jasper, Ala.

If John H. Bankhead had told that committee, "Boys, I am not going to stand for this action; I will not take the nomination under it; it is unclean; it is illegal; it is null and void; you let Heflin in and let us fight it out; that way is fair and good for the party, and it is right," the committee would have met and rescinded its action. There is not the slightest doubt of that. He could have done that. He issued a statement freeing the members who had said they were going to vote to let down the bars. That was an invitation to them not to do it. The State committee chairman told Fred Thompson that he was threatening to run for the Senate because he wanted to operate on Bankhead and make him get two votes out of his district to put up the bars against me; and he got them—Ogden and Cobb. That is the positive proof. The votes were delivered and the bars were put up against me. Then when Judge Fite called on him to join with me and others to get them to rescind that action, he refused to do it.

Then when the right was asked to give the voters the privilege of writing my name on the ballot so as not to discriminate against those who were supporting me, he said, "No; I will not even permit that." On top of that the chairman of the State committee said, "We will not leave any space on the ticket for the writing or the printing of his name." That has always been done heretofore; there has been a space left for that. He said, "We will not leave any space, and if his name is put on the ticket we will not count the ballots."

Senators, did you ever hear of a more complete destruction of the rights of the sovereign people in a State? Democrats, shorn of their party rights, clubbed over the head and driven out as candidates, invited in as menials to vote but not to hold office, asking for the pitiful privilege of writing the name of their choice on the ballots and refused by Bankhead, and the chairman of the State committee refusing to count the ballots? That is the most complete destruction of party rights that I have ever witnessed. They can not get away from that.

We have proved that citizens were permitted to vote in other precincts than the one in which they lived. What do you think of that? But that is not all. We have shown that the citizens of one county were permitted to vote in another county because they lived so far they could not get home time enough to vote. That was an accommodative arrangement fixed up by the Bankhead machine for Bankhead supporters. That was done in my State. We have shown that in the testimony at Birmingham, with just six days to go upon, in which to get the witnesses and examine them. Then we were shut off.

What else? Hat boxes were used, just big paper hat boxes. One man swore that he heard a fellow in a drunken party at the Morris Hotel say, "Well, they are going to steal the election from Heflin, and I am going to help do it." He said, "I have got two big hat boxes, one named Tom and one named John." That is John over there. [Laughter.] And he says, "I am to burn Tom." So he was to burn my ballots, but they were to take care of John's and nurse them through their illness. He was going to burn Tom's. Yet Senator BLACK and Mr. BRATTON would make you feel that they had the nicest arrangement down there; that it was really a May-day picnic, and that they loved me so that they would make sacrifices to see that I had a fair deal.

When I heard the junior Senator from Alabama pleading the other day and putting up such a pitiful tale for Mr. Bankhead and his cohorts, I thought of St. John's boy, at Cullman, Ala., a little fellow 6 years old. The father went home one afternoon and found Mrs. St. John scolding the boy about something. She stamped her foot on the ground and said, "You little rascal, what did you do that for?" The little boy just sat there cringing, with head bowed, his hands folded. The father said, "Mamma, you ought not to scold that boy; he is a good boy." The boy had been guilty of some wrongdoing, and the mother was trying to correct him. The father said, "You ought not to do that; he is a good boy; he comes over to the office and gets my mail and opens it up for me and helps me with it, and the other morning I heard him humming a religious tune." The little boy could not stand it any longer; he looked up, started crying, and said, "And I am going to be baptized soon." [Laughter.] So you would think that that outfit was ready to be baptized soon. [Laughter.]

With all the ballot thievery and ballot buying and ballot burning and intimidation and coercion rampant in that State, it was such a nice and delicious situation you would think that these gentlemen were nearly ready to be translated. As I heard this argument, knowing the situation as I did, I thought of the fellow at the funeral down there. They had had several deaths on Saturday, and on Sunday the hearse was busy taking caskets to this church and to that. It came to the funeral of an old roustabout who had been a very rough citizen; he had not lived the right kind of life by any means. His wife and children were sitting there. The preacher looked down and said, "The person lying in the casket in front of me was a good man." The old lady pricked up her ears and looked surprised. The preacher continued, "He was a good husband and a good father." She looked startled. The preacher went on, "All in all, I will say that he was a Christian gentleman." She says, "Ned, you go up there and lift that lid and see if that is your pa." [Laughter.]

So these things were going on at the hands of the bunch down yonder who stole the election from me, and they were described so beautifully the other day that I wanted somebody to lift the lid and see if that was them. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. There must not be demonstrations in the galleries.

Mr. HEFLIN. My watchers were threatened and prevented from doing their duty as election officers. They told my watchers in some places, "You have no right to say anything; you have nothing to do with it." Was that giving me fair representation? Not by any means.

Absentee voters were voted without their knowledge or consent. We have proved that some fellows came in to vote. They were told, "You have already voted." "No; I have not voted." You have heard that story of the old days about the animals having a convention. They asked, "What method shall we adopt for voting?" One of them said, "We will vote by the raising of the tail." Another one of them said, "That will not do, the billy goat has done voted, and you can not tell which side he is voting on." [Laughter.] So with these absentee fellows. The voter presented himself or herself solemnly to vote, but what were they told? They were told, "You can not vote; you have done voted." "I have not voted." "Yes, you did; you voted an absentee ballot." "I have not done anything of the sort; I have never applied for one; I have not voted one. I am here in person to vote. Where is my ballot?" "Here it is." "Will you let me have it?" In some instances they tore it up, and in others they got it back, and it was marked for Bankhead. He said, "I will vote mine in person," and voted for me. We had that down there, and yet they tell you that that was a glorious situation! Well, they are mighty anxious to close it. You notice that, do you not? They want to pull down the curtain on it and bid it good-night. They do not want the facts laid bare, because they do not smell good.

Think of absentees being voted when they never asked for an absentee ballot, never made the affidavit, but all that had been done, and their tickets fixed for Bankhead!

Why was that done, Senators? Because they did not believe that person was coming to the polls or that he would ever know that they had voted him for Bankhead. There could not be any other reason for it. There is no escape from that conclusion.

I mentioned Mr. Page being hired to obtain absentee ballots in Jefferson County. He got over a hundred, and took them up and got paid for them in Shelby County—Bankhead ballots. There is no dispute about that. He took a notary public with him. The law in my State requires that you have to file a request in writing, it has to be of record, asking for an absentee ballot. Here was a man employed to go out and get them, take the blank affidavits and ballots and a notary public, fix them up on the highways and the byways, and bring them in by the hundreds for John H. Bankhead.

In the report on the Tuscaloosa city election, 1930, the judge held that 900 persons voted who did not have the right to vote—900! They feasted on me just a month or so later in the general election. That is the county where the judge of probate said they opened the boxes to get the certificate of election; but he testified at Birmingham, on cross-examination by Judge Wilkinson, that he did not have to go in there to get the returns; that there was no excuse for it. That is Judge Brandon, the former governor of the State. He is the man, the judge of probate, who came and took the only manager I had out of that box. He never denied it when they put him on the witness stand—Judge Long, of Jasper, Mr. Bankhead's home town and county. The witnesses swore that he came in and abused a gray-haired, fine-looking man, who strongly supported me; that Long looked at him—he was frustrating their game and hindering it—Long looked at him, and with an oath said, "G—— d—— you! We'll remember you," right in the polls, the boss of the county.

That was in Mr. Bankhead's home town. That is the probate judge of his county, where the courthouse was burned while we were investigating down there, and the records destroyed. I think he admitted that he did not have requests for more than a hundred absentee ballots, and they probably issued seven or eight hundred.

Senators, this thing stinks to high heaven. You can not do justice to it in a speech in any reasonable length of time.

Persons were allowed to vote for Bankhead who had not paid their poll tax. Let me show you what happened at Birmingham.

Judge Wilkinson asked, "Are you a Bankhead manager?" "Yes, sir." "Were you there all day at the polls?" "Yes, sir." "You helped to count the ballots?" "Yes." "Did you let anybody vote there who was not on the qualified list?"

Now, get this point:

"No, sir; not a one." "You are certain about that?" "Not a one."

Judge Wilkinson said, "I call the Senate committee's attention to the fact"—I remember one instance where 185 of those people voted who were not on the poll list. They voted for Bankhead, and their manager said that no person voted who was not on the poll list! Then who put those names in there for Bankhead, and where were they put in? That is in the testimony.

Judge Wilkinson said, "Did you number the ballots?" "Yes, sir; I numbered them myself." Judge Wilkinson said, "I ask the committee to look in that box and precinct." The ballots are not numbered, and the managers of election swore they were numbered. Who put those ballots in the boxes that came here, and what became of those that the voter voted down there? They had skilled artists, the most skilled artists that ever assembled about the ballot box; and they had hundreds of managers, smooth artists, who were not qualified voters in the precinct where they served. That is set out in Judge Wilkinson's argument before the committee. What do you think of that, Senators?

They said that those votes were counted on the order of the probate judge. You know the law required them to number the ballots. In one county the testimony showed that the judge of probate told them not to number the ballots. Why? Because if you do not number the ballots you can not tell what ballot is yours. You may vote for me, but the ballots are loose in the box; there are no numbers, and there are 58,000 of them here with no numbers at all. But if they number them, as the law requires—and as they do in my State—if you vote first you are No. 1. Your ballot is No. 1 and your name is No. 1. They ask you how you voted. You say, "I voted for Heflin." "What is your number?" "I voted first." "All right; find No. 1." They find your ballot, and there it is. It may be changed to Bankhead and it may be marked for me; but you can trace it then. In some of the boxes some of them are numbered and some are unnumbered. How are you going to trace them?

Who monkeyed with these ballots after the election night?

Senator HASTINGS in his report says that absentee ballots for Heflin were not received and counted in many instances. What would you do about that?

The probate judges permitted people to vote who had not paid the poll taxes. They voted for Bankhead.

Senators, here is another significant thing: There is so much variety of stealing and skullduggery. The law requires the certificates of election to be signed by all three of the managers—John Jones, Bill Martin, and Sam Johnson. They must sign themselves, and sign the seal across the roll of the ballots, and sign the seal on the box when it is locked. What did we find in many instances? The same handwriting for various precincts, signing the manager's name—one and the same handwriting. What did that mean? It meant that the seals were broken at the courthouse and new ones were fixed up and put on and that one of the managers wrote the names of all three of them. They never had any idea that the ballots would come to Washington.

Another feature of it: I want to say frankly that some of the press down there said that with Senator BLACK on guard The Senate would never grant my contest; I would never get anywhere with it; so they really never expected me to get anywhere. They never expected these ballots to come here. You see, I had only from December until the 4th of March; but I got it through, to their surprise. They never expected that. They were fixing 50,000 majority, so that it would look so colossal that the Senate would say, "Oh, well, I guess Tom is just sore about being defeated. Fifty thousand is pretty big"; and it is. If you knew that bunch as well as I do, you would know that they could give 100,000 or 200,000 majority just as easily. They do not have to have ballots voted. All they want is the paper and the boxes, and they had both. They used them, too.

The circuit clerk in Franklin County, Mr. Bankhead's district, admitted that he sent out requests for absentee ballots, and sent the money to pay for the affidavits made by the notary public. That was in the testimony down yonder; and yet they tell you that we have not any testimony showing anything except some little, frivolous, minor irregularities. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] referred to some of them as very minor irregularities—just like breaking into a ballot box and taking the ballots out of a thousand boxes! Why, what is that among friends? That is just raiding the Ark of the Covenant, the ballot box. That is treading on the most sacred ground in the Republic. That is stealing from the voter the only weapon he has with which to preserve his rights and liberties. They are supposed to be kept locked in that citadel until the Senate calls for them to examine them; but when Bankhead's partisans beat down the door and tore off the seal, so that they could examine them and tousle them and change them, what is that? A minor irregularity. It amounts to nothing.

Senators, if you do not put the right safeguards around the ballot box and the voter's rights, the time is not far distant when the masses will be as the common herd, absolutely at the mercy of the tyrant with the lash in his hand and the contemptible political machine that dominates the whole thing. That is what you are coming to.

Ballots were accepted for Bankhead without supporting affidavits in many instances. Some of those championing the cause of Mr. Bankhead would say, "Why, what is that? They wanted to vote." Yes; but the law provides how they can vote. They must be qualified voters. They must have the poll tax paid if they are under the age of 45. They have to be qualified. But here they go up to vote for Mr. Bankhead, and they are allowed to vote without having to make the supporting affidavit.

I have shown you in the Geneva County editorial that it has been years since the poll lists have been purged. There are probably the names of forty to fifty thousand voters upon the lists in my State who are dead, moved away, disqualified. How are you going to tell what the qualified list is? You have to help us by your vote here to clean house down there. We will have to have the poll lists purged in every county, and I pledge myself to the task.

The absentee voter must show that he or she is a qualified voter in the precinct and county and State, and make oath to the effect that he or she will be absent on election day by reason of his or her regular business. Yet they had people voting up there who live in another State and vote in another State, whose names are still on the unpurged lists in Alabama, and they are voting for Mr. Bankhead.

My recollection is that the supervisors found 560 who lived in other States. We called for the list. What do you reckon they told us about some of them? They said, "We have lost them." I think that occurred as to 11 or 14 counties. "We have never been able to get our hands on them." I suppose that was one of the minor irregularities.

We have not been able to communicate with them at all, but we got the lists of about 12,000 and we sent questionnaires to them. We got back answers to around 4,000, saying that they got them and they voted—I think four-fifths of them—for Bankhead. What else? In about 3,000 and more of the cases the postmasters had marked on the envelopes "Unclaimed," indicating that no such person lived at that address.

In 5,000 cases, I believe, no answer came at all. That made over six or seven thousand that could not be produced on the face of the earth, and I challenge Mr. Bankhead to produce them. They do not live, they are not in existence, they are dummy voters. Over 6,000 of the absentee voters come in that class. Where are they? They do not even answer. No return of any kind comes back. What does that indicate? It indicates that the fellows who put those things over took these questionnaires and destroyed them; the thing was hushed up, and the story is closed, so far as that goes. A little over 4,000 out of 14,000 responded to the questionnaire, leaving around 10,000 that could not be accounted for.

Yet they tell us that all was well; that it was a very fair and regular election. And Senator BLACK appeals for Alabama's right to elect her Senator. I appeal for the same right—not for the machine to manipulate the election and procure the election of a Senator but the right of the people of my State to elect their Senator as they elected me.

If they had defeated me fairly I would have accepted it. I have been defeated in political contests. I was defeated twice before I came to Congress. I came within one vote of getting the nomination in a convention once, and in a primary I came within a very few votes, and finally was elected overwhelmingly in 1904. So it did not mean so much to be defeated fairly in an election. That is all right. The voter has just as much right to reject a man as he has to promote and elect him. I understand that. But, my friends, I looked the people in the face in that campaign in my State, a perfect crusade in every county, the whole face of the earth covered with people wherever we had a meeting. They were Democratic crusaders bent upon the election of their candidate and a smashing of the machine. They went at it with the zeal of Christian crusaders, and the only way to manipulate the election was to do it by miscalling the ballots at the boxes, manipulating and changing the ballots at the courthouse, and swapping boxes.

Just one other thing in regard to the absentee ballots. I would like to have the other side show me where the State of Texas, the great State so ably represented by my good friends MORRIS SHEPPARD and TOM CONNALLY, which has many more votes than Alabama, ever voted half as many absentee ballots as voted for Bankhead in my State in 1930. I challenge them to show where any other Southern State with a population equaling that of Alabama ever voted one-third as many as voted for Bankhead.

My friends, these are serious things. They changed 5,000 votes cast for me, took them off my list and had them appear as 5,000 who did not vote for Senator at all. There were not 500 people who went to the polls in my State who did not vote for Senator one way or the other. They were hot, and hot to the collar. There were not any neutral places down there. There were 5,000 of these ballots. They said, "Do not give them to Bankhead; take them off Heflin and just leave them voting the State ticket." There were 5,000 like that.

What did they say about the general election? The day of the election the Montgomery Advertiser said:

To-night there will rest in the ballot boxes of this State 250,000 votes.

And on that night, when the election was over, there were 250,000 votes in the boxes. They had had a report from the machine. The courthouse ballot fixers had told them. That is not all. Saturday afternoon before the election Tuesday Judge Chilton said one of the city gamblers told him that they had been advised that it would be safe to bet that Bankhead would defeat me by around 50,000 votes. He said, "Why the change? You have been so fearful of the results you would not bet even money." They said they had a report, "It is all right. Bankhead's majority will be around 50,000." And his majority was around 50,000. Do these things mean anything? What do they mean? They mean that the plans were all made to steal it.

When the inauguration day came, what did they do? The Bankhead Montgomery Advertiser, supporting him strongly, said, "Let us not forget the State committee to-day. It deserves praise." I am giving the substance of what they said. "It deserves praise for its act in reading Heflin and Locke out of the party, for if the committee had not read them out, Heflin would still be your Senator and Locke would be here to-day inaugurated as governor."

What is that? That is an admission that if the Democrats had had an opportunity they would have nominated me as their choice for the Senate, but that they had been denied that right, and they say the machine should be praised for putting it over. Nobody can deny that. These other supporters of Mr. Bankhead can not. That is a part of the political serpent's trail that is over it all.

I have already mentioned the legislature amending the primary law, and giving the committee the right now to do what they did in 1930, admitting that they did not have the right to do it then. The Senate is justified on that alone in declaring the primary null and void, and it ought to do it.

That is not all, however. Senator BLACK and Senator BRATTON made such a nice plea for Mr. Bankhead, stating how nicely he was arranging everything to see that I had a fair election. Let me show what he did. He so resented interference with the machine in Alabama, and the program to put him in the Senate, that he had the legislature of my State pass a law authorizing the probate judges of Alabama, his partisans in 61 counties out of 67, to institute and carry on a senatorial investigation. He did that by solemn statute in the State of Alabama. He had the legislature pass a bill. I will never forget the startled look on the faces of the committee, even of my friend from Georgia, Senator GEORGE. Senator WATSON, of Indiana, interrupted me when I was discussing it, when I was telling them that Mr. Bankhead had had these probate judges authorized to institute this investigation, to carry it on, and that I would have to go and employ lawyers, if I recognized it, in 67 counties in the State to look after my interests, and that I was not able to do it, and that I would not recognize that thing. Senator WATSON said, "Who did that?" I said, "Senator Bankhead," and Senator Bankhead nodded his head and said, "Yes; I did it." That is not all. He said, "If the committee thinks that I ought not to let that go on, I can stop it."

Think of that, that he could set aside a statute, halt it, kill it, after it was solemnly enacted by the legislature and had the approval of the governor, a candidate, the product of the régime, saying, "I can stop it right where it is." Senator HASTINGS looked up at him and said, "Can you do that?" He said, "Yes; I think I can."

Senators, what more do you want to convince you that my State is machine ridden and machine cursed, probate judges, partisans of Mr. Bankhead—and he admitted it—conducting an investigation involving me and my rights and your rights, and the rights of the people of my State, a partisan committee set up by solemn enactment at the instance of Senator Bankhead? But Senator BLACK and Senator BRATTON would have you believe that Senator Bankhead had rendered me the utmost service, and had given a fair hearing to get at the facts. I am giving you the truth, and showing you the fruits of the machine; and—

By their fruits ye shall know them.

What does the Bible say?

If thine eye offend thee, pluck it out.

My State suffers from this stigma. Senators, it has to be removed. If you crush out the fighting spirit of men of courage, who dare challenge these corrupt concerns, the day is not far distant when you will have a big political boss in every State, the people will be shorn of their power, and tyranny will come in apace, until our rights and liberties will be destroyed. Little by little and bit by bit you have to correct these things. Stamp this business out now right where you find it.

You could very well say to Mr. Bankhead, "Go back. There is so much confusion, so much corruption, and fraud and deception and coercion and intimidation and skullduggery of every kind, burning of ballots, stealing of ballots, changing of ballots—go back, you and Heflin, run it out before the people of the State, and let them say who will come here to represent them, relieved of all this interference by the Power Trust. Some Senators will recall that when there was an investigation in some of the lobby hearings, Senator BLACK connected John H. Bankhead up with the Alabama Power Co. interests.

They slipped a little line in the minority report that Heflin made a mistake in lining up with the power company. Was not that a smart thing? I think the solemn-faced Senator from New Mexico had a hand in that, Senator BRATTON. That was a smooth little innocent-looking line that "Tom made a mistake lining up with the power company."

There were but two of the power-company lawyers from all over the State who supported me. All the rest of them, including the president of the company, supported Bankhead; and Aarhus says that his brother, Logan Martin, was in the conference when they agreed on Bankhead's candidacy. They never had anything to do with my candidacy. No man has ever had a collar on my neck or ever told me what I could do or could not do. I have been a free-lance in politics, supporting my party and fighting to hold it true to the purpose of its creation, never permitting it to be corrupt if I could prevent it, fighting corruption wherever I found it.

Now, in my State during the time I have been nominated without opposition, they have quietly crept upon us and built a machine that has got to be destroyed. I had no opposition in 1924 and not until 1930, so from 1920 to 1930 I had no opposition. We were not in the field knowing what was going on, and they built up this machine. They told you they had the same kind of resolution in 1920. It is not so. I was not a candidate in 1922. They did not have anything like this resolution then. They did not have one in 1924 when I was renominated without opposition. They had one a little akin to it in 1926. Never until 1930 did they have one like this. I challenged it. I told them in the committee here that if they could produce a like resolution I would give them $100, and they could not do it. The law was violated in passing it. They knew they were violating it. They were relying on the power of the machine and the interests back of it to put it over down there, and they are relying on it here. That interest is at work here. I told one Senator about a mighty good man telling me that great pressure by the power concerns was being brought around here to drop my contest. I want the truth brought out and justice done.

Some of the same interest sat up there in the press gallery yesterday. They said, "They ain't going to let Heflin speak." It just tickled them good. They represent that interest. When the vote said I could speak, two or three of the boys had to have smelling salts. It only applied to two or three. A vast number of them are all right. I have even quit calling them "hickory-nut heads." They are clever boys in the main, as I have said frequently.

I want to remind you of a prophecy by Mr. Bargeron. In 1920 I was a candidate for the Senate in Alabama. There were five candidates in the field. I led them all in 55 counties out of 67. The Washington Post always boasts of making the proper prognostication about an election. It predicted my election in October, 1920, and I won. In 1930, in October, this same Bargeron wrote his prophecy in the Post and said, "As sure as the sun rises in the east and sets in the west, Tom Heflin is coming back. They have no chance to beat him in Alabama. His election is a foregone conclusion." That is the substance of it. That was his prophecy.

Now, how do these newspapers get their information? They get it by writing to all sources, your friends and your enemies, those who differ from you and those who are indifferent. They get it from every angle. Then they consulted all and made up their minds. The conclusion by Mr. Bargeron was that I would be elected "as sure as the sun rises in the east and sets in the west." Is not that strange?

He had not consulted the machine. He told the truth about my election. I was elected, but, as they said, I would get the votes but Bankhead would get the certificate.

Senators, we expected to show by Governor Graves, the governor of the State at that time, a Democrat, that he told me that they would steal the election from me. What does this show? The Democratic governor, knowing the activities of this machine and the extent to which it would go, told me in advance that they would steal the election from me.

That is not all. He told a member of his staff, Judge Wilkinson, "Tom will get the votes, but the machine will steal them from him." We have not had a chance to put him on the stand. I asked the full committee to let me summon him. I hope I have at least gotten my old colleague, Senator BLACK, to see something about this case that he evidently did not know before.

Here is a startling thing. There were but 19 boxes out of a total of 2,043 where the ballots were properly rolled and sealed. What did that indicate but a state-wide conspiracy to do a good job of it and do it all over the State? If you did not seal the boxes, you could unlock them and go in and lock them again, and nobody could tell you had been in there. But if you sealed them you had to break the seal, and that told the tale. All three names are supposed to be written on it, and the seal would be torn in two, with one man having to write all three names; and they did that in many instances.

Senators, they had in the boxes brought here over 10,000 illegal ballots for me and nearly 30,000 illegal for Bankhead. That is some more skullduggery. How did they get any illegal ballots in there for me? They would not permit my friends to vote where there was any question raised regarding their right to vote. They harassed them and annoyed them at the polls. Nobody could vote for me who was not a qualified voter. They saw to that. But what was necessary when they were going to bring the boxes here? They opened them and fixed some of them so they would be called illegal for Bankhead and some would be called illegal for me, but fixing it so that by subtracting them he would still have a majority clear above the line. They fixed them, they are smooth artists. They know how to manipulate these things.

Mr. President and Senators, I want your very close attention to this important summary by Judge Wilkinson, my chief counsel:

The record shows that the following propositions have been established in this contest:

1. The Democratic primary in Alabama in 1930 was illegal and unlawful and Mr. Bankhead's alleged nomination was null and void.

2. Mr. Bankhead refused to do anything which would tend in any way to correct the illegal action taken by the Democratic State executive committee after he had been informed by Senator BLACK and other competent lawyers who supported him that the action of the committee was unlawful and that any nominations coming from the proposed primary would be null and void.

3. The statement filed by Mr. Bankhead of his expenses during the primary did not comply with the Alabama law, and under that law he was not entitled to have his name placed on the ticket in the general election.

4. It was as essential for Mr. Bankhead to be lawfully nominated as it was for him to be a qualified elector, in order to be elected in Alabama. Nomination is one of the conditions precedent to being elected to office in Alabama.

5. Not being lawfully nominated, Mr. Bankhead was not elected. His name was unlawfully on the ballot in the general election.

6. Senator Heflin was regularly nominated as the statutes of Alabama require; his name was lawfully on the ballot in the general election held on November 4, 1930, and he received every vote that could be lawfully cast for United States Senator from Alabama in that election.

7. There are 2,043 boxes in 64 counties in Alabama.

8. The boxes in three counties were unlawfully burned as soon as an investigation of the Alabama election was undertaken.

9. The seals on at least 905 boxes were unlawfully broken and the boxes entered prior to their delivery to agents of the committee in Alabama.

10. In 1,918 boxes (practically 94 per cent of the total) the ballots were not numbered as required by law.

11. There are 1,842 official envelopes, papers, etc., requiring the signatures of two or more election officers, where two or more names were signed by one person in violation of the law.

12. There are 497 boxes in which the ballots were found folded and apparently had never been handled by the election officers.

13. There are 488 additional boxes in which the ballots were in their original folds, the ballots in each box being small tight folds and in many instances uniformly folded. The physical appearance of the ballots in these boxes refutes any suggestion that they were ever opened and counted on election night or at any other time before they reached Washington.

14. There are 228 boxes in which the tally sheets were not totaled.

15. There are 569 boxes in which a list of the qualified voters, by which the election was held, which is required by law to be certified and secured in the box, was missing.

16. There are 576 boxes wherein the ballots were found loose in the box instead of being rolled, sealed, secured, and identified as required by law.

17. There were 651 boxes in which the stubs were not detached from the ballots, showing that these ballots were surreptitiously "stuffed" into these boxes, and law (code, sec. 494) requiring stubs to be detached from the ballots before they are placed in the box.

18. There are 1,119 boxes in which there was no sealed certificate of the results as required by law.

19. There are 543 boxes that contain ballots from which the stubs have not been detached, wherein the stubs were not initialed, showing that these ballots never were official ballots, the law requiring the stub of an official ballot to be initialed by one of the election officers. (Sec. 493, Code of Alabama.)

20. There are 429 boxes in which no certificate of results (required by law to be sealed and deposited in the box) could be found in the boxes. Two hundred and thirty-five alleged certificates were procured from outside sources, leaving 194 boxes without any certificate from any source.

21. There are 643 boxes in which no certified poll list—i. e., a list of the electors who voted in that box—could be found. The law requires a certified poll list to be deposited in the box and the box sealed after the ballots have been counted.

22. There are 2,335 incomplete challenged oaths in the boxes.

23. There are 50 boxes wherein more ballots were found than voters shown on poll lists.

24. There are 82 boxes wherein the poll lists showed more voters than ballots found in the boxes.

25. There are 23 boxes wherein the ballots now in those show that the impression made in marking one ballot was carried through and made an impression upon the other ballots. This shows these ballots were marked while the ballots were in a pad.

I have mentioned that.

26. The ballots of watchers on duty to see that the election was fairly conducted, who voted for Heflin, were changed or swapped for ballots marked for Bankhead, without the watcher becoming aware of it, so artistically and so deftly was this fraud and thievery perpetrated.

Senators, there was a man in a precinct in Talladega City—I think his name was Carpenter—who they said was a manager for me. When the Bankhead managers got through with the count there they said, "Now, do you not think this election has been fair?" "Yes." "Well, will you not give me a written statement to the effect that it has been fair?" "Yes." So this Bankhead manager wrote out a statement:

This is to certify that this election has been fair—

And so forth. They got this fellow to sign it. Judge Wilkinson, my attorney, on cross-examination asked, "Well, why did you want to get this man to sign a certificate like that? That would indicate that you were practicing some skullduggery and you wanted a certificate from him." "Well," he said, "there was a good deal of talk round about stealing the election"—think of it—"and I just wanted his statement." "And you got him to sign it?" "Yes." "He is a Heflin man?" "Yes, sir; representing Mr. Heflin at the box." Judge Wilkinson turned and said:

I should like to call the attention of the Senate committee to the fact that Carpenter was a Bankhead supporter and voted for him.

They were not only putting over such skullduggery as I have indicated, but they were attempting to prove that the election was fair by a witness and a manager supposed to be for me but who was really a Bankhead man.

At Tuscaloosa there was a man by the name of Tucker who was strong for me and was fighting for me that day. They even called the solicitor in to quiet him. He was protesting against the skullduggery practiced, and he was very zealous and enthusiastic for me. They changed his ballot and when it got here it was marked for Bankhead. Senators, they were smooth artists; they knew their business.

Now, just a few more of these cases and I shall be through with this phase of it, and shall soon be through with all of it. Judge Wilkinson goes on to tell how many challenged votes were ignored.

27. Ballots marked for Heflin and cast for Heflin are in the boxes now marked for Bankhead, or a Bankhead ballot has been swapped for the ballot originally marked and cast for Heflin.

28. Ballots marked and cast for Heflin were not in the boxes when they were collected by the committee and have never been found.

29. Forgery was resortd to in order to cast absentee ballots for Mr. Bankhead. Many witnesses went to the polls to find on arrival that an absentee ballot had already been cast for them without their knowledge or consent.

Senators, let me relate an incident here. A poor ex-service man, crippled, wounded on the battlefields of France, suffering in his home, wanted to vote for me. Friends went to see him; they got him to fix up an absentee ballot; he marked his ballot for me. They took the ballot back to the courthouse. One of his friends, a comrade in the service, said, "Do you not know they will change your ballot? They will mark you for Bankhead just as sure as you are born." "Well," he said, "I hardly feel able to go to the polls, but if you will come get me I will go in person; I will vote for Senator Heflin." They went by his home and carried him to the polls, walked by his side, he leaning upon them. When he approached the ballot box the officials said, "You have already voted an absentee ballot." He said, "I have come early and I want to vote in person; give me that absentee ballot." Well, they did not want to do it, but they did. He opened the ballot and found that they had changed it and it was marked for Bankhead. This poor boy in the vigor of health followed his flag, he took it across the sea, helped carry it to victory on the battle front in France, and brought it back covered all over with the glory of his valor. Crippled and wounded, advantage was taken of that boy who offered his life for his country, and his ballot was changed. He who had shed his blood and offered to die for his country; who got up out of a sick bed to assert his right to vote for me, the friend of the ex-service men and the friend of the boys in the service; goes down to the polling place and finds in the hands of the Bankhead régime a forged ballot voting him contrary to his choice and for Mr. Bankhead for Senator. Senators, if they will go so far and stoop so low as to violate the faith of a wounded soldier and vote him under the dictates of the machine, my God, what is it that they will not do? I know what they will do and the people of my State know. They have been through this; they have understood what they will do; they have witnessed it.

Mr. President, I am going to print the other points made here by Judge Wilkinson at this point in my speech.

The matter referred to is as follows:

30. Approximately 36,000 illegal votes cast have been discovered by the supervisor. How many more illegal ballots were cast we do not know at this time.

31. Ballots were handed voters that had been previously marked for Bankhead; they had been so marked when they were received by election officers.

32. Many witnesses testified that persons desiring to vote for Senator Heflin were challenged without cause and were so annoyed that they left the polling place without voting.

33. In many instances a hat box or other similar box was used instead of a regular ballot box, some of the ballots being put in the box and others being piled around it.

34. Watchers selected by Senator Heflin were threatened and prevented from doing their duty.

35. Persons were permitted to vote without appearing in person. Managers left the polling place with blank ballots and returned with them marked and they were placed in the ballot box as though the voter had appeared in person. Some of these were sick, some were in hospitals, some were at the roadside in automobiles, and one person was 35 miles away. This was a widespread practice.

36. There were two instances where ballots were rejected over protest, one where 21 ballots were rejected, and another where 24 ballots were rejected. All of these were cast for Senator Heflin and counted by the supervisor.

37. One person at least was employed to solicit persons residing in Jefferson County whose names were on the qualified list in Shelby County to cast absentee ballots. The testimony shows that there were 107 such persons solicited by one person and that 63 of them voted.

38. The law of Alabama provides that a person paying the poll tax of another shall be guilty of bribery and shall be imprisoned for not less than one and not more than five years. Testimony shows that it was not only permitted, but it was the practice in Alabama to pay the poll tax of other persons. It is impossible to say how many persons voted whose tax had been illegally paid.

39. Two persons were permitted to vote who admitted to the officers that they lived in another county, but that it was too late in the day for them to get to their regular polling place.

40. Thousands of persons were permitted to vote by absentee ballots who did not live in the county in which they voted.

41. Booths for the accommodation of voters were not furnished in accordance with the Alabama law.

42. In 543 election districts the oaths of the inspectors, clerks, and returning officers were not attested.

43. Six hundred and thirty-four inspectors did not subscribe to oath.

44. Four hundred and fifty-three clerks did not subscribe to oath.

45. Three hundred and forty-nine returning officers did not subscribe to oath.

46. Six hundred and four inspectors did not certify to poll list.

47. In 140 election districts the poll list was not signed by the inspectors, clerks, or returning officer.

48. Thirty-one election districts where the committee was not furnished the poll lists. The committee could not ascertain whether the 186 officers in those districts subscribed the oath or not.

49. The Legislature of Alabama passed an act since the 1930 election, and after this investigation had been begun by the committee, directing the probate judges of Alabama to investigate the Alabama election in 1930 for United States Senator. This was done at the instance of Mr. Bankhead. Under the Alabama law the election is largely controlled by the probate judge of each county. Mr. Bankhead admitted that 60 out of the 67 of these probate judges were partisans of his.

50. The report of the supervisor shows that the election law of Alabama in the 1930 election was not fully complied with in a single precinct.

51. Irregularities of such substantial nature and so numerous vitiate an election without regard to direct proof of actual fraud.

52. Proof of widespread violations of the election law is prima facie evidence of fraud and makes out contestant's case.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to quote now a word or two from the old war horse from Missouri who used to be here, Jim Reed. Referring to the minority report, Mr. Hampton, in his able speech to the full committee, quoted as follows:

Even if the legality of the primary were a proper matter for the consideration of the Senate, the action of the people in the general election has foreclosed consideration of it.

That is what the Bankhead minority report says.

Let me answer the minority report upon this point.

Says Mr. Hampton—

* * * by quoting from one whose legal learning all will concede; a master of the law of elections, and one whose service to the cause of honest and clear elections can never be forgotten.

He goes on to say other nice things about Mr. Reed, and then he quotes him as follows:

Mr. REED of Missouri. They [frauds in the primary] did not make him incapable of election to the United States Senate, but they made it improper for him to sit in the United States Senate, because one of the steps by which he secured his election was through improper methods used to get on the ticket.

Have I not shown here some of the improper methods, the reprehensible methods, the tyrannical and corrupt and the law-violating methods adopted by the contestee to get upon the ticket at all, and that, too, in the face of warnings from lawyers of great learning. Mr. BLACK was one of them, Judge Anderson was one of them, and Supreme Court Judge Thomas, of Alabama, was another. They all told him of the dangerous pitfalls in his path. "Do not tread that path, Mr. Bankhead; it is a void road; your primary is illegal, null, and void." And Anderson said, "If ever a competent tribunal passes on it, it is doomed."

Here we are at the judgment bar of the Senate and asking courageous Senators to pass on it, and I have no doubt they will do so. You can and should pass on the primary and declare it illegal, null, and void, and that I am entitled to my seat in this body.

I will refer again to the case of Parrish against Powers in Kentucky. Some Senators, perhaps, did not hear my previous reference to it. Parrish was nominated in the primaries as the law provided; Powers was not, but his name was put upon the ticket any way by the committee. A general election was held. Senator BRATTON and Senator BLACK stated the election cured all the defects behind it, but that is not so. A general election was held and Powers was elected; he received the most votes. Parrish, a Republican, took the case to the courts, and the court sustained his contention that he was legally nominated and Powers was not, and never was legally on the ticket. The case went to the Supreme Court of Kentucky, and that court held that Powers was never legally on the ballot and no legal ballots were cast for him; that all legal ballots cast for that office were cast for Parrish; and Parrish got the office under the decision of the Supreme Court of Kentucky. Yet these Senators stand here and argue—and the Senator from Wisconsin took the same position—that all that is behind you just so the people come along and elect. Former Senator Reed of Missouri disposed of that contention. He goes on further to say:

> Because one of the steps by which he secured his election was through improper methods used to get on the ticket.

If he can not be there honestly and legally, we can not afford to sustain him here.

Senator Reed said further:

> I am going to give the Senator my opinion and give it to him very plainly. Does the Senator mean to say that if a man by any kind of fraud or corruption can get his name upon the ticket, and if thereafter he is elected, he is entitled to take his seat, although he never could have been upon the ticket except for that fraud and corruption, and that the vote of the people is final and conclusive, regardless of any fraud, chicanery, or corruption which may have been committed, does the Senator take that position? * * * I hold to the view that whenever any material step which a candidate for office takes in order to secure a seat in this body is a corrupt step, materially affecting the result * * * it is the duty of the Senate in protection of the country to say that that kind of fraud and corruption vitiates the election. That is my view. To take the view that if a man can by bribery, by fraud, by corruption, by any kind of villainy, get his name printed upon a party ticket so that, although there may be great numbers of the people who vote their protests, yet in the general sweep of the election he is carried over with the tide he must thereafter be seated, is to open the door to every kind of fraud and iniquity; it is to say to every scoundrel who is at large, "All you have to do is by some means to get upon a ticket in a State that is largely Democratic or largely Republican and then by virtue of the very fraud which gave you that position you can finally land here and there is no power to prevent it." If that is the case, then the Senate is defenseless and rogues may as well begin their nefarious business in the open.

That is what Senator Reed said. That is enough on that point. I should love to quote his remaining statements on that subject.

Mr. President, there is a quotation here from a former learned and able Senator, Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts. He talks about the ballot boxes being found open. Listen:

> It makes no difference for the purpose of my point whether the ballot box was there in an exposed place for 12 hours or 12 days. Now, I do not claim that there is any evidence here that * * * any person entered it, opened that box and substituted other numbered ballots for the ballots which it contained. All I have to say is that an adroitness less than that practiced for a less-important purpose in many ordinary cases of crime, robbery, burglary, and forgery could easily accomplish that result. Now we know how eager, how unscrupulous, how adroit, in many instances, are the means which are used to affect political contests. It is not the question whether the friends of the very respectable and very able gentleman who claims this seat did, or were capable of doing such a thing * * *. The interests of the sitting Member and of the contestant disappear before a question like this, which involves the interests of the American people in the establishment and maintenance of a strict, wise, and safe rule of public policy. It is not merely a question whether the recount was correct; it is a question whether you know and are sure that the thing counted upon the recount was the same thing that was counted, or should have been counted, at the time the original count was made.

There it is, over again, away back in Senator Hoar's day. Who can tell that these ballots in the boxes that were open were the ballots that were cast and counted on election day and night? You can not do it, Senators.

I have spoken at great length. I trust I have not wearied too much the patience of Senators who have done me the kindness to listen. Soon I shall have finished. The case will be left for your determination. Others may speak without my having opportunity to speak in reply to them. I challenge them to refute the strong and mighty facts that I have laid bare here to-day, and I am not half through with the presentation. I could pick out various kinds of fraud and corruption that have been practiced and speak on this subject for 20 hours, 30 hours, I do not know how long.

We have not had the opportunity to get one-fourth of the evidence in my State. My case is here before you upon the urgent insistence of the contestee, Mr. Bankhead, not by me or my counsel. By him and his partisan friends it has reached this floor without ever having been closed formally by the contestant. That is a terrible indictment against those who brought it about; but the facts and the candor of the situation impel and compel me to tell the truth about it.

Some strange things have happened. The power interests have not slept one particle since this matter got going. They want to have it stopped, close it up, and let Mr. Bankhead keep the Senate seat. You know they do not like to be a party to putting somebody over and then have you come along and disturb the works. They want it left alone. They want to get control, not only in my State, but in your State; and that giant evil is going to be a great menace in this country.

I believe in giving the power companies a fair deal. I want them treated justly and fairly; but I do not want them to have the privilege of gobbling up the power sites in my State and every State in the Union and have them all owned in a little while by a gigantic power trust, to the hurt and injury of the masses in every State of the Union. I do not want that.

I have shown you the connection of Mr. Bankhead and his friends with the Power Trust. If Mr. Aarhus's statement was not true, if I had been in Mr. Bankhead's place, I would have insisted that that evidence be run down and produced; but he has not done it. If Mr. Logan Martin was not present in the conference when Mr. Bankhead was approved as a candidate satisfactory to them, I would have challenged them to produce the witnesses to establish that. If it was not true that Mr. Raskob said that he did not like the situation in Alabama, that the Alabama people did not seem to want Bankhead, they were taking no interest in him, but he would produce $250,000 if they would raise $50,000 more, I would ask them to produce the proof. If they had asserted that $800,000 was handled in New Orleans, and that Mr. Bankhead made a quick visit to that city immediately following the election, I would ask them to go into that and explain it all. I would stand here and say, "Senators, I do not want an election that is tainted in any way. Let him go on and finish his case. Let him get all the evidence he can, sift this thing to the bottom, produce all the proof, close the case in the natural way, come in and let it be submitted and concluded by the contestant and the contestee, and then let the Senate vote." That would have been a much better way to handle it; but when the contestee insisted that the case be closed, it was closed.

Why, when the Senate first ordered the count of the ballots the contestee said: "There is no use counting them. There is nothing wrong. Do not bother the ballots." Then he said, "Do not let them count more than 10 counties. That will settle it." When they counted 10 counties, they found the condition so rotten that even Senator GEORGE and Senator BRATTON consented to go on and count them all; and the more they counted the more they found and the worse the thing got. They went through with the whole count and found the awful condition of the ballots, and reported on them.

There is a multitude of items in those reports—hundreds of them, thousands of them. There are law violations, not by the hundreds but by the thousands in my State, and penalties provided for practically every one of them. Still, these Senators have stood here, some of them reputed to be very good lawyers, and they have told you that these were merely directory statutes, although they have severe penalties to them—fine and imprisonment. They tell you that they are just directory. That is not true, Senators. They are not directory; they are mandatory. They have a penalty attached to them telling what you have to do in the premises.

They treat very lightly the matter of protecting these ballot boxes. They do not seem to think it amounts to much that they have just opened a thousand and a little more. You know they do not want us to go into these things. They wanted us to close up the matter and be done with it. They reminded me of the story of an old negro down in Arkansas.

He had stolen a pig weighing about 70 pounds from Mr. Jones. He dressed the pig nicely and took him home. They searched for that pig high and low and could not find him. They thought of old Sam's house out in the middle of the field. The sheriff and the deputy went out looking for the pig. They went in, and old Sam was sitting there rocking a cradle, with quilts tucked in at the head and foot and sides, rocking the cradle, singing, "Doan' you cry little baby; you'll be an angel by and by."

The sheriff and deputy said, "Sam, we are looking for that stolen pig of Mr. Jones." Sam threw up his hands in holy horror, just like you have seen here. He said, "Dar you go, white folks! You 'cusing me of stealing. Dat's the way it is: Old nigger sitting here, and his baby nearly dead with the pneumony, and you 'cusing him of stealing a pig! Dat's it—Lawd have mercy!"

They looked around in the closet and under the bed, and they could not find the pig. They came back and said, "Sam, what have you got in that cradle?" He said, "It's my baby, and he's got pneumony." They said, "Well, we will look in there." He said, "No, sah! If de light hits him, he's gone." "Well," they said, "we are going to look in there anyhow"; and Sam said, "Well, you let me get out. I doan' want to see my baby die"; and that nigger fled across the field with the speed of the wind; and when they pulled the quilts back, there lay Mr. Jones's pig. [Laughter.]

That is the way it is here. They closed this case while I was gone. They did not want me to pull the quilt off their contestee's baby, "'cause the light and the air would kill it." He had machine politics "pneumony." [Laughter.]

That is the situation you have—an attempt to railroad it in the first place and let the probate judges who supported Bankhead try the case in Alabama. Senators, what was that provision made for? My judgment is that it was made to canvass the field, to intimidate my witnesses, to get statements from them, and to tell them, 'Don't you make a different statement to the Senate committee when it comes down here. You are already on record"; and this committee of probate judges was to nose around and find out who were my witnesses, confer with them, influence them, intimidate them, reach them somehow. It is without a parallel in the history of the Senate.

I challenge them, Mr. Bankhead and Senator BLACK, to name another State in this Union in all the history of the State that ever had a legislature undertake to interfere with the Senate's right and prerogative to decide a contest for a Senate seat. There is not a case like it in history; but you need not be surprised that it is part of the offspring of that dreadful machine in my State which must be destroyed. It has no right to exist. It is not supported by the people of the State. It is supported by filthy lucre that comes from concerns that are getting their power taxes reduced. Doctor Busbee, of Jasper, Walker County, writes me that they have reduced the power company's taxes in Alabama $2,000,000 since Bankhead's election, and that they saved them $15,000 in his, Bankhead's, county of Walker alone.

What is the result of it? Public schools are closing in my State, and children who need education are being denied it because favor-seeking corporations are getting their taxes reduced, and the Alabama Power Co. has had its taxes reduced.

Mr. President, on July 4, 1930, we held a great meeting at Birmingham. There were over 2,000 delegates from the State there on that historic day. We condemned the machine in Alabama, and set out to destroy it. We defeated it, but it controlled the election machinery and got the office.

At the polls in November we carried our ticket by anywhere from 100,000 to 125,000 votes. They gave Mr. Bankhead 150,000 and me 100,000. My own opinion is that we voted about 340,000 votes. They put the others aside somewhere, and stood by the count they had fixed before election day.

The case is in the hands of the Senate. You are soon to pass upon it. I lay it upon the conscience and judgment of every Senator here have I had a fair deal in this contest.

When the Nye committee were doing splendid work in my State, through Mr. Aarhus and Mr. Creech, the money gave out and their work stopped, and the Committee on Privileges and Elections took charge in the Senate. Those men were withdrawn from the field. We have never had a chance to produce the testimony they had to produce. I repeat, Senator GEORGE and Senator BRATTON would not agree for us to employ anybody who had anything to do with the Nye committee to work on the Alabama contest.

Was not that a strange position for them to take? It was strange, indeed. Who else could run down and get that testimony? That was equivalent to saying, "You can not get it." We had no money with which to continue. The money gave out in August, and we did not have a dollar to work on until December. Then we went down and took the testimony in my behalf for six days. The contestee had the last six days, and the case stopped there. No rebuttal testimony was taken; no testimony as to middle and south Alabama. It was all shut out by the insistence of Senator Bankhead's friends on the committee on this side of the Chamber. They closed the case, shut the door, and told the contestant, "Your case is ended." Then they come here and say that I have been amply heard on everything. My former colleague, Mr. BLACK, says I have had all this time to summon witnesses all over the State. But I have not had a chance to summon them from anywhere except a few right around Birmingham, with only three days' notice before we had to close. Did you ever see any other contest handled like that?

Senators, some strange things have happened in this case. What happened at Birmingham? Here is a point I want to bring home to you. Mr. Bankhead's managers were on the the witness stand testifying.

"Were you there on election day?"
"Yes."
"Did you help count the ballots?"
"Yes."
"You counted them correctly?"
"Yes."

Judge Wilkinson then examined the witness. I want you to get this, Senators.

"You say you were manager?"
"Yes."
"You are a Bankhead manager?"
"Yes, sir."
"You helped to count the ballots?"
"Yes."
"What did you do with them when you finished counting them?"
"We rolled them and sealed them."
"Where did you put them?"
"We put them in the ballot box."
"Then what?"
"We sealed the box and locked it."
"Did you number the ballots?"

Those were witnesses of Mr. Bankhead on cross-examination by Judge Wilkinson, my attorney.

"For whom were you acting?"
"Bankhead."
"You are a witness here for Bankhead?"
"Yes, sir."
"You swear that you numbered those ballots?"
"Yes, sir."
"Did you roll and seal them?"
"Yes, sir."
"Did you seal the box and lock it?"
"Yes, sir."

Then Judge Wilkinson cross-examined. I invite the Senate's attention to the fact that these ballots were not rolled and were not numbered, and the box was not sealed and locked. Then Judge Wilkinson asked the Bankhead witness, the manager:

"If these ballots are not numbered and sealed and rolled, as you say, are they the same ballots that you handled that day?"

He said: "I do not think so."

What do you do with that? Every witness of Mr. Bankhead's whom we questioned on that subject said that they numbered the ballots, rolled them, sealed them, and locked the boxes.

What do Mr. Bankhead's attorneys and his partisans here say? That they had to open the boxes and go into them to get the certificates. What do the managers, the witnesses, say on that point? Judge Wilkinson asked them the question:

"Where did you put the certificates of election?"

"We gave one to the returning officer, the canvassing board, of course, we put one in an envelope separate to go to the probate judge, and posted one on the door."

"You did that?"

"Yes, sir."

"Was there any necessity, Mr. Witness, Bankhead manager, for going into the boxes to get the certificate or returns?"

"No, sir."

That is important evidence. Every one of them whom he asked swore that, and not a witness of his contradicts it.

Senators, what is the matter? The sheriff simply said, when asked by our investigator, "What is this box doing open?"

"We had to open it to go in there to get the returns."

Senator BLACK says there were 900 boxes sealed when they got here, and they did not open them. I ask if it is the practice in Alabama to put the certificate in the ballot box, why was it not necessary to go into the 900? Had somebody else already been in there?

Senators, some of you have heard the story about the Spanish War, where a negro said he had cut off the feet of "20 Spains." They said, "What?" He said, "I cut off the feet of 20 Spains." "What do you mean, nigger?" He said, "I just cut the feet off." They said, "Why did you not cut their heads off?" He said, "Somebody else had done done that." [Laughter.]

So somebody else had "done bin" in these 900 boxes. They had sealed them, and they are boasting of that here and saying, "There were 900 boxes that were sealed there. They are intact." If that is true, they have destroyed the position they have heretofore taken that they had to go into the boxes to get the certificates.

Judge Brandon, of Tuscaloosa, former governor, swore that it was not necessary to go into the boxes to get the certificates.

Senators, the most conglomerate senatorial election mess you have ever had anything to do with where a Democrat was involved has been this one in my State. I have not had a chance to finish taking testimony and close my case—prove my case, as I would like to, but it has stopped. It will be very nice for them to have their way in putting the machine candidate over. But, Mr. President, let me say this, you can not treat lightly the manipulating of and interfering with the ballot box. In its protection and safeguarding lies the safety of this Republic.

They approach it from different angles. They steal this election through the manipulation of absentee voters, they get it through voting dead men and women, people dead for years, but still on the poll list. They get it in part by voting people who live out of the State, who used to dwell in Alabama. They get it by intimidating people to vote for Bankhead. They get it by buying votes. They get it by corporate influence, influencing the employees. They get it by the power of the State administration, saying, "If you do not vote for Bankhead, you get no job." They get it by various means. They tried everything, a little here and a little yonder, this plan and that plan, and in the end it all amounts to a great deal in stealing an election.

You have to have one rule. You can not tamper with the ballot box. You are the guardians of the ballot boxes of my State in this campaign. It is up to you. The case has been brought here. You are the tribunal that has the right to try it, and none other. No court in my State is going to try it. The supreme court had an opportunity, and because of these influences I have told you about, just waived it aside by saying they had no jurisdiction.

Now the machine has a candidate in the field against Judge Thomas. The only one on the bench who has opposition in the primary to be held the 4th of May is the judge who rendered a decision against the primary, and the power bunch and the crooked election bunch are after him. They have decided he must be defeated. But he will not be.

In this case, Senators, Mr. Bankhead erected a scaffold on which to execute me. Haman did that on a former occasion for Mordecai, and when the truth was made known to the King, Haman was hanged upon the scaffold he and his tyrannical henchmen had erected to murder poor Mordecai. Out of the tricks and the trades of this bunch that manipulated this bastard primary, Mr. Bankhead erected a machine on which they expected to murder me politically. There is a high court to which we can come, thank God, and that is the Senate of the United States.

Senators, you must have the courage to pass on that primary. You must have the courage to render your decision as to whether it was legal or illegal. I can not believe the Senate has any cowards in it. I do not think you will fail to try this case, and try it honestly. It is up to you. I do not see how it can escape your final decision. It ought not to. It is your duty to decide it. We have appealed to you to do it. Senator BLAINE has said you have nothing to do with it, that it is a case for the courts.

What are you going to do with it if the court sidesteps it? Is the Senate going to sidestep it, too? It makes no difference whether it is a case in Alabama, Georgia, Minnesota, California, or where, we are entitled to a decision on it, an honest, plain, courageous decision on it.

What are you going to do about guarding the ballot box? It is more sacred to us than the palace of the king. It is the citadel of this Nation's life and strength. There, in that sacred institution, is the power that will preserve or destroy this Republic. It is the duty of every honest man and woman to lock hands around it, and then for the Senate to stand with drawn sword and say, "You can not enter here if you tamper with the ballots in these boxes. They are sacred things."

I read a story of the king's troops who had gone out to battle. Sir Roland, one of the bravest of them all, was assigned to the post of guarding the gates around the palace of the king. He was dreadfully disappointed. He wanted to go out and be in the thick of the fight. Brave soldier, he loved his king, but he was told, "You stand here and guard this gate and do not permit anybody under any excuse to enter the palace."

He stayed there. He could hear the charging war horses on the highway in the distance. He could hear the clash of sword with breastplate of the opposition. He knew they were engaged in the thickest of the fight. He wanted to be there. He wanted to feel the thrill of actual combat out on the battle front. But the king had trusted him to guard the gate of the palace.

The first imposter that came was a man dressed in woman's apparel with a basket on his arm. He said, "Will you please, sir, let me come in to get some food for myself and starving children? We are friends of the king." He said, "I am very sorry, but my orders are not to admit anyone. I will have some provisions brought out to you." But that did not satisfy the imposter. Sir Roland had food passed out between the iron palings and stood there with his sword and spear. In the folds of the woman's skirts worn by the imposter was disclosed, as he turned away, a sharp sword. If Sir Roland had opened that gate and been off his guard a moment, an expert swordsman would have slain him and the enemies of the king would have been in possession of the palace in a few minutes. But Sir Roland, true to his oath and true to his king, alert always, stood guard, and the man dressed as a woman went away.

In a little while a soldier came in the uniform of the king's guard. His shoulder was cut with a sword. He said, "The king has sent me in for treatment and rest." Sir Roland said, "I can not admit you." "But," he said, "the king sent me." He had on a uniform which he had taken from the body of a soldier of the king whom he had killed. Sir Roland rebuked him and said, "I fought all day after I was wounded worse than you are." He went away. He had a sword with which he expected to kill Sir Roland.

Later on in the afternoon an old man, apparently, with bowed head and feeble step, white hair and white beard, came feebly walking up to the gate and appealed to Sir Roland's weakness. Sir Roland loved a beautiful sword. He displayed a beautiful sword with golden handle. The old imposter said, "If you will let me in, I will give you this sword. I am a friend of the king. I am weary of war. I want rest. I am old and feeble." Sir Roland said, "I would like that sword and I would love to possess it, but the king told me to guard the gate and I can not admit you."

Just then he heard the shouts of the king's soldiers coming home, coming home in triumph, loping their horses down the slope near the palace. One of them said, "Yonder is the old impostor now." They hurried up, pulled the wig off of this old man, and displayed a keen sword at his side. He was a young man and the best swordsman of the opposition. He would have slain Sir Roland if he got inside the gate and the troops of the opposition would have been in possession when the king and his soldiers returned.

That night as they sat down at the long feast table the king had a beautiful light thrown upon the one who had rendered the greatest service during the day, and lo! the light played upon the face of Sir Roland, who had stayed home and guarded the gate, who kept the palace, and all was well when they who fought in the field returned to their possessions inside the iron gates and wall.

Senators, the ballot box in my State is the citadel where the people deposit their expressed will. In those ballot boxes are the weapons that they used on election doy. They represent their rights and liberties, the greatest weapon known to free men, the ballot, with which man will preserve his rights and liberties, and the ill use of which and abuse of which will destroy his liberty. "The ballot box," the lawmakers of my State have said, "is so sacred that when you get through with the ballots you will roll them tight and seal them, no more to be looked at except in case of a contest. If the contest does not come in six months, so sacred are these ballots that the sheriff must burn them in bulk without ever unrolling them to see how anybody voted." Sacred institution! "High sheriff, lift up your hand and swear by the gods that you will defend that ballot box and keep it inviolate; permit no one, Bankhead supporter or Heflin supporter, to invade the sacred precincts of the Alabama ballot box and open the door and go in and rifle these sacred instruments placed there by the hands of the voters, the sovereign voters of the State. If you permit this ballot box to be opened, you are unfaithful, an unworthy official. You are a criminal. You violate the law. Every time it happens there is a $500 fine and an imprisonment penalty beside."

What did they do? Did they guard the gate like Sir Roland did? No! In 1,014 instances out of 2,043 they marched in the ballot-box burglars and took possession of the sacred Ark of the Covenant, the ballot boxes in my State. They were turned over to Bankhead supporters; they were manipulated by Bankhead supporters. None of these ballot boxes were opened by my supporters. That is the truth about it.

Senators, what are you going to do about it? I want to say this in conclusion. I have spoken at great length. I appreciate more than I can tell the Senate the kindness extended to me in this matter. I wish I could have had all my evidence and could have laid it before you in consecutive order from beginning to end. We have been denied that. I have been denied it at the instance of the contestee and his friends. Remember that. I have not been permitted to close my case because they have denied me the right to do it. I shall not soon forget the treatment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] when they got up in the committee and refused to serve when this matter was referred back to give me a chance to get further testimony. I never witnessed such a scene and I hope I may never again. I do not think that was fair treatment that was accorded to me. After I was gone they decided to act again on the committee, and during my absence closed the case, and now it has gone to you.

Senators, you must decide it. I hope you will do what is fair and just in the matter. If you decide this case as you ought to, you are bound to declare that Senator Bankhead was never legally nominated, was never legally on the ticket, and therefore could not be elected. That is the first part you have to do with.

On the other hand, coming down to the general election, you will say, "Gentlemen, the trail of the serpent of corruption is over it all. Why did you burglarize these ballot boxes? Why did you number some of them and not number others? Why did you number some with ink and some with pencil? Why did you leave 58,000 unnumbered entirely? Why did you vote these 14,000 absentee ballots when you can not produce the voters of over 4,000 of them?" These are some of the questions that you must settle.

Mr. President, I would like to have the privilege of inserting in the RECORD the papers and matters I have referred to at the points I have mentioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be entered.

Mr. HEFLIN. Senators, again I want to thank you. You know there is a verse of Scripture that reads like this: "The time shall come when a man's foes shall be they of his own household." That is a great old book, the Bible. "They of his own household." Here we have a situation where I fear some of my friends on the Democratic side are not going to be very enthusiastic in really trying this case. I wish I had time to review the record of the votes in the Smith and Vare cases. I would like to see how these same Senators voted. I recall how they voted, but I would like to see how their names appear in the RECORD. They were very eager and anxious then to put Smith out. They really made some good speeches about the importance and necessity of safeguarding the Senate and keeping crooks and criminals out. I remember how eloquent some of them were, and when I see them failing to enthuse over safeguarding elections in a Southern State, a Democratic State, I am astounded; I am disappointed at the position they take. Let us hold fast to the doctrine that Washington laid down and that I quoted to you to-day. Party spirit? He said we all have it to a certain extent. To a certain extent it is all right; but when you reach the point that party spirit will cause you to lose sight of the good of your country it is party spirit gone mad, and the liberties of your people will be lost if you submit to it.

I have fought the corrupt doings of the party machine. In doing it I have fought for the good of my party and the good of my country. I have fought crookedness and corruption in Alabama. I shall continue to fight it. I have been engaged somewhat in a lecture tour in the country speaking on "America at the Cross Roads," discussing economic problems and various things that affect the life of this Nation. I shall continue to speak for the good of my country and the perpetuity of the free institutions of my country.

I love the Democratic Party. I have given devoted service to it from my youth time. I have done far more than any man that sits in this Chamber for my party in my State. I do not say that boastingly. I have done more in other States in the affairs of the Democratic Party than any Democrat who sits on this side of the Chamber. I have letters from the chairmen of the national committee, when the campaigns were over, telling me how they appreciated my services. I have fought the battles of my party. I have tried to keep it clean and honest. When I came up in 1930 and submitted my claim to the party that has honored me for more than a quarter of a century, I was denied the right to enter the Democratic household where my forebears were born and died, shut out and not permitted to go in and submit my claim. I said, "Let the Democrats punish me. If I have sinned, let my party punish me. If they approve what I have done, then it is the will of the party, and the party approves it, and that settles it." They said, "No; if we let him in he will be nominated." They would not allow the Democrats to vote.

I make the further statement to you if they had let me in Mr. Bankhead would never have been a candidate. My staying out meant his campaign and whatever would follow to the gang and the machine. Mr. Bankhead is a very wealthy man. Mr. Bankhead had it in his power to let me in. Mr. Bankhead and his machine kept me out. Mr. Bankhead and his crowd in Alabama are responsible for all the skullduggery practiced at the polls and following the election.

They say the election in some places was all right. Certainly, it was in many places. Then where did this skullduggery take place? It took place at the courthouse after the election. How did it happen that the ballot boxes were opened? Senator BLACK says Bankhead county officials were not opening them. He did not know. I knew. I was getting the news about it, and when we would go after them we would find half of them opened and entered in the household of Bankhead's friends, and my evidence destroyed. I do not know whether the ballots they contained were the ballots voted by the voters or not, and the Senate does not know. They are there; they are fixed; and, of course, they tally with the returns down there when they are counted here. They fixed them there. I never expected that there would be much difference shown by the recount, but it was the only way we could find out how the ballots appeared when we got in charge of them.

Now, there you are, Senators. Over half the ballot boxes in my State were opened and entered by Bankhead's partisans. My case is bristling with evidence like that, all up and down the line, evidence which I have been unable to produce because my case has been closed, the door shut in my face, and shut at the instance of the contestee and his supporters on this side of the aisle, with the aid of my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE].

That is the situation. Take my case, Senators. Many of you have rendered some good and signal service here. I wish that some many more years of useful service. The Senate is a great body; it ought to be true to its traditions, true to the great ideals of the great statesmen who have served here. It ought never to degenerate into a body of politicians who will register and carry out the designs of crooked politicians in the States. Here is one place where they must not enter.

Like Sir Roland, you should guard the gate with drawn sword against all imposters. When they come and say that these were minor irregularities, tell them, like Sir Roland, "Get back, you imposter." When they say that the unidentified absentee voters were all right, tell them to get back. And when they come with ballots forged by the hundreds and thousands in the ballot boxes, tell them to get back. When it develops that half the ballots have been opened and the boxes burglarized, tell them to get back; tell them to come here with clean hands, with an honest certificate, and all will be well, "but if you come here with the trail of the serpent of corruption and fraud all over it we will not accept you in the Senate; and if you get in, as soon as the truth is known we will lift you out and send you back."

Senators, be just and fair to me; be just and fair to the people whom I represent, the people who elected me. More than two-thirds of the Democrats and three-fourths of the Republicans voted for me. I was elected by an overwhelming majority. You see what a fix they have got the ballot boxes in. They had charge of the election, and boasted of it, in 61 counties out of 67. You can see what chance I had in compelling a fair election and fair count under those conditions. Not only that, but they were boasting that they would steal the election from me. I stand ready now to produce more than 1,000 reputable witnesses in the State who will swear that prominent Bankhead supporters told them that I would win the election but that they were going to steal it from me.

Senators, I thank you for your patience, for your goodness in giving me this opportunity to discuss this matter in a rambling way, and to give you somewhat a picture of the situation in my State. I am hoping and praying that you will stay with it and give attention to it until it is settled, and settled right.

William Jennings Bryan, the Great Commoner, said, "No cause is ever settled until it is settled right." Another has said:

> Great is the facile conqueror;
> Yet happy he, who, wounded sore,
> Breathless, unhorsed, all covered o'er
> With blood and sweat, sinks foiled, but fighting evermore,
> Is greater yet.

And Byron has said:

> For Freedom's battle once begun,
> Bequeath'd by bleeding sire to son,
> Though baffled oft is ever won.

I pledge you in this sacred place with my heart and my all, where I served as best I could for over 10 years, that I will carry on in the interest of good government. I pledge the people of my State, who have honored me all through these years, who are supporting me now loyally and holding up my hands as I am fighting to smash the worst political machine outside of Tammany and Pittsburgh and Philadelphia, that I will carry on, fight on and on and on until we have a clean ballot and an honest and fair count, until we break the jaws of the wicked machine and pluck the spoil from its teeth. Corrupt machine politics shall not control my State. I do not care how many recruits in this body it draws into its fold, Alabama shall be free; my State will walk again with unfettered step; her voters will vote as they choose and, by the eternal God, every ballot shall be counted as cast. I thank you, Senators. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries.

Mr. MCNARY obtained the floor.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. MCNARY. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I think it is quite important at this point for me to make a statement correcting some things said by Mr. Heflin.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. The occupants of the galleries as they go out will maintain some semblance of order.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, Mr. Heflin stated correctly that he was prevented from producing all the testimony that he desired to produce. Several times during his address he stated that that was due to the activities of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON]. I want to say that that is not correct. The suggestion of stopping the taking of testimony was made by myself and concurred in by other members of the subcommittee. I think it is my duty to make that statement and to make it at this time.

One other point with respect to voting in committee at the time Mr. Heflin was away. At the time I received my notice it did not include the consideration of the Bankhead case, and I so told Mr. Heflin. The matter was taken up, however, and, finding that it was about to be taken up, I attended the meeting. The vote came, however, upon the statement being made by Mr. Bankhead's counsel that he did not care to argue the matter. It was an executive meeting, and there was no advantage taken of the fact that Mr. Heflin was away. I think it is due the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] that I should make that statement.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts presented petitions of 82 citizens of the State of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. 9891) to provide for the establishment of a system of pensions for railroad and transportation employees and for a railroad pension board, and for other purposes, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Cambridge and vicinity, in the State of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of legislation providing for full cash payment of adjusted-compensation certificates of World War veterans (bonus), which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Boston, Mass., remonstrating against the imposition of a tax of a cent a shell upon shotgun shells, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ASHURST presented a telegram from "Walker," Tuba City, Ariz., favoring an amendment of House bill 10236, the revenue and taxation bill, so as to exclude Indian-made goods from the proposed tax on jewelry, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a telegram from Thomas J. Elliott, commander Department of Arizona, Disabled Veterans of the World War, Tucson, Ariz., protesting against proposed amendment of section 19 of the World War veterans' act, relative to the introduction of evidence by veterans, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JONES presented a resolution adopted by the council of the city of Tacoma, Wash., indorsing the proposal for the appropriation of $5,500,000,000 for a public-works program, and the making of $3,750,000,000 of such proposed appropriation available for loans to cities, counties, and States for the construction of highways, streets, bridges, water supply, sewerage works, public buildings, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Snohomish Valley Council, No. 19, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Snohomish, Wash., favoring the passage of the so-called Moore bill, being House bill 10602, for the further restriction of immigration, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Chehalis, Wash., remonstrating against proposed reductions in the compensation of Federal employees or curtailment of the annual-leave privilege, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens, being postal employees, of Wenatchee, Wash., remonstrating against proposed reductions in the compensation of post-office clerks, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Bordeaux, Bucoda, Centralia, Elma, Malone, and Pe Ell, all in the State of Washington, praying for the imposition of adequate import duties on logs, lumber, shingles, and pulp, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted by Tully Grange, No. 617, Apulia, N. Y., indorsing the so-called Sparks-Capper stop alien representation amendment, providing that aliens shall be excluded from the count of the whole number of persons in each State in apportioning Representatives in the several States according to their respective numbers, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the executive committee of the American Asiatic Association, at India House, New York City, relative to Senate bill 7 and House bill 4648, providing for the deportation of certain alien seamen, and for other purposes, and urging revision thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Finger Lakes Council, No. 196, Junior Order United American Mechanics, of Ithaca, N. Y., favoring the passage of legislation providing more effective investigation of violations of the immigration law, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of New York City and Larchmont, N. Y., remonstrating against the passage of legislation providing for the payment of adjusted-compensation certificates (bonus) of World War veterans at the present time, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by members of the College of the City of New York, Post No. 717, American Legion, of New York City, N. Y., opposing the passage of legislation providing for payment of adjusted-compensation certificates (bonus) of World War veterans at the present time, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the New York Commandery of the Military Order of Foreign Wars of the United States, protesting against the payment of adjusted-compensation certificates (bonus) of World War veterans at the present time, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Royalton Township Taxpayers' Association, of Niagara County, N. Y., favoring retrenchment in governmental expenditures and the imposition of only necessary taxation, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of New York City, N. Y., praying for the adoption of immediate measures to end national prohibition, so that taxes may be levied upon liquor, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter from H. D. Wolfe, vice president of Revere Copper & Brass (Inc.), of Rome, N. Y., favoring retrenchment in governmental expenditures, and inclosing copy of resolutions adopted by the Rome (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce relative to proposed building construction, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the executive committee of the Merchant Tailors' Society, of New York City, N. Y., protesting against the imposition of a tax on sales of securities, also against the payment of adjusted-compensation certificates (bonus) of World War veterans at the present time, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Buffalo and vicinity, in the State of New York, remonstrating against the imposition of taxes on automobiles, gasoline, lubricating oil, and, in general, on the motor industry, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Massena (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring the passage of legislation providing for a tariff duty on ground wood and chemical pulp, and also legislation providing for a surtax on products which are being shipped into the United States and quoted f. o. b. United States ports at a price far under the cost of production in the United States owing to the depreciated currencies of foreign countries manufacturing such products, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a letter from the president of the American Chamber of Commerce in France (Inc.), Paris, France, inclosing copy of a resolution adopted by the members of that chamber in regard to the alleged discriminatory attitude of the French Government toward American exports to France in the application of its policy of limitation of imports by means of quotas, and also copy of an editorial from the Paris edition of the New York Herald of the 3d instant, entitled "Inviting Reprisals," which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Kew Gardens, Flushing, Bellmore, and Brooklyn, N. Y., remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill 695, relative to veteran benefits, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by members of the Amityville Business Men's Club, of Amityville, N. Y., favoring the balancing of the Budget and retrenchment in governmental expenditures, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Hudson Post, No. 184, American Legion, of Hudson, N. Y., favoring the construction of an addition to the Hudson city post office, starting not later than July 1, 1932, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Mohawk Regular Democratic Club, of Long Island City, N. Y., protesting against proposed reductions in the compensation of Federal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Buffalo (N. Y.) Teachers' Club, protesting against the suspension or curtailment of Federal aid to the States for vocational education, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from members of the Sodus (N. Y.) Young Farmers' Club, remonstrating against the proposal to suspend for one year payments for vocational education, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens, being substitute employees of the Schenectady (N. Y.) post office, praying for the passage of pending legislation for the relief of substitute employees in the Postal Service, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Rome (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring a thorough investigation in the interest of economy to ascertain if there is an immediate need for the erection of a new post office in the city of Rome, N. Y., with a view to determining whether such expenditure may be postponed to a later date, and that like investigation may be made as to other proposed post offices and public buildings, the erection of which is now contemplated, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the common council of the city of Oswego, N. Y., favoring the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the executive committee of the Merchant Tailors' Society, of New York City, N. Y., opposing the maintenance of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution and the Volstead Act, etc., which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial adopted by the Somerset Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Utica, N. Y., remonstrating against the adoption of any measure seeking to legalize the sale of beer, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the City Missionary Union and the Woman's Union Missionary Society, of Oswego, N. Y., favoring the maintenance of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution and its enforcement law, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the State Convention of the Reserve Officers' Association, at Albany, N. Y., favoring the making of a sufficient appropriation to provide inactive duty and flying training for the air reserve combat pilots during the remainder of the fiscal year 1932, etc., which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by San Antonio Chapter, No. 1, Disabled Emergency Officers of the World War, of San Antonio, Tex., favoring the maintenance of the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, as the permanent military policy of the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented resolutions adopted at the annual meeting of the board of directors of the Laundryowners' National Association of the United States and Canada, in relation to the subject of activities of the Government in business and governmental expenditures and economies, which were referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD copy of a letter written to the President of the United States by an honored member of the New York State Legislature, Hon. Louis A. Cuvillier. It is a protest against alienating sovereignty over the Philippines.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ASSEMBLY CHAMBER,
STATE OF NEW YORK,
Albany, February 22, 1932.

Hon. HERBERT HOOVER,
President of the United States,
White House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: It is apparent to my mind that Congress during the present session will pass a bill granting independence to the Philippine Islands. Of course, this bill, though in my mind is absolutely unconstitutional, will have to meet with your approval or veto.

Laying aside the question if these islands are a liability instead of an asset, and if the Philippines will be well governed under their own leaders, it is a grave question if Congress has the right to grant independence to these islands. As you know, under article 3 of the treaty with Spain at the conclusion of the Spanish-American War in 1898, "Spain cedes to the United States the archipelago known as the Philippine Islands" and the payment of $20,000,000 by the United States, and by article 2 of the same treaty, "Spain cedes to the United States the island of Porto Rico and other islands under Spanish sovereignty in the West Indies, and the island of Guam in the Ladrones." This treaty was ratified by the Senate of the United States and received the approval of President McKinley on April 11, 1899. The United States conquered these islands in the war with Spain. Each and every acquisition of territory annexed to the United States, either on the continent of North America or its insular possessions, was acquired either by conquest in war or purchase, was ceded to the United States by treaties; the only exception was the treaty between Great Britain and the thirteen original States, which was negotiated in 1783 and afterwards ratified by the Congress of the United States and received the approval of the President of the United States, Great Britain acknowledged the thirteen original States to be free, sovereign, and independent States, and, following, the acquisition of other territory by the United States was as follows: The treaty with France, 1803, whereby France ceded the French possession in the North American Continent know was as the "Louisiana Purchase," on the payment of $15,000,000 to France. The next treaty was with Spain, 1819, whereby Spain ceded to the United States East and West Florida and adjacent islands dependent on said Provinces. The next treaty was with the Republic of Mexico, 1848, whereby Mexico ceded to the United States Texas, New Mexico, and Upper California. The next treaty was with the Empire of Russia, in which Russia ceded its possessions in North America, Alaska (1867). In 1898, by joint resolution in Congress to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, in which the Republic of Hawaii ceded absolutely and without reserve the Hawaiian Islands to the United States of America, all rights of sovereignty on said islands. The next treaty, 1904, whereby the United States guaranteed independence of the Republic of Panama for the purpose of constructing the Panama Canal. So you can see by all of these treaties the word "cede" is the predominant word that gives absolute title to these territorial possessions to the people of the United States forever.

The question may arise why the United States gave recognition to the independence of Cuba in its treaty with Spain; it did so because the United States, on April 12, 1898, through Congress, declared war against the Kingdom of Spain for the purpose of securing the independence of Cuba, but no such condition is attached to the treaty with Spain as to the possessions of the Philippine Islands. In the event that you do approve of the resolution for the independence of the Philippine Islands, I am of the opinion that the Supreme Court of the United States will declare such resolution unconstitutional. In the case of Downes v. Bidwell (182 U. S. 271) the court said: "Where the Constitution has been once formally extended by Congress to Territories, neither Congress nor the Territorial legislature can enact laws inconsistent therewith." The Supreme Court, in Murphy v. Hausey (114 U. S. 44), said: "The people of the United States as sovereign owners of the national territories have supreme power over them and their inhabitants. In the exercise of this sovereign domain they are represented by the Government of the United States, to whom all the powers of government over that subject have been delegated, subject only to such restrictions as are expressed in the Constitution or are necessarily implied in its terms or in the purposes and objects of the power itself. * * * But in ordaining government for the Territory, and the people who inhabit it, all the discretion which belongs to legislative power is vested in Congress; and that extends beyond all controversy, to be determined by law from time to time, the form of the local government in a particular Territory and the qualification of those who shall administer it." The Supreme Court stated in United States v. Tagma (118 U. S. 380): "The power of Congress to organize Territorial governments and make laws for the inhabitants arises not so much from the clause in the Constitution in regard to the disposal of and making rules and regulations concerning the Territory and other property of the United States as from the ownership of the country in which the Territories are and the right of exclusive sovereignty which must exist in the National Government and can be found nowhere else." The Supreme Court held in the case of Sere v. Pitot (U. S. Cranch 336): "The power of the Government and the legislating for the Territory is the inevitable consequence of the right to acquire and hold territory." The United States Court further stated in Door v. United States (195 U. S. 143): "Until Congress shall see fit to incorporate territory ceded by treaty into the United States, we regard it as settled * * * that the Territory is to be governed under the power existing in Congress to make laws for such Territories and subject to such constitutional restrictions upon the powers of that body as are applicable to the situation."

It is assumed that Congress in attempting to grant independence to the Philippine Islands does so under clause 2, section 3, of Article IV of the Constitution of the United States, which states: "The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territories or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or any particular State." The United States court stated in Kansas v. Colorado (208 U. S. 89): "The full scope of this paragraph has never been definitely settled." Most of the States in the Union were originally Territories—Indiana, Wisconsin, Illinois, Louisiana, Alabama, Arkansas, Missouri, Michigan, Kansas, Nebraska, Utah, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Idaho, Washington, Colorado, North and South Dakota, Oregon, Iowa, Minnesota, Arizona. Can it be conceded that these States above mentioned which were originally Territories that Congress had the constitutional power to alienate, sell, and convey the same to a foreign power or grant them independence and autonomy beyond the control and sovereignty of the people of the United States and the Government of the United States; if so, there is no valid reason why the insular possessions of the United States as well as part of the domain of the United States in North America should not be returned to the sovereignty of the nations that originally owned them under the treaties negotiated between the United States and these foreign states of the property and territory so ceded to the United States.

It seems to be a disposition in Congress to let the Philippine Islands go to the mercies of other foreign nations who will conquer them just as soon as the United States relinquishes its sovereignty over these islands. It appears that many members of Congress are glad to get rid of these islands on the ground of selfish commercial interests, claiming that these islands' products come in competition with the products of the States and also that the emigration of the Filipinos to the States has a detrimental effect on the citizens of the States to make a livelihood. Such idiotic theory is not worthy of the thought of an ignoramus who does not know the first rudiments of government. These islands, both as to production of agriculture and mining wealth, if properly exploited, will be an asset to the United States and a source of great revenue, and I have no patience with the Vandenbergs, Hawes, and Cuttings theory about the Philippine Islands. If they and their like would read the history of these islands by the late General Wood, Governor General for many years of the Philippine Islands, I am sure they and Congress would have an entirely different view as to the independence of these islands.

Never in the history of the United States has it ever ceded territory once acquired by it. From a defensive point of view these islands are an absolute necessity. The Philippine Islands, with the Hawaiian and some more islands, give the United States the absolute control of the Pacific Ocean, the same as Gibraltar gives control to Great Britain of the Mediterranean Sea. If the United States were to abandon the Philippine Islands there is a profound feeling in the United States that we will suffer not only a vast loss of prestige but of trade and commerce in the Far East; that to give up these islands would practically be to retreat the United States out of the Pacific Ocean. In view of the aggressive action of Japan in Manchuria and in China there are deep misgivings as to what would happen to Americans' interests in the Orient or to the Philippines themselves if the Stars and Stripes should no longer float over these islands. Japan for the past 500 years has had an eye for the possession of the Philippine Islands. In 1590 the Emperor of Japan, Hidyaski, demanded of the Spanish governor general of these islands their surrender to Japan. The Spanish governor general ignored the Emperor's request, and these islands remained in the possession of the Kingdom of Spain until 1898, when they were conquered by the United States in the War with Spain. Recent events in Hawaii have served to emphasize the importance of the strongholds of the United States in the Pacific and as a warning to the United States to beware of the false step in this direction, because if these islands are once out of the United States it is a question whether the white race is to abandon Asia; which, to my mind, would be a prelude to a vast uprising in India against Great Britain, and is one which concerns the civilized world.

Respectfully,

LOUIS A. CUVILLIER,
Member New York Legislature.

PROTECTION OF ALASKAN REINDEER HERDS

Mr. BARBOUR presented a letter from Mrs. J. E. Barbour, of Paterson, N. J., relative to the protection of the reindeer herds in Alaska, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KILBARCHAN,
Paterson, N. J., April 25, 1932.

Senator W. WARREN BARBOUR,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BARBOUR: I am writing you on behalf of the Eskimos of Alaska, to ask that you will lend your influence toward any legislation which will protect the reindeer herds for them. It is their only source of food, clothing, and financial support.

I understand that the natives are helpless in the face of organized corporations of white men, by whose cleverness, coupled with cupidity, are fast gaining control of all the herds of reindeer.

For the past 10 years they have been pleading for relief and the enforcement of the laws for their protection.

Thanking you for anything you may be able to do in this matter, I am,

Yours very truly,

K. N. BARBOUR.
Mrs. J. E. BARBOUR.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BINGHAM, from the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7233) to enable the people of the Philippine Islands to adopt a constitution and form a government for the Philippine Islands, to provide for the independence of the same, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10277) to transfer Lincoln County from the Columbia division to the Winchester division of the middle Tennessee judicial district, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 595) thereon.

Mr. STEIWER, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 4070) to authorize the acquisition of a certain building, furniture, and equipment in the Crater Lake National Park, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 596) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 9970. An act to add certain land to the Crater Lake National Park in the State of Oregon, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 597); and

H. R. 10284. An act to authorize the acquisition of additional land in the city of Medford, Oreg., for use in connection with the administration of the Crater Lake National Park (Rept. No. 598).

Mr. NYE, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 9591. An act to extend the period of time during which final proof may be offered by homestead entrymen (Rept. No. 599); and

H. R. 10744. An act to authorize the issuance of patents for certain lands in the State of Colorado for certain purposes (Rept. No. 600).

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF THE POST OFFICE COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters, which were placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. GEORGE:

A bill (S. 4486) for the relief of Eddie B. Black; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 4487) for the relief of Leo W. Hurley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 4488) for the relief of Frank W. Bailey; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4489) for the relief of Lydia A. Thompson; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4490) granting a pension to James Mason; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. COPELAND:

A bill (S. 4491) amending the shipping act, 1916, as amended, for the purpose of further regulating common carriers by water in interstate commerce of the United States engaged in transportation by way of the Panama Canal; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4492) to provide for the vocational rehabilitation of the blind; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 4493) providing for the appointment of midshipmen reserves to the United States Naval Academy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HAYDEN:

A bill (S. 4494) for the relief of William J. Mason, jr.; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. CAREY:

A bill (S. 4495) amending section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916 (ch. 9, par. 1, 39 Stat. 862), and as amended February 28, 1931 (ch. 328, 46 Stat. 1454); to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

REVENUE AND TAXATION—AMENDMENTS

Mr. COUZENS submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10236, the revenue and taxation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

Mr. METCALF submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10236, the revenue and taxation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

ADDRESS BY CLAUDE G. BOWERS AT THE UNVEILING OF THE STATUE OF JAMES MONROE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, at the old home of James Monroe there gathered yesterday a notable group of Americans. The occasion was the unveiling of a monument to the author of the Monroe doctrine. The address was made by that eloquent exponent of Democracy, Mr. Claude G. Bowers. It is so appealing, so stirring, that I crave the privilege of giving it to the American people. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and it is as follows:

ADDRESS BY CLAUDE G. BOWERS AT THE UNVEILING OF THE STATUE OF JAMES MONROE AT "ASH LAWN," CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA., APRIL 25, 1932

Not often are ceremonies in commemoration of the distinguished dead solemnized under circumstances more interesting than these here to-day. Here stands Ash Lawn, so long the home in which Monroe lived and meditated—designed by Jefferson, the idol of his heart. There looms the Norwegian pine he brought back as a souvenir of his services to his country in foreign lands. Here is the famous boxwood he brought home from England, which, like his fame, is green and more robust than it ever was before. Across this lawn he was wont to look up to the hilltop of the great philosopher of democracy to whose fundamental principles he was as unchanging as the North Star; for it was his wish that the home be built so that in the night he could see from his windows the light twinkling in the mansion of Monticello. Hither, many times the master of that mansion rode on horseback to discuss the perils and the problems of the times. It was on this spot, at the beginning of the memorable campaign of 1800 that was to end in the Jeffersonian triumph, which definitely determined that ours should be a democratic republic, that Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe secretly planned the strategy of the struggle.

And here we raise a beautiful monument with a romantic history of its own. When the sculptor was still young and ardent in his art, he was commissioned by Venezuela to make it for her capital, as a visible expression of her appreciation of Monroe. Into the molding of the marble went all the youthful ardor of the artist, and then came the British challenge to the doctrine of Monroe in the Venezuelan crisis, and the militant counterchallenge of Cleveland in the phrasing of Olney. That incident that so nearly led to war was closed with victory for the policy of Monroe, but the delicacy of the situation would have made the unveiling of the statue then seem to England as the salting of a sore. And so the years have passed, and this exquisite bit of statuary has been treasured in the studio of the sculptor, who came to love it with the passing of the years, as the favorite of his youth.

Now we bring it home to-day to be unveiled in the presence of Piccirilli, to the house designed by Jefferson, where grows the boxwood planted by Monroe, and where looms the pine tree of his travels that threw its shadows on his sunny afternoons.

It is fitting, too, that this should be done in the presence of the governors of the various States, whose constitutional rights and sovereign dignity never had a stouter champion than he.

SACRED GROUND

All this is sacred ground. Within a radius of a few miles lived the immortal trio whose joint labors made ours a republic dedicated to liberty and human rights. On yonder hilltop is the home of Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence and the philosopher of democracy. Not far away, at Montpelier, dwelt Madison, the "father of the Constitution." And here lived Monroe, the author of the doctrine that has preserved the American Republic from the interference of the European powers. These scenes were familiar with the figures of them all; for hereabouts they often sat under the trees on summer days in solemn converse on the problems of the hour.

There was something beautiful and rare in the friendship of these Plutarchian men; nor was it solely a similarity in their political ideals that held them in these bonds. The ties of personal affection were quite as strong. They loved each other for their virtues and found it easy to pardon each other's faults. One by one they passed with popular acclaim to the highest honors of the Republic and wrote their deeds into the golden book of American achievement.

I have associated James Monroe with his two immortal friends because he would have had it so.

MONROE THE MAN

Among these three musketeers of democracy in America, Monroe was the outstanding man of action. He was essentially a fighter. The others might use rapier of finesse; Monroe preferred the battle-ax. He arrived at his conclusions through conscientious and meticulous research; but when his opinion had been formed, it was a conviction to which he courageously adhered. No one ever had to inquire where he stood on a controversial proposition—he stood openly in the forefront of the battle where the struggle was the fiercest.

There was nothing of the poison of envy in his blood. Even his momentary clash with Madison, when their ambitions met, failed to chill the warmth of his affections for the man of Montpelier. Even the unpleasantness with Jefferson over the rejection of the English treaty could not diminish his love and admiration for the genius of Monticello.

We need not concern ourselves in the study of his character with the methods of the psychoanalysts. It is enough to know that Madison admired and loved him; that Jefferson said "he is a man whose soul might be turned wrong side outward without discovering a blemish to the world." It is enough to know that John Quincy Adams, who, in his diary, scarcely permitted a contemporary to go unscatched, said that the mind of Monroe "was anxious and unwearied in the pursuit of truth and right, patient in inquiry and contradiction, courteous even in collision of sentiment, sound in its ultimate judgments, and firm in its final conclusions." And that Lord Holland, whose drawing room and dining room in London were graced by the most remarkable characters of his time in literature, politics, and art, found him "a man of candor and principle—diligent, earnest, sensible, and profound."

In his public character he was of Cato-like austerity; in his friendships he was all fidelity; and to his country he gave the whole of a robust mind and a devoted heart.

MONROE'S PRINCIPLES

Monroe was precocious in the development of his political ideals. Nature made him a Republican. He knew that God never placed a crown upon the head or a lash in the hand of any man born of woman with the divine right to ride roughshod over his fellow men.

And nature and the frontier made him a Democrat. He knew that any government that does not rest upon the affections of the people because of its equal devotion to the common interests of them all is a usurpation and an imposition based on force or fraud.

He opposed the ratification of the Constitution as it came from the convention because of the absence of a bill of rights for the protection of the citizen against the abuse of power.

He believed in the sovereign rights of States; he opposed as dangerous the centralization of power; he demanded that political power in the Republic be disseminated among the people in their homes and not concentrated in some remote capital.

The political philosophy of Monroe was born of his passion for liberty and human rights. That is the Americanism of the founders, and when it dies the Republic will cease to live.

HIS FOOTSTEPS

It would be profitable if we had the time to trace the footprints of this great man over the pages of our history.

There would be a thrill in the story of the youth of the Revolution—the gallant charge at Trenton, where he captured the artillery of the enemy, received a bullet in his shoulder he was to carry to his grave, and was glorified by the enconium of Washington.

We might pause to reflect on the prophetic vision of the young statesman, less than 30, who in the midst of a general indifference to the western country, framed the celebrated report on the American right to the navigation of the Mississippi, and to an outlet at New Orleans.

There is sheer romance in the story of his embassy to revolutionary France where, as lone ambassador, he received the fraternal embrace of the president of the convention in the tribunal whence only a few days before the outraged members had hurled the bloody Robespierre.

What American can not thrill to the tale of his rescue of Paine, the American patriot, from the shadow of the guillotine, and the story of the finesse with which he managed to save the wife of Lafayette from a bloody death without incurring the displeasure of the revolutionary government?

We should like to picture him negotiating for the purchase of the empire of Louisiana, with a vivid realization of the imperial destiny of the nation, and taking his leave of Napoleon in the palace of St. Cloud.

It would be interesting to follow him to Madrid in his unsuccessful effort to purchase Florida, and then rejoice with him during his Presidency in the final consummation of his hope.

ORGANIZER OF VICTORY

But because of the slovenly justice done him on the page of history we must pause for a hasty review of the heroic part he played in the War of 1812.

He had entered the Cabinet of Madison as Secretary of State on condition that he have the utmost freedom in attempting a peaceable settlement of the differences between the United States and England. But England was arrogant and unyielding; and when the choice was offered between the supine surrender of our rights and war he joined the war party and became its leader.

It was he who finally framed the report on the situation of the Calhoun committee in the Senate, and he it was who phrased the war passages in the message of his chief.

And so the war came, and reverses set in; and the energetic spirit of the patriot and the man of action chafed at the inaptitude and lassitude of the Secretary of War. Then came the black humiliation at Bladensburg; the descent on Washington, and the scenes of vandalism there. In the midst of the resulting panic and military chaos James Monroe for three days seldom quit the saddle and did not change his clothes.

In that crisis in the Nation's history Madison turned to the strong man of his administration who held the portfolio of State, and, making him Minister of War as well, intrusted him literally with the preservation of the Nation's honor.

The moment the power was his he dynamitized the people, fanned their smoldering patriotism into flames, moved with iron courage and quick decision to his task, projected his energy and enthusiasm into the troops, found necessary equipment for the fighting forces, and, keenly conscious of the possibilities at New Orleans, he hurried every available resource to Andrew Jackson.

In that dark hour, aside from Jackson, the strong man of the Republic was James Monroe, who stiffened our resistance and revived our confidence. We rejoice in the glory of Perry; we glory in the triumph of Jackson; but there was a trio of masters in that struggle, and one was James Monroe.

THE PRESIDENCY

Thus the strong man of the Madison administration moved with logical sequence to the Presidency. With his ascension the Federalist Party ceased to be a potent factor in affairs. The brilliant company of its original leadership was gone, and its treachery in the second English war had discredited it forever. The Jeffersonian concept of the State was now generally accepted. No longer was there anything to fight about, and under Monroe the Nation entered upon the era of good feeling.

Happy were the people under his rulership. Two Jeffersonians before him had established the Government on a democratic basis of simplicity and common sense. There was rigid economy in public expenditures. The taxes merely measured the cost of government economically administered. The whole people, none too rich, and none in abject poverty, enjoyed prosperity and peace. Yes; there was peace in the land, and peace in the hearts of the people.

About the Cabinet table sat the strongest advisors any President has had since the first administration of Washington. Incapable of envy, and competent to hold his own in any company, Monroe summoned to his side the foremost intellects of the Republic. There, in the State Department, sat John Quincy Adams, the most adequately trained diplomat America had known—robust in mind and impeccable in character. There, in the Treasury, was William H. Crawford, one of the soundest, sanest, greatest statesman in the early Republic, who barely missed the Presidency. There, in the War Office, sat Calhoun, with one of the most brilliant philosophic minds that our race has ever known.

It was more than the era of good feeling; it was the millennium of the giants.

THE MONROE DOCTRINE

And one wise, courageous act put upon that administration the stamp of immortality. With the setting of the sun of the Corsican genius at Waterloo all the forces of autocracy and tyranny began to strut under the euphonious banner of legitimacy. From the hour the people of Paris rose in wrath and battered down the Bastile the autocrats of the world had been forced to lower their minds to the vulgar consideration of the temper of their subjects. But now the Bourbons were back from their travels and on the throne of France, and in Paris, Vienna, St. Petersburg, and Berlin autocracy was fortifying itself against liberty and human rights. Metternick and Tallyrand, the poison spiders of diplomacy, were weaving their web of legitimacy to hold back the onward march of liberty-loving men. Thus was wrought in a cold-blooded conspiracy against the peoples of the earth the alliance dedicated to the suppression of all revolts.

And just then the Spanish colonies in South America, catching their inspiration from our revolution, were throwing off the yoke of Spain and taking possession of their governments.

Here was a defiance of the tyrannical alliance of the monarchs and their ministers; here an opportunity for the Old World forcibly to inject itself into the new. Here was an invitation for the combined autocrats of Europe to restore the lost colonies to the King of Spain and assert their right to interfere in the political affairs of the western world.

But deep in the hearts of our people was the determination that this new world would never submit to the dictation of the old; and it fell to Monroe to serve due notice on the monarchs and their ministers across the sea.

This he did in a message that ranks in significance with the greatest State papers of all time. He had pondered the problem presented by the chanceries of Europe; he had tested his conclusions on the minds of Jefferson, Madison, and Adams; and he sat down to the phrasing of the doctrine that was to become the fixed policy of our people.

And he phrased it as happily as Jefferson phrased the Declaration of Independence. Its strong, spirited, clear-cut sentences marched like battalions with bayonets.

Referring to the powers across the sea that had entered into this conspiracy of legitimacy, he declared that "we shall consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety." And, mindful of the threat to the newly acquired independence of the nations of South America, he served notice that "we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as a manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States."

That was all—but that was quite enough. Jefferson had given us a declaration of national independence; it was reserved for Monroe to issue the declaration of independence for the entire western world.

Thus it was that the hopes and plans of the Metternicks and Tallyrands crumbled like a house of cards before the bugle blast of independence sounded by James Monroe.

LAST DAYS

Thus was he crowned with triumphs when the father of the Monroe doctrine entered upon his few remaining years in private life. On yonder hilltop his friend Jefferson was tottering to his tomb between long lines of reverential pilgrims. Madison was gracefully growing old at Montpelier. And now Monroe, too, was added to the company of sages. He visited his dying friend at Monticello, and walked again in the garden at Montpelier with Madison. He presided over the Constitutional Convention of Virginia and accorded recognition to Madison on the floor. He accepted service on the board of the university Jefferson had created for the training of the future leaders of democracy in America. But the twilight deepened rapidly, and, like Jefferson, on the Nation's natal day he passed to history.

A full century has passed; and now we raise this statue presented by the generosity of the sculptor to the Nation, among scenes beloved by Monroe, associated with memorable friendships; on the lawn of the home that witnessed epochal conferences that affected the course of history; and in a section of Virginia redolent of the memory of the three Plutarchian figures who more than any other made this a Republic built upon the democratic concept of the state.

NOMINATION OF VALENTINE J. PETER—NOTIFICATION TO PRESIDENT

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, about two weeks ago Valentine J. Peter was confirmed as United States marshal for the State of Nebraska. It is desired that he should take office on the first of the month. Therefore, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the President may be notified of the confirmation of his nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As in executive session, out of order, the Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the President may be notified of the confirmation of the nomination which the Senator has mentioned. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be entered.

EFFECT OF 10 PER CENT CUT ON INTERNAL REVENUE BUREAU

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue showing the number of internal-revenue agents in each of the 38 field divisions and the number of zone deputy collectors in each of the 64 internal-revenue collection districts who will have to be dropped in case the 10 per cent cut ordered by the Senate in appropriations for the Treasury Department shall be made. The list is furnished at my request by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I have already called attention to the fact that possibly $95,000,000 in internal-revenue collections will be lost if these reductions in the personnel are made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter referred to is as follows:

APRIL 26, 1932.

Hon. TASKER L. ODDIE,
Chairman Subcommittee in Charge of the Treasury Department Appropriation Bill, United States Senate.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In response to your verbal request of yesterday I am submitting herewith two statements: The first showing the number of internal-revenue agents in each of the 38 field divisions whose services would have to be dispensed with in the event the 10 per cent reduction in the administrative appropriation for the Internal Revenue Service is made by the Congress for the fiscal year 1933, and such reduction is to be applied to this branch of the field service; the second statement showing the number of zone deputy collectors in each of the 64 internal-revenue collection districts whose services would have to be terminated in the event of the enactment into law of the above-mentioned 10 per cent reduction in funds and the application of such reduction to the field personnel operating under the supervision of the various collectors of internal revenue.

The information contained in these statements is based on the percentage which each of the two classes of employees concerned in each field office bears to the total number of these respective classes of employees in the entire field service, and these percentages were then applied to the necessary reduction in personnel which would have to be made by reason of the proposed reduction in administrative funds.

Slight modifications in these figures would have to be made in the actual accomplishment of a 10 per cent reduction in personnel cost for the reason that in some of the smaller divisions or collection districts where the territory to be covered is expansive and the population is sparse and widely scattered, it may be possible that no reduction in personnel could be made in such divisions or districts, and in that event a proportionately larger reduction in personnel would have to be made in the larger divisions or districts.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID BURNET, Commissioner.

Revenue agents' divisions—Necessary reduction of revenue agents to meet proposed 10 per cent cut in 1933 appropriation

Division headquarters:
Atlanta	10
Baltimore	27
Boston	60
Brooklyn	34
Buffalo	19
Chicago	47
Cincinnati	15
Cleveland	25
Columbia	5
Dallas	35
Denver	10
Detroit	29
Greensboro	10
Honolulu	3
Huntington	9
Indianapolis	14
Jacksonville	12
Los Angeles	52
Louisville	8
Milwaukee	14
Nashville	16
Newark	32
New Haven	21
New Orleans	10
Oklahoma	16
Omaha	20
Philadelphia	54
Pittsburgh	27
Richmond	11
St. Louis	24
St. Paul	17
Salt Lake City	9
San Francisco	25
Seattle	22
Second New York	79
Springfield	8
Upper New York	70
Wichita	7
Total	906

Internal-revenue collection districts

Collection district	District headquarters	Necessary reduction of zone deputy collectors [1]
Alabama	Birmingham	12
Arizona	Phoenix	5
Arkansas	Little Rock	11

[1] To meet proposed 10 per cent cut in 1933 appropriation.

Internal revenue collection districts—Continued

Collection district	District headquarters	Necessary reduction of zone deputy collectors
California:
First	San Francisco	44
Sixth	Los Angeles	43
Colorado	Denver	12
Connecticut	Hartford	24
Delaware	Wilmington	4
Florida	Jacksonville	21
Georgia	Atlanta	13
Hawaii	Honolulu	5
Idaho	Boise	6
Illinois:
First	Chicago	78
Eighth	Springfield	13
Indiana	Indianapolis	21
Iowa	Des Moines	23
Kansas	Wichita	14
Kentucky	Louisville	20
Louisiana	New Orleans	14
Maine	Augusta	8
Maryland	Baltimore	33
Massachusetts	Boston	54
Michigan	Detroit	44
Minnesota	St. Paul	24
Mississippi	Jackson	7
Missouri:
First	St. Louis	18
Sixth	Kansas City	12
Montana	Helena	10
Nebraska	Omaha	12
Nevada	Reno	3
New Hampshire	Portsmouth	9
New Jersey:
First	Camden	11
Fifth	Newark	30
New Mexico	Albuquerque	6
New York:
First	Brooklyn	42
Second	Customhouse, New York	49
Third	250 West Fifty-seventh Street, New York.	57
Fourteenth	Albany	36
Twenty-first	Syracuse	21
Twenty-eighth	Buffalo	26
North Carolina	Raleigh	13
North Dakota	Fargo	7
Ohio:
First	Cincinnati	17
Tenth	Toledo	13
Eleventh	Columbus	10
Eighteenth	Cleveland	38
Oklahoma	Oklahoma City	15
Oregon	Portland	14
Pennsylvania:
First	Philadelphia	40
Twelfth	Scranton	15
Twenty-third	Pittsburgh	37
Rhode Island	Providence	7
South Carolina	Columbia	7
South Dakota	Aberdeen	7
Tennessee	Nashville	17
Texas:
First	Austin	22
Second	Dallas	22
Utah	Salt Lake City	7
Vermont	Burlington	7
Virginia	Richmond	16
Washington	Tacoma	21
West Virginia	Parkersburg	17
Wisconsin	Milwaukee	30
Wyoming	Cheyenne	6
Total		1,300

ABOLITION OF CUSTOMS DISTRICTS UNDER 10 PER CENT APPROPRIATION CUT

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a statement from the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury before the subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee showing the customs district offices which will be abolished and consolidated in case the 10 per cent cut in appropriations in the Treasury Department appropriations bill ordered by the Senate is carried through.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES CUSTOMS DISTRICTS TO BE ABOLISHED UNDER THE 10 PER CENT CUT OF SENATE

By abolishing the district of Indiana we can save $18,480.
By abolishing the district of Iowa we can save $12,800.
By abolishing the district of Colorado we can save $19,320.
By abolishing the district of Utah and Nevada we can save $8,100.
By abolishing the district of Kentucky we can save $16,700.
By abolishing the district of Tennessee we can save $20,900.
By abolishing the district of Nebraska we can save $15,140.

In Missouri, by abolishing all of the ports in the district, except St. Louis, we can save $39,340.

Duluth, Minn., place under Minneapolis, and we can save $13,600.

Pittsburgh, Pa., place under Philadelphia, with a saving of $19,100.

San Diego, Calif., abolish and place under Los Angeles, $12,500.

Providence, R. I., place under Boston, and abolish the port of Newport, R. I., and we can save $24,000.

Rochester, N. Y., place under Buffalo, and abolish the ports of Utica and Syracuse, with a saving of $23,500.

Milwaukee, Wis., place under Chicago, with a saving of $11,200.

Mobile, Ala., place under New Orleans, and abolish all subports: Birmingham, Gulfport, Pascagoula, and Biloxi, with a saving of $30,696.

You can place Bridgeport, Conn., under New York, and abolish the port of Hartford, and save $24,300.

Ohio: Abolish the ports of Akron, Columbus, Dayton, Cincinnati, and Toledo, and save $54,160.

Wilmington, N. C., place under Norfolk, and abolish the port of Charlotte, and save $8,940.

You can abolish the port of Dallas and save $11,880.

Abolish the port of Fort Worth and save $2,400.

Abolish the port of Georgetown and save $41,080.

Abolish the port of Atlanta and save $9,100.

Abolish the port of Peoria and save $4,400.

Abolish the port of Alexandria and save $1,140.

Abolish the port of Richmond and save $13,400.

Abolish the port of Albany, N. Y., and save $16,600.

Abolish the ports of Worcester, Springfield, and Lawrence, Mass., and save $27,000.

Abolish the port of Grand Rapids and save $5,400.

Abolish the port of Spokane and save $7,200, or a total of $520,676.

THE BANKING SYSTEM—ADDRESS BY SENATOR WALCOTT

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an address delivered by the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] over the radio last night on the subject of our banking laws may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OPERATION OF BANKING LAWS

Need for banking reform, which may have been of interest to only a small number of people until recently, has been brought home to the entire country so forcibly in the last two years that no argument is required to prove it. It is universally admitted that it is one of the greatest needs of the country. This recognition has come not only from the fact that during the past decade one-third of our banks, or about 10,000, have had to suspend payments and have tied up several billions of deposits for many millions of depositors, and left many communities without any banking service. It has also arisen from the popular belief, which is certainly based on fact, that the banks have played a part in fostering the boom and the wild speculation which engulfed the entire country and culminated in the crash in the autumn of 1929—from the effects of which we have not yet recovered.

To avoid, in so far as this can be done through legislative channels, the recurrence of such events, a subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee of the United States Senate, under the chairmanship of Senator CARTER GLASS, of Virginia, a coauthor of the Federal reserve act of 1913 and a former Secretary of the Treasury, has worked for nearly two years and has finally introduced a bill that, it is hoped, will bring about salutary reforms in our banking structure. In drafting this bill the committee has been handicapped by the fact that the banks of the country, working as they do in part under Federal law and in part under the laws of 48 States, have engaged for years in a competition in laxity, and that a law applicable only to national banks or to banks that are members of the Federal reserve system can always be evaded by giving up national charters or membership in the Federal reserve system. Fundamental banking reforms, therefore, can not be accomplished until all the banks in the country that receive deposits are placed under uniform national supervision. But this will take time. In the meanwhile, much can be accomplished within the existing conditions, greatly to improve the management of the banks and to protect depositors and the country in general from such misfortunes as they have suffered from the banks in the past 30 months.

To do this the committee proposes: (1) To improve the actual management of the banks, (2) to strengthen the authority of the Federal reserve system, and (3) to facilitate and expedite payments to depositors at banks that are closed or will close in the future.

To start with the last point. Provision is made in the bill for the establishment of a Federal liquidating corporation, which will make it possible for depositors of closed banks to receive a part of their deposits much more promptly than is possible at present under a receiver. The importance of this measure to the general public can not be overestimated. When your bank closes and you suddenly find that the money on which you have counted for one purpose or another suddenly becomes unavailable, it is a serious matter. The bill establishes a corporation to which the United States Treasury, the Federal reserve banks, and member banks turn over a fund that will enable the corporation to convert into cash at least a part of the closed bank's good assets and to turn the funds over to the depositors. When the assets are finally liquidated by the sale of investments or through the collection of loans, the corporation will be reimbursed for its outlay and the remainder will go to the bank's creditors, including its depositors. The corporation's money is therefore a revolving fund and should be available permanently. It will consist of one hundred twenty-five millions from the United States Treasury, about sixty-five millions from the reserve banks, and about the same amount from the member banks. In addition, the corporation can issue about five hundred millions of debentures, so that it will have ample funds to do the important work for which it has been created. The benefits of this corporation apply only to banks that are members of the Federal reserve system. Nonmember banks, however, can obtain advances from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which has two hundred millions for that purpose.

In order to improve the condition of member banks, the proposed bill provides certain safeguards about the character and amount of investments the banks can make, limiting the amounts that they can invest in the obligations of any one company, so that they may not run the risk of having all their eggs in one basket or of diverting too large a proportion of their funds into enterprises in which directors or other persons influential in the affairs of the bank may be interested.

A great evil that has developed in the banking system in recent years has been connected with affiliates, particularly so-called security affiliates, companies organized to sell stocks and bonds in competition with private investment-banking houses. These companies, often owned and managed by the same people as the banks, are nevertheless independent corporations; and since they don't receive deposits and have no charters as banks, have authority under the law to do many things that the banks themselves are not permitted to do. In some cases this has worked with no harm to anyone and has even been advantageous. But in many cases these corporations, winning the confidence of investors by the name of the banks with which they are connected, have been the agencies for distributing securities that have not been good or that have been priced far above their intrinsic value. Furthermore, there have been cases where the affiliates have been used, through the medium of loans by the parent banks, for the purpose of investing the depositors' money in the kind of assets that the banks were not permitted to acquire. That is an evasion of the law and has caused many failures of banks and losses to depositors.

The proposed bill provides, first of all, that all such affiliates be subject to reports and to examinations, so that the supervisory authorities may be informed as to the relationship between the affiliate and its parent bank and may prevent the development of evasions and abuses. In the second place, the bill definitely limits (to 10 per cent of the bank's capital) the amount of loans that a bank may make to its affiliate, so that it can loan in that way only its own money, not the depositors' money, and can loan its own money only to a limited extent. In so far as affiliates engaged primarily in issuing or trading in securities are concerned, the bill provides that member banks in the course of three years must separate themselves from such affiliates. The business of issuing, trading in, and marketing securities is very different from the business of commercial banking; it requires different types of men. It is clearly the part of wisdom to dissolve, after a reasonable interval for arranging the business without disturbance, the relationship between member banks, whose service should be primarily to finance current requirements of trade and industry, from their security affiliates, whose business has to do primarily with the direction of the country's savings through the sale of securities into permanent capital investments. It is believed that the proposed separation will greatly improve the banking situation. Many banks are undertaking it voluntarily and the others will have to fall in line under the provisions of the proposed law.

The bill deals also with the subject of group banking, which has grown up rapidly, owing in part to the strict limitations imposed by our laws on branch banking. Group banking means that a holding company acquires the controlling interest in a large number of banks, which it then runs more or less as a system of branches without the holding company being in any way subject to supervision. These corporations are created by State law and are not directly subject to regulation by the Federal Government, but in order to control their banks they must have the power to vote the stock of those banks. The bill proposes to require that any holding company, before it is permitted to vote the stock of a member bank, must submit to certain regulations about reports and examinations about loans from its constituent banks and about the character of its own assets.

While thus undertaking to regulate group banking the law proposes to increase the opportunities for branch banking by allowing a bank to establish branches anywhere within the State in which the parent bank is located, and in certain cases where it is clearly in the public interest, even in another State, but not more than 50 miles from the head office. While state-wide branch banking is thus authorized, such branches can be established only with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board. There will be no danger, therefore, of a disorganized scramble for branches. Branches will be authorized only when their establishment will appear to be in the public interest.

The Senate committee fully realized that it is impossible by law to provide good management for all banks and that in the long run the safety and service of banks to their communities depends very largely on the quality of their management. As a step toward improvement in management, or at least toward the elimination of bad, dangerous, or dishonest management, the bill proposes to give the Federal Reserve Board the power, in extreme cases, after due warning and a hearing, to remove such officers or directors of banks as have persistently conducted its affairs in an unsafe manner. It is not expected that this provision will be often used, but its very existence will have a tendency to make bank management toe the mark.

Related to the problem of speculation is the practice which has grown up for corporations and individuals to lend their funds, through banks, directly to the stock market. In 1929 a large part of the last phases of the speculative boom was financed by loans not made by banks but by nonbanking lenders through the banks. This had the bad effect of leaving a considerable part of the credit in the market outside the supervision or regulation of banking authorities. It made the problem of restraining speculation much more difficult. This practice is now prohibited by a rule of the New York Clearing House. But this rule may be revoked at any time, and this bill proposes to give it legal sanction.

In regard to the Federal reserve system the bill proposes to increase the independence of the Federal Reserve Board by removing the Secretary of the Treasury from its membership and to assure its competence by requiring that at least two of its members must have tested banking experience. Aside from that the bill proposes to clarify the authority of the Federal Reserve Board over any operations conducted by the regional reserve banks in the so-called open market—that is, operations that are not in the nature of loans—to its member banks and to invest it with special supervisory powers over all relations with foreign banks.

In order to strengthen the Federal reserve system in coping with undesirable speculative developments, the bill contains a section that makes it absolutely clear that a reserve bank is not obliged to lend money to a member bank just because that bank presents paper that is eligible for discount under the law and is acceptable as a credit risk. The reserve bank may, and under this section is required, to watch the general behavior of member banks and in passing on loan applications to take into consideration whether the bank has been conducting a safe business in the service of its community, or whether it has engaged in undue expansion or in speculation in securities, commodities, or real estate. And if a bank continuously engages in bad practices, the Federal Reserve Board has authority, after due notice and after granting the bank an opportunity for a hearing, to suspend the bank from the use of the credit facilities of the Federal reserve system. In this way the Federal reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board will be able to exert a powerful influence against the recurrence of speculative excesses among its member banks.

I firmly believe that the banking and credit conditions in this country will be greatly improved by the passage of this bill, the so-called Glass bill, that bank failures will be reduced, and that it will exert an influence toward greater stability in business and employment; in fact, in the country's entire economic life.

IMPAIRMENT OF THE TREATY RIGHTS OF THE UNITED STATES—PRINTING OF EDITORIALS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, on April 7 I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 140, which would declare it the policy of the United States not to accept the legality of any situation created by a breach of the pact of Paris which might impair the treaty rights of the United States or its citizens, and which also prohibits the exportation of arms and munitions from this country to any signatory nation violating its solemn obligations under the pact of Paris.

The widespread and intelligent interest taken in this resolution is evidenced by the editorial comments of leading newspapers. To assist in intelligent discussion of this important proposal and to inform the Senate and the American people of the editorial opinion expressed in various sections of the country, I ask unanimous consent that the editorials which I send to the desk may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorials were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal]

A RESOLUTION FOR PEACE

Every peace organization and every sincere friend of world peace should study the resolution which Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, has introduced in the Senate, a measure carefully designed to put "teeth" in the Kellogg-Briand treaty. Building on the framework of the note which Secretary Stimson addressed to Japan and China last January 7, Senator CAPPER first proposes that the United States, along with the other signatories of the Paris pact, refuse to recognize the legality of any "situation de facto created by breach of the pact," or any "treaty or agreement brought about by means contrary to the covenants of the pact." This is the negative part of the measure, aimed at the results of a breach of the peace which has already taken place. The positive part, contained in the second section of the resolution, is a practical device for setting up a system of world peace. It provides that Congress should resolve that it is the declared policy of the United States:

"That in case other nations, not parties to a dispute, have in open conference decided that any nation has committed a breach of the pact of Paris by resort to other than pacific means, and have further decided not to aid or abet the violator by the shipment to it of arms or other supplies of war, or to furnish it financial assistance in its violation; and in case the President determines, and by proclamation declares, that a breach of the pact of Paris has in fact been committed, it shall be unlawful, unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, and until the President by proclamation shall declare that such violation no longer continues, to export to the violating country arms, munitions, implements of war, or other articles for use in war, or make any trade or financial arrangement with the violating country or its nationals as in the judgment of the President may be used to strengthen or maintain the violation.

"That the President be requested to invite a conference of the governments signatory to the pact of Paris with a view to their agreement on a protocol or treaty supplementary to that pact which shall define the obligations of the several signatory powers in case the provisions of the pact of Paris be violated."

Senator CAPPER explains that his resolution is "intended to prevent the United States from becoming the accomplice of the aggressor by supplying it with the means for its aggression, or, on the other hand, from taking the whole responsibility single-handed for holding the aggressor in check." He points out that "if the United States remains a potential arsenal for every violator of the Kellogg pact, then we can hardly hope for any major steps in real disarmament."

Congress, by adopting this resolution, would place the United States in the rôle which it rightfully should assume, that of the leader among nations toward the ideal of peace. At the same time the United States would run no danger of acting alone in opposition to military aggression, for this country would move only in concert with the other nations signatory to the pact of Paris, and then only by direct proclamation of the President of the United States. The ultimate result of passage of the resolution would be this: The other nations subscribing to the pact of Paris would have the assurance that the United States would not oppose them, and would probably act in concert with them, should they find it necessary to employ sanctions against an aggressor nation. A direct application of the case lies before our eyes. If the signatories of the Kellogg-Briand pact could have had this assurance last autumn, when Japan began its campaign of aggressive warfare in Manchuria, the signatory nations could have met and taken definite action against Japan. Instead the United States and other countries continued to ship nitrates and other products for the manufacture of ammunition to Japan, and the war continued.

The futility of the pact of Paris as it now stands has been demonstrated all too clearly in recent months in the Orient. It was American idealism chiefly which inspired this pact. The practical application of that idealism, as the Capper resolution proposes, is the step which America must take if the pact is to have any further meaning in the affairs of the world. The work for peace has been partially accomplished. America should not be willing to see it slip back to the starting point through lack of action on the part of this country.

[From the Springfield (Ill.) State Register]

WORLD'S GREATEST ISSUE

* * * * * * *

That the backs of the taxpayers of America are bending beneath the burden of costs of past and anticipated wars is at once apparent to the student whose eyes are open and who looks about him and understands the trend of the times.

The State Register offers no panacea and no specific formula, but that will come automatically if men and women worthy of being called leaders meet this issue honestly and courageously and assist in creating public sentiment favorable to the establishment of a peace understanding among nations which will in no way jeopardize the interests or independence of the United States.

Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, has offered a resolution for an amendment to the pact of Paris which will in no way jeopardize the interests of the United States and which will not involve "entangling alliances," but which will give strength to this paper-made unity of nations.

One point Senator CAPPER makes which will commend itself to friends of international amity and international economic justice is to be found in the provision of his resolution that if a nation violates the tenets of the pact, the United States and other signatory nations will refuse to supply that offending nation with munitions of war or financial assistance.

That's getting down to the milk of the coconut. Once the war profiteer is curbed and the offending nation is ostracized economically through a practical unity of nations which are bound together with a peace treaty with teeth in it, war will be discouraged, peace established, and the crushing burdens of war reduced.

[From the Boston (Mass.) Christian Science Monitor]

"TEETH," AND TALKING IT OVER

The pact of Paris is proceeding through the normal stages of idealistic legislation of that character from the position of a mere declaration of a highly laudable purpose on the part of its signatories to the formulation of some method of really effecting this purpose and of making it obligatory upon all concerned to join in giving it validity.

The newspaper headlines tell us that Senator CAPPER has introduced a resolution designed to "put teeth" in the Kellogg pact. It is a laudable plan. A mere enunciation of a highly moral and ethical attitude on the part of the nations of the world toward war as an instrument of policy is a pleasant indication of an improved public sentiment on the subject, but if it is to amount to anything practical in this day and generation when nations still covet their neighbor's markets, some sort of enforcement clause must be added.

Senator CAPPER in his resolution virtually follows the ideas set forth by Secretary Stimson in his note of January 7 to Japan and China. He would declare it the policy of the United States not to accept the legality of any situation created by a breach of the pact of Paris which might impair the treaty rights of the United States in any territory, nor to recognize any treaty or agreement brought about by means contrary to the covenants of the pact of Paris which would impair the obligations of that pact. Furthermore, his resolution would provide for the prohibition of export of arms, munitions, or other articles used in war, to a country violating the pact. Finally, he asks that the President invite a conference of the signatories with a view to their agreement upon a protocol or treaty which shall set forth the methods by which the pact can be given effect.

The Senator's resolution goes a little further than the program urged upon the Government by a committee of the twentieth century fund, headed by Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler. In one respect the suggestion of this committee has a merit not found in the Capper resolution. For it asks that the signatories of the pact should at once enter into an approved protocol "whereby they will engage themselves, in the event of hostilities, actual or threatened, promptly to consult together with a view to determine upon measures of nonintercourse which would be appropriate to prevent the threatened breach of the pact or, if it could not be prevented, to end hostilities and to restore the status existing prior to the breach."

This provision for a conference of the signatory powers prior to the imposition of any form of economic sanction upon a country charged with menacing the peace of the world is well worthy of incorporation in the Capper resolution. There are governments, and it is by no means certain that the Government of the United States is not among them, which will hesitate to lay down in advance a program for the adoption of disciplinary measures against a nation which might well lead to war. There should be no government which would hesitate to adhere to an international agreement for a prompt conference on every instance in which war is threatened or actually begun by a nation oblivious of the obligations it assumed under the pact of Paris.

The purpose of Senator CAPPER's resolution is wholly admirable. Against its general tenor the only possible criticism that can be raised is that it might be difficult to secure from legislatures so complete a gift of power for an administration facing the problems of threatened war. The interpolation or addition of the proposition that an immediate conference should be called at such a moment would possibly strengthen the resolution in many quarters where now it is likely to encounter vigorous opposition.

[From the Mobile (Ala.) Register]

THE CAPPER RESOLUTION

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER's proposal to "put teeth in" the pact of Paris bids fair to become an historic document.

As Senator CAPPER himself points out, the proposal which calls for treaties supplemental to the Kellogg-Briand pact has its origin in the recent troubles in Manchuria and, more especially, in the Stimson note of January 7.

Its actual application to the Japanese fracas will probably never be forthcoming, for by the time a conference of the signatories to the pact is called and definite action taken, the Manchurian question is likely to be listed under the head of historical rather than current events.

Nevertheless, the proposal of the member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee has a vital if somewhat ironic significance.

On previous occasions this newspaper has referred to the Kellogg pact as America's private League of Nations. If there was any doubt of the truth of that mild assertion, the Capper proposal ought to be unassailable proof.

It is to be noted that the second section of the CAPPER proposal is very like the articles of the league covenant that deal with the action to be taken in the event a member resorts to war.

Article 16 of the covenant: "Should any member of the league resort to war * * * it shall ipso facto be deemed to have committed an act of war against all other members of the league, which hereby undertake immediately to subject it to severance of all trade and financial relation, the prohibition of all intercourse between their nationals and the nationals of the covenant-breaking state and the nationals of any other state whether a member of the league or not."

The second section of the Capper resolution:

"And in case the President determines and by proclamation declares that a breach of the pact of Paris has been committed (after other nations have already come to the same decision) it shall be unlawful unless otherwise provided by act of Congress or by proclamation of the President, and until the President shall, by proclamation, declare that such violation no longer continues, to export to the violating country arms, munitions, implements of war or other articles for use in war, or make any such trade or financial arrangements with the violating country, or its nations, as in the judgment of the President may be used to strengthen or maintain the violation."

The chief difference between article 16 of the covenant and the second section of the Capper resolution is that the United States has the right to form its own opinion of what constitutes a violation and need not abide by a decision of the other signatories.

Here, in short, is the typical American conception of international cooperation.

The effect of the Capper resolution, if adopted, would probably not be startling. The United States has been cooperating with the League of Nations during the Japanese difficulties just as much as have such formal members as France and Great Britain. The Capper resolution, to which in the course of time would probably be appended other guaranties, would only set up a second League of Nations. No one may prophesy whether it would be any more effective than the already existing international body.

But because the Capper resolution takes cognizance of the necessity of international cooperation and because it adheres logically to prevailing American sentiment, the Senator from Kansas deserves both attention and congratulations.

[From the Newport News (Va.) Times-Herald]

TEETH FOR THE KELLOGG PACT

In the light of developments in the Far East during the undeclared war between Japan and China the resolution offered by Senator CAPPER, of Kansas, in the Senate yesterday is of unusual interest to advocates of world peace. Under its provisions parties to the Kellogg-Briand pact would declare an economic boycott against violators.

Throughout the whole Sino-Japanese trouble—which, by the way, is not yet ended—it was apparent that something more than moral suasion was necessary to stop hostilities. Protests of the signatory nations were virtually ignored until Japan found China a harder proposition to deal with by force than she had anticipated.

There is little doubt that there would have been a different story had there been teeth in the Kellogg-Briand pact. Force is stopped more easily by force than by argument and pleadings, which the signatory nations found out when they applied moral suasion to the question in the Orient.

What might have been the outcome of the Sino-Japanese row, had the signatories to the peace pact used an international boycott as their weapon, is, of course, a matter of speculation. But the natural conclusion is that Japan would not have gone to war to stop a Chinese boycott when she faced a retaliatory boycott from a half a hundred or so nations scattered all over the world.

The Kellogg-Briand peace pact as it stands has only idealistic "teeth." Senator CAPPER's resolution proposes to furnish an actual and potent weapon to supplant moral suasion. His thought, in view of the fate of the peace pact when it was invoked in the Orient, seems entirely in order.

[From the Asbury Park Evening Press]

PEACE BY ACTION

Senator CAPPER's plan to prohibit this country or any of its nationals from aiding an aggressor nation with supplies of any kind is in complete accord with all scientific formulas of peace. The Kellogg pact and the 9-power pacific treaty outlaw war but do not provide any penalty for the signatory power that violates them. The League of Nations covenant outlaws aggressive belligerency and provides for the boycotting of the aggressor. The fact that this Nation does not participate in the league, however, virtually nullifies this sanction, for without the United States' cooperation a boycott would be ineffective. It would be useless for members of the league to boycott an aggressor nation while this country used its vast resources to produce the necessary supplies.

The past decade has taught that in the movement against war, just as in the campaign against crime, two steps are necessary. First, there must be definite rules or laws to prohibit war, and, second, there must be some sanction with which to enforce these rules. For years we proceeded on the basis that faith alone would enforce peace pledges, but Japan's violation of the Kellogg pact, the 9-power treaty, and the league covenant show the fallacy of this promise. Now it is clear that teeth must be placed in the laws outlawing war. And outside of war itself the boycott is the most effective method of opposing war. In urging its adoption Senator CAPPER has shown that he would support the ideals of peace with active forces.

[From the Bangor (Me.) Commercial]

SENATOR CAPPER'S PLAN

Senator CAPPER has taken the initiative in an effort to extend the usefulness of the Kellogg pact and to place in that instrument the teeth that are lacking. It was the evident belief of the framers of the pact that the declaration of the participating countries against war and promise to resort to arbitration before arms, would be sufficient to prevent war in which signers of the pact are involved. The period before disillusionment was not long, and Japan, in its operations in China, demonstrated how the vital principles of the pact could be evaded. It is true that the world generally holds that Japan violated its clear agreement, despite denials from Tokyo, but it is equally true that the necessity for more firm action to back the pact is now seen.

The Capper resolution calls for an extension of the undertakings of the Kellogg agreement. He would declare it the policy of the United States not to accept the legality of any situation created by a breach of the pact of Paris which might impair the treaty rights of the United States in any territory, nor to recognize any treaty or agreement brought about by means contrary to the covenants of the pact of Paris which would impair the obligations of that pact. Furthermore, his resolution would provide for the prohibition of export of arms, munitions, or other articles used in war, to a country violating the pact. Finally, he asks that the President invite a conference of the signatories with a view to their agreement upon a protocol or treaty which shall set forth the methods by which the pact can be given effect.

The Christian Science Monitor finds the resolution a worthy one, but suggests that it might be improved by some provision that would endeavor to prevent a situation arising which would call for operation of the Capper resolve, that might prevent a threatened breach of the peace or result in causing a cessation of hostilities, if begun. A conference of the signatory powers to be called upon the advent of a threatening situation might have salutary effect in preventing the development of such conditions as recently were seen at Shanghai.

TAXES AND APPROPRIATIONS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR DILL

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, this morning the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL] delivered an address over a nation-wide hook-up upon the subject of taxes and appropriations. It is such an admirable and interesting address that I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is an old saying that you can't escape death or taxes. Death comes but once and that is the end. Taxes come every year, and they are getting higher and higher. Taxes have become so high that the people are ready to revolt against paying taxes in many sections of the country and are demanding that taxes come down.

The cause of high taxes is big Government expenditures. The only way to lower taxes is to cut expenditures. The increase in Government expenditures during the last five years is almost unbelievable. During that period our population has increased but slightly. The value of property has greatly decreased because of the hard times. The income of our people decreased from $75,000,000,000 to $50,000,000,000. Our country has been at peace. It would seem that Government expenditures should have been reduced or, at the worst, should have continued about the same. But what are the facts?

From 1927 to 1932 the increases by departments of the Federal Government were as follows:

	1927	Estimated total 1932	Increase	Per cent
Army and Navy	$678,000,000	$861,000,000	$182,000,000	26
Interior	59,000,000	91,000,000	32,000,000	54
Commerce	31,000,000	54,000,000	23,000,000	77
Treasury	151,000,000	312,000,000	161,000,000	106
Agricultural	156,000,000	333,000,000	177,000,000	113
Justice	24,000,000	53,000,000	29,000,000	117
Post Office deficit	28,000,000	195,000,000	167,000,000	614
Veterans	391,000,000	784,000,000	392,000,000	100

The average increase for all the departments, bureaus, and commissions for the last five years was 63 per cent, or a total increase of $1,231,000,000.

These figures prove that this administration has been the costliest luxury this Nation has ever known in time of peace. A Republican Congress passed all of these appropriation bills. A Republican President signed them. Republican Cabinet members spent the money.

As a result of this wild orgy of Government expenditures, the Treasury deficit last year was $900,000,000. This year it is $2,000,000,000. Government expenses right now are $5,000,000 per day greater than Government income. In other words, we are going in debt at the rate of more than $5,000,000 per day. Unless we cut these expenditures and provide for new taxes the deficit next year will be $3,000,000,000.

Is it any wonder the American people are crying out against high taxes as never before in our day? Is it surprising the people by the thousands are writing Congressmen and Senators to cut Government expenditures and cut them to the bone?

With a surplus in the Treasury and prosperous conditions, increased expenditures would naturally be expected; but when hard times came, there should have been a halt.

When Congress met in December, 1929, the panic was already nearly three months old. That was a warning. Instead of cutting appropriations, the President and Congress increased them for both 1931 and 1932, with billions of deficits as a result. It was not until the people rebuked the administration by electing a Democratic House of Representatives that the administration started retrenching.

Let us see now just what the President has done and what Congress is doing to save the Government from bankruptcy.

In 1932 the regular appropriations were $3,732,000,000. The President recommended in the Budget that Congress make a 11 per cent cut, or $413,000,000, for the year of 1933.

The Democratic House of Representatives was not satisfied with that. It cut not only the $413,000,000 which the President recommended, but $126,000,000 more. That made total cuts of more than half a billion dollars below the appropriations of last year.

When these bills came to the Senate what happened? Senator MCKELLAR, a Democrat from Tennessee, made a motion to cut 10 per cent more from the amounts approved by the House. The Senate has adopted that motion as to three of the large appropriation bills.

It cut five and one-half millions from the Interior Department appropriations, twelve and one-half millions from the State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor Department bills, and eighty millions more from the Post Office and Treasury bill. If the Senate continues to make these cuts, it will cut $275,000,000 below the combined cuts of the President and the House of Representatives.

These combined reductions would amount to $800,000,000. That will still be $430,000,000 less than the total increases in expenditures from 1927 to 1932.

The following table sets out the appropriations for 1932, the Budget estimates for 1933, the appropriations in the House bills, with the exception of the War Department bill not yet reported to the House, and the totals of the bills already passed by the Senate.

Annual bills	Appropriations, 1932	Estimates, 1933	1933 appropriations
			House	Senate
Agriculture	$235,665,000	$183,693,000	$175,408,000	$177,424,000
District of Columbia	45,771,000	44,086,000	39,913,000	----------
Independent offices	1,306,196,000	1,041,395,000	985,931,000	----------
Interior	69,342,000	56,895,000	50,446,000	45,533,000
Legislative	28,127,000	22,517,000	20,214,000	----------
Navy	338,262,000	341,677,000	326,340,000	----------
State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor	139,001,000	129,814,000	124,215,000	111,792,000
Treasury and Post Office	1,104,586,000	1,082,575,000	1,059,778,000	----------
War	445,773,000	411,363,000	----------	----------
Total	3,732,727,000	3,319,020,000	2,782,249,000	----------

Total appropriations for all purposes for 1932 were $4,654,000,000
Total Budget estimates for all purposes for 1933 were 4,601,000,000

These statistics show that the President cut about $400,000,000 of this $800,000,000, and then the House and Senate cut another $400,000,000 more below the President's reductions. It was much more difficult to cut the second $400,000,000 than the first.

Now what is happening? Although the President says he favors those additional cuts by Congress, his own Cabinet officers are not cooperating with the Senate to make these cuts. In fact, some of the Cabinet members are attacking Congress for these big reductions.

What the President should do is to tell his Cabinet officers that he expects them to carry out the orders of Congress and limit their expenditures to the sums appropriated. Then if they fail to do so he should fire them from the Cabinet.

When it is recalled that expenditures increased $1,230,000,000 in the last five years, it would seem that surely these Cabinet heads can get along with a reduction of $800,000,000. They will still have $400,000,000 more to spend than they had in 1927.

On Wednesday the House of Representatives will consider what is known as the economy bill. A special committee of the House working with the President has prepared this bill. It proposes to combine the War and Navy Departments and to give the President power to combine and abolish certain bureaus in the different departments. It reduces the salaries of the Farm Board, Shipping Board, and Railway Mediation Board to the same amount as the Interstate Commerce and other commissions. It also provides for a cut of 11 per cent in salaries of all Government employees and officials receiving more than $1,000 per year, with the exception of Federal judges. It is expected to save $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 per year.

It is probable that most of these economy proposals will pass, but let me call your attention to some of the difficulties both the President and Congress have in trying to pass this kind of legislation.

We find that those who have been loudest in demanding reduced appropriations, immediately become most active in opposition to cutting the particular item in which they are interested. Chambers of commerce that send long resolutions demanding cuts in expenditures, burn up the telegraph wires with protests against closing some Government office in their town or delaying work on their new Federal building.

School superintendents and teachers who have condemned the extravagance of the Government are shocked and angered that Congress should lower the appropriations for the office of the director of education.

Leaders of farmer organizations who have been loudest in demanding lower taxes write and telegraph that Congress must not cut the salaries of Farm Board officials nor interfere with appropriations for their county farm agents under the Smith-Hughes law.

So I might go on enumerating one case after another showing how the people at home who have insisted that the President and Congress must cut appropriations immediately become most aggressive in opposition to cutting appropriations affecting any Government activity in which they are interested.

I do not complain of these conditions. I am simply explaining them that you may realize how difficult it is to cut appropriations, once people have become attached to the Government pay roll, or a community is receiving money from the Treasury for some Government purpose.

In face of all these conditions, and with a view to serving the interests of all the people of this country, there is only one thing for Congressmen and Senators to do. They must set their faces like flint against all these protests and vote to cut appropriation after appropriation until they have reduced permanent expenditures by hundreds of millions of dollars.

If we do that, we can avoid many of the new taxes now proposed and still balance the Budget; but in no other way can we avoid additional taxes.

In addition to all these difficulties about cutting appropriations and providing new taxes to balance the Budget, Congress was confronted with another problem last week, namely, the report that England and other European countries do not intend to make their annual payments on the debts they owe the United States. The failure of the Chancellor of the Exchequer to include that item gave rise to the report, although he announced that it would be considered after the conference at Lausanne.

The President gave these European debtors a moratorium last year. That cost the taxpayers of this country $250,000,000. This year it would cost $260,000,000. If these countries do not make their payments, then the American people will be compelled to raise this amount by additional taxes.

Regardless of party affiliations, Congressmen and Senators almost to a man are opposed to any more moratoriums or to cancellation of any part of the remaining debts. So long as England can spend $678,000,000 per year for armaments she can afford to pay the $171,000,000 each year as she agreed to do when we agreed to cancel all of the principal and part of the interest she owed us.

As long as France can spend $518,000,000 for war preparations she can afford to pay $45,000,000 per year, as she agreed to do when we agreed to cancel all of the principal and part of the interest she owed us.

As long as Italy can spend $269,000,000 for armaments she can pay $15,000,000 per year, as she agreed to do when we agreed to cancel all of the principal and half of the interest she owed us.

These conflicting interests and these cross currents of public opinion of which I have spoken have thrown Congress into confusion. At the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue administration leaders watch the tickers of the stock markets as though they were a complete index to prosperity and also of the standing of the administration in the estimation of the people.

Everybody is blue. The economic situation is getting worse. Banks are still going broke. Unemployment is increasing. The Treasury deficit increases and in addition the ex-service men want two and one-half billion dollars in payment of the bonus now, although it is not due until 1945.

The critics all over the country are calling for leaders. Yet Wall Street newspapers and those who think in the terms of Wall Street cry "demagogue" at any public man who dares to plead the cause of the poor and speak for the unfortunate, for the unorganized, and for those who have been left out of consideration in the granting of governmental favors.

There is hope in the fact that the people can still think for themselves; that they can still change their President and their public officials by choosing new men who will try to build prosperity from the bottom up instead of having it trickle down from those at the top of the industrial and economic structure.

To do that we must restore the value of the things people produce by providing more currency for the use of the people. The dollar is so high now that those who produce the new wealth can't get enough dollars even to pay taxes and interest on their debts, to say nothing of paying their debts or buying new goods.

When we have a President and a Congress who will make money plentiful, the people will have confidence again in the business of the country. When we tear down tariff walls and establish a basis of exchange so that our money is on a basis of value equal to the money of other nations we shall have world trade again. Until these changes can be brought about the best thing to do is to reduce Government expenditures and avoid new taxes.

YOUTH'S STAKE IN THE NATIONAL ELECTION—ADDRESS BY TYRE TAYLOR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered to-day by Mr. Tyre Taylor, of Raleigh, N. C., president of the Young Democratic Clubs of America, to a mock convention held by young Democrats of Washington and Lee University at Lexington, Va., on the subject "Youth's Stake in the National Election."

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In recognizing my own very limited capacity to analyze and deal constructively with the truly appalling problems with which we are to-day confronted, I do not wish to be understood as in any sense apologizing for the very real existing concern of American youth for the future of its country. It is not only fitting and proper, it is in the highest degree necessary that young men and women, who comprise more than half of the Nation's total electorate, should discuss and ponder and through serious study seek intelligently to understand the issues of the approaching campaign and election. It is proper that they should organize for this purpose, and if they should reach a common basis of understanding and agreement, it is also entirely in keeping with the spirit and tradition of our democratic system of government that they should seek to translate their views—and as I am sure many fervently hope—some of their unselfish and unwearied idealism into the settled policies of party and government.

I venture the assertion that the situation in which America and the world find themselves to-day has no even approximate parallel in the history of the human race. When, for example, has the problem of unemployment been aggravated by any factor approaching the proportions of the present displacement of hand by machine labor? Conditions were serious in England and other countries during the years immediately following the industrial revolution, but there was a tremendous difference; men thrown out of employment by the invention of labor-saving machinery or for whatever cause had in that day one last recourse. Release, or possible release, from economic thraldom could always be had for the price of a steamship ticket. For the industrious and self-respecting English laborer who finally found himself and his family face to face with starvation or the workhouse there was always America; while for the similar class in this country a vast and unsettled West beckoned with infinite promise.

Now, however, in a peculiar sense times have changed and conditions are different. There are no longer vast areas of rich land to be had for the asking, and if there were, the farmer can no longer hope to make a decent living farming. There are no longer new jobs in building railroads across a virgin continent or in new industries growing rich and great in a feverish race with an ever-increasing demand.

Superficially at least the country seems to have grown up and grown old. Despair has supplanted hope. Uncertainty has supplanted certainty. Opportunity, in the old American sense of the term, seems to belong mostly to the past.

Consider another illustration of the basic and fundamental differences between this and past depressions. When, in the history of the world, has anybody owed so much? From the humbler farmer, who mortgaged his land to secure a Government loan, to once proud and self-sufficient nations which bankrupted themselves in war the whole world is simply a seething, sullen, and resentful conglomeration of bankrupts, who, if they have the courage and heart seriously to attempt to pay their debts, are appalled by the economic barriers which stand between them and freedom. The farmer who went in debt $100 a few years ago now finds that by reason of the depreciation in value of the things he has to sell he in reality owes $200. Nations which owe each other and the United States are faced with the same problem. Tariff barriers prevent their paying their debts in goods. This has resulted in an attempt to pay in gold, which in turn has resulted in the virtual cornering of the world's gold supply by France and the United States. The inevitable consequence of this development has, of course, been to increase the value of gold and to diminish the value of commodities and goods.

This depression, therefore, bears no more resemblance to the ordinary cyclic depression of the past than the French Revolution bore to Shay's rebellion. One was a world upheaval—a definite transition period in the history of the human race, marking the passing of one set of ideas and institutions and the birth of a new age. The other was a purely local and temporary disturbance.

Perhaps the most devastating indictment that can be drawn against Mr. Hoover and his administration is that, knowing a world crisis was impending, he and his advisers resolutely refused to face the facts and persisted in a campaign to mislead the American people. As the stock market wavered in the summer of 1929 Mr. Mellon gave out his reassuring statements. "The business of the country is on a sound foundation," he said, in effect, and there would be a renewal of buying and another upswing in prices This would continue for a few weeks and the market would again hesitate. But again Mr. Hoover or Mr. Mellon would give out an optimistic interview, and again the American public would rush to buy, and prices would be pushed up additional points. Even after the crash, when it was, one would assume, perfectly clear to informed persons that America was moving into the shadow of a major economic eclipse, prosperity was represented to be "just around the corner." One prediction set a definite date; prosperity was going to return in 60 days!

As we look back over the past three years it is difficult to reconcile the course of our Government with reality. It is a horrible dream or nightmare, we want to say. Such madness, not to speak of the bland indifference of this Government to the welfare of its people, does not belong in the realm of sanity and broad daylight. And yet let us observe the great engineer as he sets about building a bridge over chaos.

In the face of the solemn warning of 2,000 of the country's leading economists a Republican Congress passed, and a Republican President signed, a tariff bill which has not only made America a hermit nation but has resulted, through retaliatory tariffs, in a virtual migration of American business and industry abroad. In considering the stake of young men and women in the election of 1932, let us ask this question: Does the erection of an automobile or tractor factory in Ireland by American capital help or hurt your chance of obtaining employment and making a living? I know that probably few of you expect to find a job in an automobile factory, but I am using this as an illustration. Leaving entirely out of consideration its disastrous consequences to trade, the Hawley-Smoot tariff law, through the process just mentioned, is depriving hundreds of thousands of American citizens of the opportunity to work. Is this good or is it bad?

Then we should not forget, since I have used the term "bland indifference" in describing a Republican administration, that several billions of dollars' worth of highly questionable foreign securities were sold to American investors with the approval and even the connivance of their Government. In one notable instance a Department of Commerce attaché had the temerity to cable that the government which was about to float a loan in the United States was probably insolvent. He was—this is all in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, if you care to read it—he was reprimanded, the State Department promptly approved the issue, and another firm of international bankers pocketed a neat profit in commissions. The American people still have these bonds, and they are very handsome examples of the engraver's art, as the officers and directors of some of the banks which have failed during the past two years will bear witness. They will also bear witness, or the receiver will, that they have received no interest payments in some time, and that they would be glad to dispose of them at a bargain.

Is not that a pretty picture? The Government of the United States acquiescing in a fraud upon its citizens and taxpayers. One must agree with Doctor FESS that "this remarkable record of administration reflects a type of political leadership at the head of the Government rarely experienced in this or any other country."

But let us turn for the moment from consideration of these economic questions. The primary function of government is to govern. The Republican Party has been given ample opportunity to show what it can do on this score. It has been in uninterrupted control for 12 years. What is the condition of law enforcement in our land?

Simply this: That America is to-day overrun and overriden with gangsters.

Organized crime has developed to the point where it derides and defies government, and, arrogant in its own strength, even seeks to make terms with constituted authority.

When before has America suffered any such humiliation as this: "If the kidnapers of our child are unwilling to deal direct, we fully authorize 'Salvey' Spitale and Irving Bitz to act as our go-betweens. We will also follow any other method suggested by the kidnapers that we may be sure will bring the return of our child." I do not wish to be unfair about this and particularly would I avoid imputing blame or responsibility for a general condition to any individual. There has been too much public indifference to crime and criminals, and we must face frankly the truth that Government is powerless to cope with this problem without public support.

On the other hand, there does fairly attach, I think, to the chief positions of leadership in a democratic country such as ours some obligation to lead. And this grave responsibility may not be adequately discharged through the appointment of a commission or the prosecution and conviction of a gang leader for income-tax evasion.

In the breakdown of law enforcement and respect for law in this country I charge the Republican Party with an utter lack of any capacity for moral leadership. When Mr. Harding should have been sounding a trumpet call to all right-thinking Americans to resist the spiritual disintegration and backwash of war, he was appealing for a "return to normalcy" and appointing a gang of thugs and thieves to high political office.

When Mr. Coolidge took over the reins of government he apparently experienced no sense of outrage or righteous indignation that corruption, pillage, and theft had been permitted to besmirch the national honor. Instead of driving the Falls and Daughertys out of office and lending the full weight of his position to putting them in the penitentiary, he almost reluctantly bade them farewell and changed the subject to talk—not practice, mind you—but talk of governmental economy. Presented with an opportunity to lead a crusade against the underworld forces which were threatening the very security, not to speak of the honor and decency, of our national life, he ignored the issue and, while spending more money than ever, salved the conscience of an outraged people with platitudes and prattle about economy.

Mr. Hoover, presented with the same desperate issue, characteristically appointed a commission and then suppressed a part of its report in the interests of a political expediency.

The time has fully come in this country, gentlemen, for us to do some serious thinking. I am not speaking now exclusively to young Democrats or old Democrats, or to any other class or group. I am appealing to every man and women—young or old—who loves his country and has an intelligent interest in his own future welfare. You ask what can the Government of the United States do to remedy these conditions? It can do more than any other single agency or instrumentality in the entire world. It can call an international conference for tariff disarmament and write the treaties which will end the present economic trench warfare. Commerce is a mutual process of buying and selling, and it can not surmount tariff barriers which make the cost to the ultimate consumer prohibitive.

The Democratic Party, if returned to power in both branches of the Government, will restore sanity in tariff legislation. The Republican Party has demonstrated that it can not or will not do this.

The Government can—and if the Democratic Party is given this mandate from the people—it will reduce the total cost of its operations.

Are you aware that out of a total national income of $70,000,000,000 from all sources in 1930, $14,000,000,000 (or approximately 20 cents out of each dollar) were required to defray the expenses of the various Federal, State, and local governing bodies? This amounts to $100 for every man, woman, and child in the United States, and exceeds by $2,000,000,000 the gross value of all agricultural production in the United States in the year 1929.

The Government can, as was demonstrated under Woodrow Wilson, become a fundamental and far-reaching affirmative force in the life of the people, making for respect for law, liberal humanitarianism in our economic and social relationships and sanity and perspective in our world outlook. In considering the stake young men and young women have in the approaching national election this factor, while intangible and difficult of reduction to concrete terms, is perhaps of paramount importance. We face in this country to-day not only the problem of restoring prosperity but of reconciling the consequence of a mechanistic civilization with human liberty. Let there be no mistake about this. We are just as definitely entering upon a new age in the world's history as impended during the years leading up to the French Revolution. How shall men control the machine? How may he protect himself against it? We can not go on indefinitely displacing human with machine labor and making no provision for the men, women, and children who find in this new economic order there is no place for them.

Judge Brandeis, of the Supreme Court of the United States, undoubtedly was thinking of this problem when he wrote the other day in a dissenting opinion:

"To stay experimentation within the law in things social and economic is a grave responsibility. Denial of the right to such experimentation may be fraught with serious consequences to the Nation. If we would be guided by the light of reason, we must let our minds be bold."

Shall this momentous problem be worked out by a political party in accordance with a political philosophy which holds, since Hamilton, that liberty exists for the few; or shall we intrust its solution to a party which holds that liberty exists not for one but for all men? Upon the answer to this question depends the happiness and well-being of your children and their children and of all the generations in America for the next hundred years.

COTTON—ADDRESS BY BEN F. LOYD

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, by request, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address on cotton delivered by Mr. Ben F. Loyd, of Shreveport, La.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"The most formidable weapon against errors of every kind is reason," said Thomas Paine, author of the first unofficial declaration of independence written for the freedom of the American Colonies.

"Man is a reasoning being, but seldom reasonable," said Elbert Hubbard.

Immanuel Kant, German philosopher, spent many years writing a book called Pure Reason. After he received the first copy from the printer and read it through, it has been said, he wrote on the last page a P. S.: "The thing does not exist."

All high-school students get a very understanding meaning from the late Mr. Noah Webster of the word "reason." I advise all of them after they find they are able to repeat the Ten Commandments and the Lord's Prayer to see what Mr. Webster says about reason. I have all my life had some ambitions to know more about reason every day in every way as it may be applied to every contingency in our relations with everyday affairs. The reason I am going to talk about cotton to-night is because everybody else is, even the governors of all our Southern States have been talking about cotton for a month. A few United States Senators and our President seem to be interested in cotton.

Now, my governor has done more talking than all of them put together, in face of the fact that on the 14th day of August he said he would not talk about cotton, neither would he call a conference for anybody else to talk about cotton. He said it would do no good. When he said it would do no good, he was wise far beyond his young and tender years. But no sooner had he uttered those words than he moved into his 12-cylinder Cadillac and drove to New Orleans; then began writing, wiring, printing, and broadcasting invitations for everybody to "come hither," we will talk about killing our king, "King Cotton," for one year. I am not in agreement with my governor on the subject of killing King Cotton for a year, and that is the reason why I am talking about cotton to-night. I know my governor about as well as I know my cotton. I know I have planted, plowed, and picked more cotton than he ever has or ever will. In the part of this State where my governor was born barefooted, and as a barefoot boy picked some cotton, they grew what we used to call "bumblebee" cotton—a cotton so small that a bumblebee has to get on his knees when he sips the nectar from its blooms.

Here I am pleased to inform those that do not know me as a cotton farmer or as having much to do with cotton for over 30 years, that my boyhood days were spent on a cotton farm in

Ellis County, Tex. This county held the record for 40 or 50 years as the banner cotton-growing county of the whole world. It held the record 40 years of producing more cotton in one year than a similar area in any cotton-growing section of the United States—about 156,000 bales, if I remember right.

My father lived in that county about 73 years of the 87 of his life. One bale was a crop of cotton for one farmer when he was a boy, and from fifty to a hundred when I was a boy, and to-day some Ellis County boys own a cotton farm in another county in Texas that they may grow 40,000 bales on, a few years hence.

I said I spent my boyhood days on a cotton farm. I mean every day that I could not find, make up, or hatch out some excuse to be somewhere else. I preferred to do anything about a farm or ranch than to have anything to do with cotton; yet my father managed, sometimes using quite forceful and persuading arguments, to teach me to plow, plant, and pick cotton until I could plow, plant, or pick as much as any hired hand about the place. In fact, he taught me more about the beauties, virtues, glories, and love for a cotton field than I ever cared to know.

His commands were as far as reason ever entered into any of my arguments with him on differentials relating to or pertaining to the necessity of his or his seven sons' growing cotton for other nations of the earth to consume, as I thought then, for no financial reasons, and since have had few occasions to change my mind.

For decades it has appeared to me that from the day the seed was planted until its fleecy staple was baled into the finest and flossiest silklike fabrics, there was nothing but a bare and beggarly existence for everyone connected with the growing, picking, ginning, marketing, transporting, and manufacturing the thing named cotton; yet it has been the money crop of the Southern States from the year the first bale was grown in 1620 to 1931, and made so by our slave-owning planters. The competition the slave-owning cotton grower had to meet when he sold his cotton was his brother slave-owning cotton grower on the next plantation or in an adjoining State. Sometimes these planters actually boasted about how low the cost they could grow cotton and as to the amount they could grow; that became a simple problem in mathematics or according to the number of slaves, mules, and cost of land they could assemble under one ownership.

Slave labor being the cheapest in the world, with new and fertile lands for the price of clearing, and the livestock needed growing wild in the woods near by were the conditions under which one of the world's leading industries was founded and builded on American soil. Since 1865 free and white labor has not been able to fully overcome the sin of low prices made by slave labor in the cotton-growing business, inherited from our pioneering and worthy ancestors. Often I have thought, "If the sins of the fathers were visited on the children," truly the third generation after were still feeling the effects of the sins of slave labor.

The textile manufacturer, knowing that cotton was produced by cheap labor, was adamant against any demands of the growers of cotton for a profit-bearing price; and as there was only one manufacturer to about each thousand of the growers, he was the dictator of the price paid for cotton, dictator of the wages paid to American workers in the great cotton mills, because he had to compete with the lowest wage labor basis made goods in the world when he marketed the products of his spindles in competition with foreign textile-mill owners of England for over 100 years. There was, and is to-day, still a greater evil the American cotton grower, and the cotton manufacturer, has to compete against than cheap labor, either on American or foreign soil, and it is the exchange value of the moneys used to buy cotton or cotton goods with, or sell cotton or cotton goods for, against the cheap money in foreign countries. An American silver dollar will buy three or four Chinese, Indian, or Mexican silver dollars, and these cheap silver dollars are used to pay for the foreign cotton and foreign-made goods; but in America an American silver dollar pays for just as much as a gold dollar. The thing that keeps American cotton as high as it might not be is that those countries have no cotton to export. It is this difference, or exchange rates on money, "a hocus-pocus" to most people, that the cause of the low price jute products shipped to America in such large quantities, more than the labor conditions where the jute fibers are grown.

I am fairly well acquainted with all the movements instituted in the past 50 years to improve the financial and social status of the American cotton and wheat farmers, and regret to state that 95 per cent of them died soon after the initiation fee was paid. Many of the reforms planned were by men of the best intentions, but they lacked breadth, width, and length in more ways than I can describe.

The most important and necessary part of any business venture is to have it adequately financed, if it is to be successfully conducted. The cotton-growing business is possibly the largest business in the world considered from the number of people engaged and those dependents on it, in all its ramifications of commerce, for their livings, and the most disadvantageously financed as far as the actual grower is concerned.

The magnitude of the raw-cotton crop in the United States at harvest time measured by money suggests figures well over a billion and sometimes two billions of dollars. In its manufactured state it comes back to the consumer at a cost of possibly five times the value of the raw product. Nearly one-fourth of the States of this Union, in which there live nearly 30,000,000 people, in the most favored area by climate, soil, and efficient methods for growing cotton in the world, have held the export monopoly on this product without profit for a hundred years. In the past 10 years the lands planted to cotton have been as low as thirty and as high as forty-six millions of acres, and produced as low as not quite 8,000,000 bales, and as high as nearly 18,000,000. When the crop is ready to harvest, there is invested in credits for supplies and money from three hundred to five hundred millions of dollars, plus most of the labor, investments in land, equipment, and livestock, representing not less than 50 per cent of the assessable wealth of all the States in which cotton is grown, and this vast sum of money is due when the gathering season begins.

When picking starts, the cotton farmer, as fast as he can, sells his cotton, pays his retail merchant for his year's supplies; the retail merchant pays the wholesale merchant and his local bank; the wholesale merchant pays the large banks in the cities where he is located, and these banks pay the banks in the great financial centers of the country for loans they have made to assist, in the final analysis, the humble, honest, hard-working sons of the soil. All classes of tradesmen, from the smallest to the largest, and all classes of our population, from the poorest to the richest, have a helping hand in the producing of cotton. All that have assisted in any way have a natural, good, and solid reason to hope and expect that the farmer will get a fair price for his year's work; for with him, as with them, it's a year's work before he can have a pay day, or they can collect. The average cotton grower is usually no more able to hold his cotton for a higher price any better than the weekly wage worker can hold his pay check from Saturday noon until Monday morn, and it's at this stage of the cotton-producing business where the farmer loses his year's work, and sometimes two, by not being able to hold his crop until nature's immutable laws force the demand to get around to the supply of a world-wide necessity. This is why and where all schemes and plans to help the cotton or wheat farmers have failed.

These people depend on their brother farmers of the northern and middle-western States for all the flour needed to make their daily bread, for a large part of their meats, as well as livestock, and a part of all the food they consume. The president of one of the largest meat-packing concerns said 30 years ago he would rather have the South for his customers than all Europe.

When they make a short crop and are compelled to sell on a no-market value, they can not buy much of the flour that comes from the Kansas farmers' wheat, the fine mules that come from Missouri, or meats from the farms of the Illinois cattle and hog raiser, and automobiles from Detroit. When the farmers of these Northern and Western States can not sell the only things they raise as their money crop, they can not buy what they need from their merchants of cotton goods or lumber that comes from the southern sawmills needed to improve and build their homes. When the factories of the North and the sawmills of the South slow down, then an army of marching vagabonds are seen all over the land.

Under the forces of the economic system by which we live and have naturally evolved in the past century there is hardly a county in all the United States that can live separate and apart from all the other parts of the country.

As I said in the beginning, I hope I am talking to-night to both reasonable and reasoning beings. Some ask, Can the cotton grower survive by planting no cotton next year? I say yes; and the reason why? Because he has survived heretofore. He has survived droughts, floods, boll worms, and boll weevils. In some places he builded monuments to the boll weevils many years ago. He has survived wars and pestilential diseases and even greater evils than any of these named have been survived by him. He has survived the low and no price evils.

I can remember when he survived after a large crop with the no-price evil 40 years ago or more. On Thanksgiving Day they all assembled in their houses of worship and gave thanks to Almighty God for the crops that He had made the lands produce, some thirty, some sixty, and in the case of cotton about three hundred fold. They reasoned with the Lord thus: That the sons of men, some of them our brothers, standing here in Thy presence, will not give us but a nickel a pound for our cotton, but our most Righteous and Holy Father, Thou hast given us 2 bales, 3 bales, and sometimes 4 bales this year to sell for a nickel a pound, when last year Thou gavest us only 1 bale to sell at a dime a pound.

When the pious old New England cotton-mill owners heard the southern cotton farmers were going to render to the Creator the things due Him on Thanksgiving Day, they also had, as they always have had, their Thanksgiving Day. They are the ones that have a monopoly on the bringing of Thanksgiving Day over to the New World on the Mayflower and depositing it under the rock of ages on the shores of the Atlantic for safekeeping.

They were thankful that the cotton growers of the South had enough of the breath of life still on hand to breathe and stand erect and be thankful for a nickel a pound for his cotton; and thus they reasoned through prayer that if he was so well satisfied with a three or four bales of cotton to sell at that price, where he had only one the year before, he could still live and render unto Cæsar the very thing Cæsar was looking for, which was cotton at 4 cents, and that is what they paid him until about George Washington's Birthday, when they raised the price to make him plant another large crop; and that was not all, they thanked the Lord for having the privilege of telling their employees that cotton is so cheap that it will not pay to weave it into cloth unless your wages are lowered, and for good honest measure you must add another hour to the day's work.

Now, there were reasons aplenty for thanksgiving—something more along the line of what natural causes do for man's benefit.

Nature, it seems, has never loaded the human species very often with greater burdens than they were able to outlive. When disasters have occurred in the past—such as the droughts of Egypt, in the days of Joseph—out of them were born in the mind of what we call a genius the science of irrigation. Since then there has been no such thing as crop failures in the valley of the Nile or any other valley where land was and is irrigated.

This gets us back to the saying that all reforms for the betterment of the ills that overtake us while on earth have come through the martyrdoms of our kind. Some one, sometimes millions, are crucified in some way before great wrongs are righted.

I have heard it said when mother nature needs one of a species or a new species of anything she produces a thousand. And again nothing is produced until it is needed; for instance, the milk never comes in the mother's breast until after the baby arrives. Just where "reason" enters into some of these aphorisms I have quoted, let those who possess curiosity reason out to their own satisfaction, remembering that William Cullen Bryant's bid for immortality was cast in the first lines of Thanatopsis when he said, "To him who in the love of nature holds communication with her visible forms, she speaks a various language."

What I am thinking about is that out of the abundance of nature's magnanimous harvests, rich gifts to the peoples of nearly all the world this year, so much and so many of the material things essential and necessary for our comfort, happiness, and enjoyment, there are none that seem to know how to save, take care of, and preserve for future days, or righteously distribute to those that are sorely oppressed. It seems that there should be more cause and reasons to be giving thanks to the Almighty Power for what we have before us than to be assembling in mobs to give, and pray damns to fall on the heads of those, as far as I can perceive, who have had no connection or partnership whatever with any of God Almighty's plans or enterprises, not even by "remote control."

On August 8 the Department of Agriculture in Washington, D. C., gave out their first annual estimate of the cotton crop for the year 1931.

The information it contained from a financial sense was appalling. It deflated the price of cotton and put the hand of paralysis on many allied industries. I have not looked up to prove, but I dare say the invasion of Belgium in 1914 had no more disastrous effect on the South than the news from Washington that America would produce near 16,000,000 bales of cotton. Since that day many thousands of suggestions and solutions have been offered to remedy what appears to many as the greatest financial cataclysm that has overtaken the people of the South since the war of 1861, and it will be felt all around the world.

Some think that planting no cotton in 1932 will be the perfect panacea to forestall what seems to be due to come to pass. Some who are able in high places that could by their voice help out, allay and mollify whatever financial disaster that may happen to those engaged in the cotton industry, seem to not be seriously concerned.

Just one more night of feasting and fiddling while a large part of the labors of American men and women are being consumed by the burning flames of poverty and bankruptcy.

I said a while ago, I was going to talk about cotton. I am also going to talk about a 10-year plan. Why not? Nearly everyone you meet has a plan to solve the cotton man's troubles. Russia has been getting a lot of free advertising about a "5-year plan." I know America can thrive equally as well or better on a 10-year plan for cotton and wheat, for it will take Russia half a century to grow as much cotton as they need at home, and 100 years to raise enough wheat to give each Russian a loaf of bread a day, and they will eat more when they can get it.

My plan is, and there is nothing original about it, as follows:

First. Let the voters of this country petition the President to immediately convene Congress in a special 15-day session for one purpose only: To pass the necessary acts to empower the Secretary of the Treasury to sell one and one-half or two billion dollars of 10-year 2½ or 3 per cent bonds or an amount sufficient to advance every cotton farmer 12½ cents the pound on cotton and 75 cents the bushel on wheat in warehouses and grain elevators. This on American-grown cotton and wheat, and these advances based on the high grades, lower grades according to the relative market value. The Government to have absolute control, and hold these commodities until a price of 20 cents the pound is received for the cotton and $1.25 per bushel for the wheat.

Second. When the cotton and wheat are sold, the advances and charges to be repaid, and in addition 10 per cent of the net or gross sale prices to be held by the Government for the purpose of forming a national cotton and grain corporation, or two separate corporations, one for cotton and one for grain. This 10 per cent each year for a period of 10 years to be handed back to the cotton and wheat farmers of the United States as the cash capital for corporations to be owned and controlled by them, and equivalent to approximately the average proceeds of one entire cotton and wheat crop.

Third. The 10-year plan to cover the limitations of production to consumption in an orderly, reasonable, and logical way. To study the possibilities, and probabilities, of other countries competing with the United States in the growing of cotton, and the manufacturing of cotton goods, the greater use of cotton goods in all the foreign countries, with import duties or tariffs sufficient to keep them, if it is possible to do so, from in any way competing with our cotton farmers, or our cotton factories on our own soil, let that soil be where it may, or wherever our flag may fly.

Fourth. Recompense or decompose the Farm Board, as now constituted, or constipated may be the better word. Appoint only farmers, bankers, or business men, whose interests are identical with the cotton industry to handle the cotton business, and the same class of men to handle the wheat business, with no authority to use or invest a cent of the funds entrusted to them in any way, except for the actual cotton and wheat delivered to them, and the expenses necessary thereto; prohibiting sale of the cotton or wheat in their care to any firm, corporation, or country that is in competition with this country, who may use American cotton to deflate values in this country, but other countries as well.

REMARKS

A 10-year plan, for the reason that many of the unknowing and unthinking part of our citizens often talk of the competition of other countries, especially the Asians and Russians, with this country in the producing and marketing of cotton. China and India have been producing cotton since long before the dawn of civilization and do not now produce enough for their own use. The best and most reliable statistics at hand tell us that these two countries, with a population of something near a billion people, produce, and have been producing for the past 30 or 40 years, eight to ten million bales of cotton. This is approximately 1,000,000 bales of cotton to each 100,000,000 of inhabitants. Russia, according to figures furnished by our Agricultural Bureau at Washington, for the year 1929–30 produced 1,310,000, and for 1930–31, 1,850,000 bales. Russia has a population estimated from one hundred and twenty-five to one hundred and fifty millions of people. The cotton-growing States of the United States have produced in the past 20 years, in round numbers, about 250,000,000 bales of cotton, something like one-half being exported, leaving for home consumption an annual average of six and one-half or seven million bales, or a million bales for each fifteen or twenty million people, making us the largest consumers of cotton in its varied forms of all countries of the world. We not only grow more cotton but no other country has been able to grow as good staples, save the Egyptian long staple used in a limited quantity in this country.

Here is a thought about other countries growing cotton in competition with this country. A few years ago the Dallas News sponsored prize contests in Texas for "More cotton on less acres." If just one-half the land in 150 counties of that State could be cultivated one year as the prize winner of those contests, John W. McFarlane, of Palestine, worked his acres, it is possible to produce over 100,000,000 bales of cotton in one season.

These natural products of the soil can be preserved by well-known methods for many years, as well as the fabrics and foods that come from them by conversion. A bushel of wheat or a bushel of cottonseed is of more value as measured by the thing called "money," than all the gold, silver, and precious jewels ever mined from the date of creation down to yesterday, if there was only the one bushel of wheat and the one bushel of cottonseed.

There are some who will say, "Why fix 20 cents the pound for cotton and $1.25 per bushel for wheat?" The average price per pound received by the cotton farmers for the past 10 years in the United States has been a little less than 20 cents. At this price, under the conditions which they have produced their annual crops, there was some visible profit or gain to the great majority of those engaged in the arduous and hazardous work of raising cotton and wheat to supply the needs of the earth's population. There are those who will ask, "Why place the responsibility of financing cotton and wheat on the National Government in Washington?" I answer by saying that the National Government is the only organized institution that is big enough to carry on such an undertaking. The Government can get the money to do business with at 2½ or 3 per cent, on as long or short a time as desirable. No other agency has ever financed cotton or wheat for less than twice the above costs for farmers, merchants, and others holding cotton or wheat from a low or no market until sold, and then only for short-time arrangements. This is more than they can afford to pay. Cotton and wheat are better collateral for money borrowed than copper, silver, or gold bullion is, or ever will be.

President Lincoln said it was the duty of governments to do the things for the people that it could do better for them than they could do for themselves, and I was taught to affirm that our Government is "of the people, for the people, and by the people."

Many able men claiming to be intelligent, some of them eminent lawyers, some our Congressmen and Senators, and several actually elected to the greatest official position of trust, power, and honor on this earth—Presidents of these United States of America—say we can not legislate values into commodities by law, and they will immediately walk into the Halls of Congress and make laws to increase their salaries. They will vote a tariff of 2 cents or more on a pound of sugar which the people must have, and then take the money to pay their increased salaries, plus all their kinsmen they can get on the Government pay rolls by the laws' orders. As a matter of fact and truth, every city, county, State, and National Government officeholder and employee has his wages fixed, stabilized, and often increased, and all guaranteed by laws.

There are in America, including the Army, Navy, and pensioners, some million or more of men and women getting their livings, including traveling expenses, directly from the Government. They are living under and by law. The wages and salaries of over 2,000,000 railway employees are fixed by a lawfully constituted railway board appointed by the President of this country, and this is not all. The railway corporations have rates made by law for hauling freight and passengers sufficient to cover and guarantee them fair return on their investments, plus all the watered stock and bonds they could issue and sell to the public before States and the National Government stopped them from practicing such unjust and immoral acts, though profitable, on simple-minded and credulous investors of the country. The bonds and stocks of all railway and transportation companies in America are stabilized by the decrees of the law, and were made so within the past 15 years, and these very days they are beseeching the powers that rule the country to give them more, because they are not making enough, due to business stagnation and competition. I cite these instances to show to those that say we can not stabilize or put values, especially money or cash values, into things animate or inanimate, by law. About one man out of every six you meet on the streets is getting his gasoline and groceries by operation of the law, and about one day out of every six the workingman works goes for taxes as the laws demand.

I said recompose or decompose the Farm Board. Let me explain. I know little about the actual and detailed operations of this subsidiary of our Government created for the purpose of giving advice and financial assistance to the agricultural masses of this country. I know there was voted at its disposal one-half a billion dollars for the purpose of stabilizing values of farm products. This money has been invested and loaned to cotton, wheat, corn, oat, bean, dairy, fruit, and grape producers. It has done good, no doubt, far beyond what the average man is able to see or comprehend, but no agency could stabilize the values satisfactorily of eight or ten billion dollars worth of the products above named with one-half a billion dollars at their command, with enormous yields of the farms, with private corporate interests fighting and obstructing them every time they make a move to assist those for whose benefit the Farm Board was created. They have been sorely handicapped, but there is back and behind all they have done or can do a bar sinister that the members of the Farm Board have to keep them from being of material aid to those it was intended to help, and it is the letter and spirit of instructions to Congress by none other than the President, if what was printed in the New York Times in the year 1931, the month of August, and the day, the 15th, is true. Here is what it said:

"Two years ago when President Hoover proposed his plan for the creation of a farm board, he warned Congress that certain vital principles must be observed in the interest of the taxpayers as well as the farmer. Among those principles he listed the following:

"1. No governmental agency should engage in the buying or price fixing of products.

"2. Government funds should not be loaned or facilities duplicated where other services of credit and facilities are available at reasonable rates.

"3. No activities should be set in motion that will result in increasing the surplus production."

Is it possible that a President of this country would sign a bill creating a farm board, handing over to them $500,000,000 to aid (not give as charity) the great agricultural classes of this country, the bone and sinew of the land, and then say to them, "Behold my instructions: You must not buy or sell, either fix a price, loan moneys, duplicate facilities, give services or credit, when these acts on your part conflict with private interests already established"? Can there, in all this enlightened country, be found one so moronish that he could not understand the meaning of these simple and plain words? What would any man think to hear of a father giving money to his son to go into a business and then say, "Son, do not go into any business where you find other persons engaged in the same line of endeavor"? That's exactly, according to the oracles given out from the ruling head of this Nation; and we have been wondering what was the matter with the Farm Board. It would have been of no use to the Farm Board had Congress turned the mints and money-printing shops over to them and they run them day and night coining gold or silver and printing paper currency year after year if they could not buy, sell, or loan on the agricultural products of the country.

The fallacy of any man, corporation, or government trying to boost the price of any commodity by buying or loaning money on a small fractional part of the supply is so foolish that whoever advocates or practices such a scheme ought to have his head examined by a pathologist and a psychopathist to find out how much of the elements of human nature and common sense he is endowed with.

Individuals and corporations operating as monopolies, trusts, or under "gentlemen's agreements" for profit, do so on the basis of controlling the major portion of all the supply of the goods, wares, and merchandise they sell or manufacture. The secret of their success (which is no secret) is in being able to control and hold the supply until the demand gets around to their warehouses before what they have to sell spoils on their hands, they knowing well in advance when the day will arrive.

Those words of President Hoover have completely denatured the work of the Farm Board as if it had never been born.

Something more about creating values by law. Not so long ago, I was on the bank of the Rio Grande River in Texas. There I stood on land in the United States that could not be bought for less than $500 per acre. Then I could face about and view, as far as I could see, thousands of acres of land just as fertile, warmed by the same sunshine, watered by the same clouds, from the same skies, only divided by an imaginary line down the middle of the river, that could not be sold for $5 per acre. The difference in price or value being the difference in government on one side of the river and government on the other side of the river.

If we can not create values by laws, the makers of our Constitution made an awful blunder when they placed in section 8, Article V, of that document these words: "Congress shall have the right to coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standards of weights and measures." This does not say whether they were to coin gold, silver, copper, tin, lead, or iron. Anybody that does not believe the way that article reads, just hunt up a copy of the Constitution and read it. When this Constitution was made in 1787, there was not a gold or silver mine in the United States, and having known many Congressmen and Senators in the past, and knowing a few at the present time, I am wondering what they knew about the value of any kind of metals in those days.

A lot of them don't seem to know much about the values of money or metals now. The Constitution makers, I said, made an awful blunder. I want to explain the difference between a blunder and a mistake. A mistake can be corrected, while a blunder can not. This one was made too long ago to try to think about changing.

Now, I am just foolish enough to believe that if my governor, Senator elect of Louisiana, can have a law passed that will quadruple the selling price of cotton in two weeks' time, that he can go on to Washington immediately and work on his brother Senators and have them help him coin up about 50,000,000 tons of scrap iron that is lying loose over this country and make it legal tender for all debts, private and public, including their salaries. The scrap-iron and salvage business belongs to the Hebrews in this United States, and I can quote scripture to prove that they are God's chosen people. I know this would put new life into the junk business, besides help some dear Jewish friends that both myself and my governor-Senator are glad to call friends.

Can the Government fix and stabilize the prices of commodities? If I have not shown that ours has been doing it since it was founded, let me remind those of short memories that during the World War the Government of the United States of North America fixed the price of wheat, lumber, iron, steel, powder, horses, and mules, and added a dollar and ten cents per gallon to the price of whisky. It fixed the price of the pay for over 4,000,000 soldiers plus 4,000,000 insurance policies on their lives and is still doing it. It would take volumes to enumerate all the things that this Government fixed a price on, and they were high enough, and it paid off. It did more: It told us to not eat sugar on Monday, flour bread on Tuesday, nor burn coal on Wednesday, give to the Red Cross on Thursday, eat fish on Friday, subscribe for Liberty bonds on Saturday, and go to church on Sunday, and most of us did.

The same reasons for fixing prices then, in days of war, are just as good and more necessary now to help us keep the peace. History of governments are full of precedents telling us when and where they fixed prices, and the prices of all commodities, including lawyers' fees and land rents, were fixed by the decrees of one Roman Emperor. Interest on moneys was fixed at noting soon after the Galilean Carpenter threw the money changers out of the temple, and for a thousand years or more the penalty for loaning money at interest was death; and this law had the sanction of the established church. As a matter of truth, the church was both the gospel and the law.

The value of cotton ought not to vary a cent a pound and wheat 10 cents a bushel over a period of 1, 5, or 10 years. The Government can not guarantee to do something that nature has never done in the way of producing abundant crops every year, but can stabilize the value and take care of the supplies of cotton and wheat for a term of years or as long as the people of this Nation desire.

All throughout the ages historians tell us that Mother Nature has had her fat and lean years, and the specters of want and famine are stalking abroad on some parts of the earth at all times, while at intervals, not so far apart, she fails to produce food over a vast territory for many years. When these catastrophes have happened, nations of people have perished almost to the last one.

These verities of nature as expressed may be a little far-fetched to millions of Americans, who have been so abundantly and lavishly provided with the best of all the comforts and luxuries of life for the past 10 or 15 years, not having to give a "thought about the morrow, what they shall eat, or what they shall drink, or wherewith shall they be clothed," unmindful of the days of the future when adversities may cause them to faint by the wayside while their strength is small. We have more than 25,000,000 of people not knowing to-day where their food is coming from to-morrow. We have 50,000,000 more depending on a weekly wage and salaries for their week's supply of the things necessary for life, not knowing whether or not the next pay check they will draw will have attached to it the dreaded dismissal notice.

The small interest and charges for carrying the entire cotton and wheat crops of this country for a period of one or five years would be a small insurance to pay against the days when we may be surrounded by natural perils when our destruction would inevitably be near at hand. The reasons these things have occurred in the past are the same reasons they will occur again.

Ten million bales of cotton and 500,000,000 bushels of wheat ought to be in storage at all times in the country as a surplus to insure a steady supply of cotton for the people's needs, and wheat for food at even or steady prices regardless of whether crops are small or large in any year or over a period of several years, and it should not be held in the clutches of a modern Joseph.

We have in America, on hand and in sight, cotton that ought to bring, at a fair value, near two and a half billion dollars, and wheat enough, under average conditions of the past 10 years, to bring growers near $1,000,000,000; yet in this, the richest country beneath the shining sun, with a population of 125,000,000 people, these products of the farms have no market or exchange value. At the same time we boast of having about one-half the coined gold of the world in the vaults of the Federal reserve banking system that, when created, the originators said would make money or currency shortage forever impossible.

The day the National Government adopts a plan to valorize and stabilize the cotton and wheat crops of America for a period of 10 years will be the day when a new hope and new period of sane prosperity will be born into the minds and lives of millions who are looking now through the gloomy glasses of despair.

When the products of land and labor can not be sold or moneys loaned on them, the lands have neither sale nor rental value, and laborers turn beggars. In countries where there is no agriculture, they have no need for cities, railroads, banks, or stocks of merchandise. When the farmers and livestock growers prosper, then the merchant, the banker, and mechanic prosper.

The taking over by the Government of the cotton and wheat crops would put in circulation nearly two billions of dollars at the springs or fountainheads of the mighty streams of commerce, and who can point to the individual who would not be benefited; and furthermore, who doubts its ability to do it when we know that within the past few months over $1,000,000,000 was handed out to those who enlisted in the World War 14 years ago, and on what kind of security? And in the face of the assertions of the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. Andrew Mellon, that there was no money to give them, while thousands of checks were already being signed and paid before he finished saying there was nothing to pay with; and what was paid to these men is as a bucket of water dashed into a river compared to the sympathetic gifts of gold to the European governments that owed us $12,091,000, when peace was declared after the World War, and now owe us, we are informed by one authority, $7,740,000,000, and by another conclusion $5,888,000,000, and this payable in small driblets from now until some time near the year 2000 A. D., and this reduction of either five or seven billions of dollars was made without their paying a copper cent of the principal, or with the consent of the majority of the citizens of this Republic.

The United States holds a monopoly and will continue to hold it for many years to come on nearly every bale of exported cotton in the world; and if we are not big enough to prevent other countries from dictating the price they will pay us, we ought to go out of the cotton business and sink our merchant ships in the seas, pull down the Stars and Stripes from the Capitol Building in Washington and all sing—

> Oh, Star-Spangled Banner, we weep until you wave
> Again in this free land, made by the blood of the brave—
> With sorrow we see you furled in the home of slaves—
> Made so by your being held in the hands of knaves.

We have in our midst at all times didactors of what we call "The law of supply and demand." There never were as few words put into a sentence with more meaning, or as meaningless. It's a law that works going and coming, down and up, overtime and undertime. Some say there are powers in this law that Omnipotence can not overrule, but I say that the power of the almighty dollar vetoes it whenever it so wills.

A farmer understands the law to mean that when he has to buy anything, the man he deals with owns the supply, and he understands he must comply with whatever demands are made as to price and terms.

He further understands that when he is favored by nature with bountiful yields of wheat or cotton, producing enough in one year to last the country for two or three years, he must accept less than the price of one year's supply for the two or three years' supply. He understands that when he fails to produce what the country needs and must have for two or three years, no one contributes to his loss for efforts extended.

A higher and ancient law says that the demand for food and raiment is steady and constant, and history tells us that it has always exceeded the supply.

A still higher law dictates that there ought to be enough of the supply of protection and precaution on the part of all governments to guard the welfare of those that are engaged in the business of feeding and clothing the great majority of their brothers-in-kind.

I said there was nothing new about a "10-year plan." The holding back of one-tenth of the net sale price of each year's crop of cotton and wheat for 10 years is equivalent to having the entire proceeds of one year's crop delivered back to the farmers as a cash-capital fund to form a national grain or cotton corporation. This plan may be new or novel to many, as applied to the economics of agriculture.

This would be the farmer saving up every tenth bale of cotton or tenth bushel of wheat, which would be better than plowing up every third row when the Government had a mortgage on the first two rows, some one else on all the others, plus the Federal land banks' mortgage on the land, with not a chance that all the cotton or wheat gathered from all the rows will pay the taxes in many instances. And here let me digress for a moment to say something about taxes.

Just after the close of the World War we began the era of voting taxes and bonds for every imaginable thing that politicians inspired by profiteers asked us to vote. The farmer voted for bonds to build the $1,000,000 high-school building where the grade-school building was sufficient. He voted for good roads and free bridges. In the cities and towns the banker, the money brokers, the business man, the laboring man joined hands and voted bonds and taxes under "Progress and prosperity" slogans. They said make business good and give labor employment. We increased taxes a hundred per cent and doubled assessments another hundred per cent, which quadrupled the taxes. When we voted these taxes and bonds, cotton was over 20 cents the pound and wheat was over $1.25 the bushel. Now it takes 16 bales of cotton to pay the taxes on the identical farm or 16 bushels of wheat where only 1 bale of cotton or 1 bushel of wheat paid the taxes 10 years ago.

This is an increase in the ratio of 100 to 1,600 as paid in cotton—16 bales to pay the taxes now that 1 bale paid 10 years ago. The people of no nation, no State, no city, no street, not even Wall Street, can stand up under such tax burdens.

Here is a concrete case that is strictly home grown. The parish of Caddo (called counties in other States) in which the city of Shreveport is situated, has not near as high tax rates as thousands of other localities in the country. Our State, parish, city license, motor vehicle, and gasoline taxes, approximate $6,000,000. We will produce 60,000 bales of cotton worth, at the present no-value levels, less than $2,000,000, and cotton is the big thing we have to sell. I dare mention the assertion that there are fifteen hundred counties in the South and West that can show similar conditions.

In the epochs of panics and depressions that have happened in the past, it was cotton that had to bow down before the altars of gold. And more, there have been days in this country when, had it not been for cotton to draw gold from foreign governments, the Government of the United States would have been unable to maintain the much idolized and revered "gold standard" of money values, in order that a "cross of gold" should stand as the emblem of honest money among the enlightened nations of the globe. Cotton was the savior that had to be crucified to keep the kings of finance from losing their shining crowns.

The exports of cotton from America for a hundred years have exceeded in value that of all other commodities combined; and if the cotton growers had one dime a day profit for the days of hard labor spent in its production, it would take more gold to pay them off than this country has ever coined.

The supply of wheat wherever grown is harvested within less than 60 days' time. The supply of cotton is gathered on an average of less than four months' time. The Chief Architect of all our earthly "scheme of things" never intended that we should consume, during the short harvesting of grains, all our lands supplied. If He had, there would have been no lasting and life-giving properties as lives in a single grain of wheat for a thousand years, as some declare. Cotton in warehouses, or sunk in ships to the bottom of the seas, remaining 25 and 50 years, when recovered and found in good condition, proves that nature must have predestined the formulae for preservation of the species said to have been made in the image of their creator by placing the near-everlasting concomitants in the foods that sustain their lives over long durations of time.

I can not say all I would like to say about price fixing, stabilizing, or valorizing commodities by governmental agencies this evening, because I can talk a week on the subject and then not say one-half that could be said pro and con.

There are those that are saying "Hands off by the Government in business"; but when we look for a reason for their utterances, we never travel very far to find it. They belong to the class that think they have an inherited right to pick the pockets of the public without license or restraint, without giving value for what they receive.

When it comes to private agencies fixing a value on what I have to sell, so there is no profit to me and all to them, I will choose to have my Government be the arbiter.

When it comes to organized agencies or corporations, with unlimited capital in any business, for all they can squeeze and screw out of the unorganized masses, then I am for my Government stepping up and saying, "Thou shalt not."

What is needed is for the producers of wheat and cotton to be advanced at least the cost of production, which will place new money into the channels of trade, and start the agricultural classes back into the business of living.

The South and West are begging not charity but a loan and protection on the best collateral that floats on the rivers' and oceans' commerce.

And I ask any man or woman that hears me this question:

"If you owned all the cotton and wheat in this country to-day, and you could borrow the money to hold and store for 1, 2, or 3 years at 2½ or 3 per cent, would you sell at the low prices, dump into the sea, or plow up or burn every third row, or would you hold until the peoples of the country called for and paid you a fair price?"

I know what you will answer, if you have good, common sense with a mixture of reason. You will say that we will hold, because in these two greatest of all products that come from our farms, we have two redeemers that liveth.

In conclusion, getting down to present-day conditions, we behold business and industries stifled; laborers unemployed by the millions; fortunes of men, large and small, vanish as warm vapor in cold air; banks, big and little, closing their doors in every part of the country; people enduring all kinds of hardships, and due almost wholly to the cold and unsympathetic truth that all the staple, basic, and prime necessities for sustaining life, have no market or exchange value. We look about us and see about 50 individuals in these good United States absolute dictators of that many corporations, having something like 1,000 subsidiaries earning fixed and guaranteed dividends and profits made by laws of their own designs, in excess of $2,000,000,000 annually, enough in two years to enable them, with only their profits and dividends, to draw from the Federal reserve banks every one of the $4,000,000,000 stored in their vaults, if they choose so to do, just as Morgan & Co., with allied interests, did to the United States Treasury during Cleveland's second administration.

In the past decade there have been engrafted into the law books of the land (not by the consent of a majority of the free voters of our Commonwealths) and sustained by the Supreme Court decisions, laws giving street-railway, light, power, water, and gas companies, and all railroad corporations of America, the right to make rates and charges for services sufficient to them, and guarantee a "fair return" on their investments—"fair returns" meaning anywhere from 5 to 500 per cent, after charges for losses, deflations, and salaries larger than any Government ever paid to the occupant of its royal throne.

The audacious irony of the situation is they are not satisfied, and are asking, in the name of God, amen, for more in the face of world-wide depressions, and when in this country the primary producers of wealth of the land are prostrate on their backs, almost unable to pray, sing, beg, or weep, much less fight for help.

It is a hard and unfair rule that gives to one class of men the right by "due processes of law" to take from their brothers the fruits of their toil and sufficient amount to guarantee to them a sure, steady, and increasing profit on their stocks, bonds, and investments, and deny these same brothers the right to have a price for the foods they produce sufficient for them to have the bare necessities of life. It is the "golden rule" all right, with all the gold going one way.

Isn't it enough to make thinking men wonder and ask themselves just what kind or kinds of political and economic anachronisms are we living under? In this best of all possible governments?

JEFFERSON DAY ADDRESS BY FORMER GOVERNOR BYRD, OF VIRGINIA

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by former Governor Byrd, of Virginia, on the occasion of the Jefferson Day rally at the Willard Hotel in Washington, D. C., on April 13, 1932.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Fellow Democrats, the words of Thomas Jefferson had an imperishable vitality which has carried them down to us. For 150 years they have profoundly influenced the political thought of the world, and their power sprang not from the personality of the speaker but from eternal principles which he perceived with the vision of an inspired prophet and translated into simple language. These principles were true not because he gave them. Rather he gave them because they were true. What was true of human nature then is no less true to-day.

But I do not believe that Mr. Jefferson would hold some of his opinions beyond change were he to return to us to-night. He was the most modern-minded of the builders of this Nation, and he would recognize to-day that the isolation of his time of bad roads and difficult transportation has been swept away on the wings of the airplane, and by the automobile and the speed of electricity. He would accept the necessity of interstate regulation of interstate operations, and he would broaden his views of sensible cooperation with other countries without sacrifice of the vitality of national sovereignty. But I do not think he would sacrifice or compromise a single fundamental principle that he proclaimed, for these principles are eternal and essential to the preservation of popular government in this country.

Were Jefferson to return to Monticello he would be shocked to read the statement of a brilliant justice of the Supreme Court of the United States that to-day we face conditions worse than war, and he would be surprised to hear the successors of his old political enemy, Alexander Hamilton, after 12 years of their control of the affairs of the Nation, admit that the justice does not overstate the condition. He would learn that the Republican Party had not only built up and encouraged other monopolies by its policies, but that it had claimed itself to have a monopoly on prosperity. He could turn the files of the newspapers in the recent days of soaring prices and marvel at the bold assurances of the leaders of the Republican Party that we were permanently on that high-price level, and that it was no longer true that what goes up must inevitably come down; and at last he would read that vision seen by Mr. Hoover himself of a new America from which the Republican Party had actually abolished poverty. As he read on he would mark the collapse of prices, and the cries of the losers, and the losses of the victims, and the unemployment of the helpless, and even his powerful mind would be confused. How could a party of the best minds have lost its monopoly on prosperity, he would ask; and the Republican answer would be that somehow the ghost of Cleveland or Wilson had returned to the prosperity feast of good Republicans and scared prosperity away. Besides he would be assured by the Republican leaders that the panic is due to international causes. Mr. Jefferson would be still more confused by this last explanation, for he would read elsewhere the Republican doctrine that America is self-contained and may live and prosper by itself alone without regard as to how high the tariff walls may be erected around us.

The conditions are indeed tragic and terrible, but the Democratic Party can not win by merely placing the responsibility for the panic on the Republicans. The American people are in no mood to be patient with the ordinary play of politics. The American people demand that the Democratic Party show the power and the purpose to lead in reconstruction and to liberate and strengthen the courage and capacity inherent in the minds and hearts of the people that they may recapture their prosperity and rebuild their fortunes.

Bad as the conditions are, I do not consider the difficulties as great as those that Thomas Jefferson faced and fought and conquered. He made this a popular Government with only the hopes and ideas of isolated and scattered people and a few associate leaders at his back against the determination of the brilliant Hamilton to place power in the possession of the privileged classes. Under his administration a struggling people saw wealth accumulate and taxes go down, and a mounting surplus become a problem in the Treasury of the United States. This change Jefferson accomplished in part because of his insistence that the Government must be frugal; because of his hatred of public debt; because of his love of economy in public affairs. Were he to revisit us to-day I believe the condition of the public purse would be his primary concern. He would not only insist that expenses be reduced; he would not appoint a commission to consider the problem; but he would reduce them. Our great leaders in Congress, Speaker GARNER and Senator ROBINSON, would have no stronger supporter than Mr. Jefferson in their patriotic position that, although the Republican Party created the deficit, the Budget of the United States must be balanced and expenses of Government must be reduced.

DANGER OF ORGANIZED MINORITIES

Wherever one tries to cut expenditures there are scores of interested persons who deny that the cut can be made without great injury. But hard necessity has shown individuals and private business how expenses can be reduced. Of course every one recognizes that the largest items in the National Budget must be paid in bad as well as good times, but millions may yet be saved. One of the ways to save, Mr. Jefferson would say, is to take power out of the hands of organized and local minorities or blocs and turn it back to the majority of unorganized men and women who go silently about their own affairs and supply ultimately most of the money the Government spends. Mr. Jefferson hated every form of tyranny over the mind of man, and he detested special privileges. He believed that the rule of the majority had its faults and confessed its dangers, but he nevertheless believed that a representative democracy was the best government and that the decision must rest with the majority as a working rule of such government. He was right—eternally and fundamentally right—when he said, "The man in each locality knows his own business better than any one else." Yet in our country to-day the decision often results from the activities of a small part of the voters, separated into different blocs, and organized and determined to win their own objectives by concentrating political pressure on Members of Congress.

Mr. Jefferson always gave his occupation as that of a farmer. Agriculture was his hobby, and he did more for its promotion than any other statesman that ever lived. He believed that values come ultimately from those who work the soil; and how can the creators of wealth, these feeders of the Nation, regain a fair living unless they can market at a profit their exportable surplus? With one-half of our population dependent upon agriculture, when this great purchasing power is reduced, as it has been for the last 10 years, every maker of things to sell must suffer. Remember that over half the cotton, over half the tobacco, over a third of the copper, more than a fifth of the wheat and flour, a quarter of the agricultural machinery, more than one-eighth of the refined oil, and a tenth of the automobiles were exported in 1929. It is a fair implication from Mr. Jefferson's political writings that he would to-day work toward an international economic union and perhaps reciprocal treaties by which duties could be imposed to furnish reasonable revenue and at the same time to encourage the marketing of our exportable surplus.

PLATFORM SHOULD BE SHORT AND CLEAR

The platform written by the Democratic Party should be so clear and simple that the man on the street can understand it without calling in a lawyer to interpret its provisions. Our position on the tariff should be clearly stated.

Wars grow out of economic competition, and lives as well as dollars may be the price of tariff battles. Routes of trade and flow of commerce concern the United States as deeply and as vitally as it concerns a human being to have his arteries and veins open and healthy.

Obviously the tariffs of the United States have contributed powerfully by example and effect to interference with the trade of the world. Following our example, there is no European nation to-day that is not to the limit of its ability placing barriers against the interchange of commodities upon which the prosperity of international trade fundamentally depends.

We see to-day as a direct result of Republican policies our foreign markets closed, a reckless waste of governmental revenues; we see the farmer ruined because he has no market for his surplus, and our manufacturers, in order to escape tariff reprisals against American-made goods, erecting factories abroad and depriving the American workman of a job and our Government of taxes.

COST OF GOVERNMENT MUST BE LOWERED

Our governmental expenses, local, State, and national, have increased from three billions of dollars in 1913 to fifteen billions in 1931. This is an increase of 500 per cent in amount, an increase of more than four times per capita. To-day $1 out of every $5 we earn goes to 250,000 tax-gathering and tax-spending agencies. Eighteen million of our citizens are now dependent upon tax pay rolls for their support. To-day the value of our basic commodities, the only source from which the wealth of our Nation is replenished, is much below the 1913 level. In agriculture the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar is only a little more than half as compared to 1913. Our foreign trade is back to the 1910 basis. Our governments, local, State, and national, can not continue to live in the boom days of 1929. If we do, disaster will inevitably follow. The Democratic Party should declare for lowering our governmental costs—national, State, and local—to the ability of the citizens to pay. This can only be accomplished by less Government in business and more business in Government.

PROHIBITION SHOULD BE SUBMITTED TO PEOPLE

And now for a moment let us discuss prohibition. The eighteenth amendment as such has not been indorsed by either the Democratic of Republican Party. The recent vote in Congress to resubmit the eighteenth amendment indicates that the division on prohibition is as sharp in the Republican Party as in the Democratic Party. I have throughout my public career supported dry legislation and advocated temperance. I believe that the open saloon and its evils, legally abolished by the eighteenth amendment, should never be permitted to return. I say this so that my position will not be misunderstood. The prohibition law and all other laws should be enforced, but we must recognize that no law is stronger than the public sentiment to sustain it. In Virginia I voted as a member of the State senate to submit to the people of Virginia a referendum on prohibition. My views on the national problem are identical. No problem has ever touched the lives and morals of our citizens more closely than prohibition. It should be removed from party politics and submitted directly to the people themselves for decision. The Democratic platform should declare for the enforcement of all laws, but an immediate task of the Democratic Party is to work out the most fair and feasible method to carry the prohibition question to the people.

If the eighteenth amendment, or a modification, is sustained by such referendum, a clear mandate will result to enforce the prohibition laws. I am opposed to any referendum unless it be conducted under the law of the land. I do not favor any plan that will permit the people of a particular State to vote that State out of the control of the Constitution of the United States while other States remain under the Constitution. I stand, therefore, upon these beliefs:

(a) That prohibition is the law and should not be nullified by deliberate failure to observe it; but

(b) That it is still a human law that may be amended or changed; and

(c) That as a question affecting the lives and habits of the people it should be decided by a popular vote by the people themselves.

No matter what plan is proposed, a constitutional amendment is necessary. I suggest an amendment to provide the legal machinery to permit the people themselves to determine this vexing question. The amendment could read as follows:

"The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose an amendment or amendments to or the repeal of Article XVIII of the amendments to this Constitution, or to any future amendment or amendments thereof, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of this Constitution when ratified at an election to be held in each of the several States on a certain day, to be designated by Congress, by the majority of the electors voting thereon in three-fourths of the several States. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for the electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislatures."

This will enable—

(a) When two-thirds of Congress desire, the question of the repeal or modification of the eighteenth amendment can be submitted to every qualified voter in every State on a day selected by Congress when no other election is held.

(b) Each State will vote as a unit, and three-fourths of the States, as at present, will be necessary to change the existing amendment.

As I see it, in no other way can the voice of the people in secret ballot be given expression. A constitutional amendment submitted to legislatures does not enable a direct expression from the people; neither does an amendment submitted to State conventions.

Regardless of my own individual views on prohibition or any other question of equal importance affecting the lives and habits and individual rights of the people, I am willing to stand firmly upon the fundamental democratic principle that the people themselves have the right to decide it, and whenever desired by a substantial proportion of our people they should be given the opportunity to do so. It is not more police or more government but stronger convictions and law-enforcement spirit that we need. This means a revivification of honesty and courage, which will require all the fortitude that Jefferson bequeathed us. I make this suggestion without thought of candidacy for any office but as a constructive effort to solve the problem confronting us.

Now, in conclusion, the Republican Party is discouraged; their hearts are failing them before the nation-wide criticism of their administration; but hope springs eternal in their predictions that we will divide and defeat ourselves. Our opponents will be disappointed. This country we love, this people we serve, needs the Democratic Party to lead them out of the depths of depression. The ambitions of no individual will divide us, the dislike of no individual will be permitted to weaken our common strength. Sobered and stimulated by the shining example of the greatest Democrat of the ages, let us highly resolve that this party, dedicated to popular service, will select its leader and follow him without dividing reservations to recapture for all Americans the prosperity and happiness of a people to whom Jefferson bequeathed the power to control their Government.

GOVERNMENT AID TO CURE THE DEPRESSION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR TYDINGS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I beg to tender for the RECORD an address delivered in the city of Washington last evening over the radio by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] on the subject of "How Government Can Help Cure the Depression." I ask that it may be printed in the usual way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the address referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

The address referred to is as follows:

It should be evident to every thinking person at this time that what is needed to help lead the country out of its present long and serious depression, to lessen the injurious effects of unemployment, and to secure at least a partial return to prosperity, is some plan which will accomplish these altogether worthy results. It must be a plan which will provide work for the unemployed and by providing them with work, furnish them with purchasing power to buy the things people use and need, which our factories and farms will then be called upon to produce. It must be a plan which will not further burden a public already groaning under an almost unbearable burden of National, State, city, county, and municipal taxation; and, lastly, it must be a plan which can be called into play at once in order to stem the tide of adversity long before the cold winds of next winter are felt.

Can such a plan be devised and carried through which will accomplish these requisites to a return of prosperity and at the same time not burden the public with more taxes which they will find it difficult to pay?

My answer is an emphatic, "Yes; it can be done; it should be done; it must be done or grave consequences are in store for the country."

I have introduced such a plan in the National Congress in the form of an amendment to the revenue act, and this plan will shortly come up for a vote in the Senate of the United States.

It is my purpose now to explain briefly but thoroughly that plan in the hope that I may impress the country with its soundness and merit and secure enough popular support for it to insure its adoption by the Congress.

This plan is as follows. It provides three things:

First. The creation of a bond issue in the sum of $1,500,000,000 to be liquidated at the rate of one-tenth of this sum per year, or, in other words, to pay off this loan at the rate of $150,000,000 per annum.

Second. It provides that with the sum of money obtained from the bond issue a gigantic construction program will be immediately inaugurated all over the United States, embracing all of those construction projects already authorized by the Congress, but for which no appropriation has as yet been made, due to a shortage of national funds. These already-authorized projects embrace a building program of a billion dollars, which would be spent for labor and materials. In addition to this a further sum of $400,000,000 would be available for the immediate construction of roads, river and harbor improvements, and flood-control projects. As stated, the whole program would call for the expenditure, starting immediately, of the sum of $1,500,000,000.

Third. The plan provides further that this huge bond issue of $1,500,000,000 shall be paid off entirely by levying a special tax of 24 cents a gallon on beer containing 2.75 per cent of alcohol by volume. To permit the sale of this beer the Volstead Act is amended, raising the alcoholic content it now specifies, of one-half of 1 per cent, to 2.75 per cent, which is the point where scientists and the medical fraternity unite in declaring such beverage is not intoxicating in fact.

It will be asked, "Would such a tax on beer in itself furnish enough revenue to the Federal Government to pay off the principal and interest of the bond issue without additional burdens upon the people in the form of other taxation?" My answer is "Yes," and I will attempt to prove that answer is true and accurate by quoting the figures of the United States Census Bureau.

In 1914, when the manufacture and sale of beer was legal in many parts of the country, about 1,980,000,000 gallons were consumed that year. Since then our population has increased, but even with this increase of population since 1914, assuming that there would be no more beer consumed now than then, a tax of 24 cents a gallon at the rate of the 1914 consumption of beer would yield $500,000,000 annually. This is two and one-half times the sum required to pay for the yearly amortization or sinking fund requirement of the bonds, plus interest due, on the billion and half dollar issue.

In other words, if this beer were legalized, as stated before, and instead of consuming approximately 2,000,000,000 gallons a year, as we did in 1914, we should now consume only 40 per cent of this amount, a tax of 24 cents per gallon on this amount of beer would yield approximately the $200,000,000 which would be sufficient to pay the $150,000,000 annually required for the sinking fund to amortize the bonds beside the interest upon those outstanding.

I believe that the consumption of beer to-day would be equal to that of 1914, but a consumption of less than one-half this amount would furnish all the revenue required to pay off the bond issue in full.

Again, the bill provides that the beer would be sold only in bottles, a revenue stamp being placed upon each bottle at the rate of 3 cents a pint.

It is provided that the money derived from this revenue tax on beer would not go into General Treasury funds. The Treasurer of the United States is directed to keep all moneys arising from beer taxes in a special fund, which would be used first to pay off the yearly amortization of the construction-bond issue, together with accrued interest. All amounts received from beer revenues in addition to that needed for the purpose of paying off the principal and interest of the construction bonds can be used for general Government expenses. It is estimated this additional fund would provide an added $300,000,000 not needed for construction-bond amortization, and this sum would make many of the taxes now contemplated to be imposed on automobiles, stock certificates, and the like unnecessary.

Now, let us look at the whole proposition again:

One billion five hundred million dollars to be spent for all kinds of construction work is equivalent to $10 for every person or $40 for every family in the United States. Many heads of families are now employed; so that, if this fund were confined to those unemployed—of which there are about 10,000,000 at the present time—the sum available for construction would be equivalent to about $150 for each of the 10,000,000 people now out of work, for which there is now no employment fund at all. As applied to half the unemployed, it would afford double this sum, or $450 per unemployed person this year.

This huge sum of money would be paid, first, for all kinds of materials that would be needed in the various projects and for the labor necessary to manufacture them. Again, labor would be employed to construct these projects throughout the United States in the form of bricklayers, electricians, carpenters, architects, accountants, bookkeepers, and the like. The railroads would be called upon to haul the freight and the general effect would be to stimulate many lines of business apart from the pure construction of the buildings themselves.

In order to put through this plan, not one dollar of income tax, inheritance tax, or taxes on automobiles, radios, refrigerators, cigarettes, or any other present governmental revenue would be needed. Beer alone would furnish sufficient revenue to pay two and one-half times the necessary cost of the construction bond demands, which fact I think makes the plan sound and feasible.

And consider the extent to which all business would be benefited. The unemployed, now a nonbuying part of our citizenship, would come back into the markets and purchase food and clothing and all of the products of our country. Its effect would give business a much-needed upturn, which, in my judgment, we need before the harsh effects of next winter descend upon the country and upon our huge army of unemployed.

Besides, we know that large quantities of beer are being consumed anyway. We know that the racketeer, the gangster, and the bootlegger are taking tribute from the sale of illegal beer and are becoming enriched while millions of law-abiding citizens storm the streets asking only for an opportunity to earn a respectable living.

This is one of the few commodities in America that is being sold in large quantities and which is not contributing a single cent toward the Nation's expenses. The Government is not getting a penny from beer racketeers either in taxes on their products or from the big incomes they are getting, while law-abiding citizens pay income taxes, and taxes are levied on many other commodities. Criminals are lining their pockets with beer revenues while Congress seeks here, there, and everywhere for something else to tax in order that Government income will be equal to its expenditures.

Therefore no one can deny, first, that the expenditure of $1,500,000,000 for varying construction projects which have already been authorized, and which will be built anyhow some time in the future, would not put many of the 10,000,000 of the unemployed to work?

No one can say that the tax on beer I have outlined is in conflict with either the spirit or the letter of the eighteenth amendment.

Who can say that the tax of 24 cents a gallon, which I have mentioned, will not furnish two and one-half times the amount of money annually needed to pay off the bond issue without any additional burden to our present taxpayers?

And who can say, if this plan is adopted, that it will not deal a deathblow to the gangsters and racketeers who are now getting rich while the Government can not pay its bills?

Here are some additional observations regarding the consequences of legalizing beer apart from those already mentioned:

A respected Harford countian, who has made a success of both farming and canning—at least up to now—recently shipped to a Baltimore grain-brokerage firm his wheat crop, consisting of 717½ bushels of wheat, for which he received a check in the sum of $180.60. However, the following expenses were incurred in producing the crop:

Preparing soil, sowing wheat, and harvesting	$35.00
Seed	60.00
Threshing	55.00
Total	150.00

Here the calculations stopped; there was no charge for depreciation of machinery, taxes, and other normal farm expenses; so, without counting these latter charges, the farmer received approximately 4 cents a bushel for his crop. If all things are considered, it is doubtful if the grower of this wheat received such financial return as would permit him to break even.

Before the Senate Committee on Agriculture in 1917, when the food production act was before the Senate, much testimony was taken which is of interest at this date when the food and commodity conditions are diametrically opposed to those prevailing through war years. During the war the slogan was to save food and commodities; now the problem is how to use them. Dr. Deets Pickett, research secretary of the Board of Temperance, Prohibition, and Public Morals, in the course of the hearing made the following statement:

"In the United States census reports for 1910, volume 8, page 363, the consumption of coal by the brewing industry for the year ended June 30, 1909, was shown to be 2,990,357 tons, or three and one-half times as much as the packers, six times as much as the printers and publishers, nine times as much as the manufacturers of boots and shoes, twenty-five times as much as the manufacturers of men's clothing."

There is widespread unemployment and distress in the coal industry; thousands of mines are closed.

A letter from Mr. Hoover, now President, then, in 1917, Food Administrator, contains the following interesting observation: "* * * the cessation of brewing would effect a saving in grain of approximately 3,150,000 bushels a month * * *" or 37,800,000 bushels a year.

There is more wheat than can be consumed in this country.

Dr. Irving Fisher, of Yale University, president of the National War-Time Prohibition Association, in a statement which was read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by arid Senator Cummins, of Iowa, in 1917, makes the following observations concerning the question of railroad cars and transportation used by the breweries:

TRANSPORTATION REQUIRED BY BREWERIES

	Tons
Raw material, 3,000,000,000 pounds of foodstuffs, equals	1,500,000
Required coal	3,000,000
Product, 60,000,000 barrels	9,000,000
Total on teams and cars	13,500,000

All of which require hauling and over one-half of which require railroad transportation. This requires over 200,000 freight cars during a year, and uses several hundred locomotives constantly, and increases freight congestion.

The railroads are not prosperous, thousands of railroad men are out of employment and that both engines and freight cars are idle.

Doctor Fisher, the eminent dry authority, in 1917, did not stop there, however; he vigorously took up the sugar matter with this poignant comment: "The breweries annually use 64,000,000 pounds."

Newspaper dispatches say it is largely due to sugar difficulties in Cuba that revolution there is imminent.

But Doctor Fisher, in 1917, moves on and deals with the brewery problem with more dynamic statistics. He says: "The breweries of the United States employ 65,000 men, but the total engaged in making, handling, and selling it is over 300,000."

I understand that in the United States about 10,000,000 people are out of employment.

The courts have held and no less an eminent authority than avocatrix, the comely and sparkling Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt, the supreme court of the wine-grape industry, states that wine may be made in the home without legal consequence by using the product turned out by the California grape people. The agents and advertisements inform one that a choice of flavors from sauterne to Riesling can be had. A test shows the ultimate alcoholic horsepower of these precious liquids runs around 15 per cent. However, while arrests of wine makers using the qualified products seldom ever occur, those who deign to make home-brew are not so fortunate and frequently find themselves headed for long vacations in Government hotels at Leavenworth and Atlanta.

In short, while legal to make 15 per cent wine without Government revenue, it is illegal to make 4 per cent beer even with it.

Meanwhile a deficit of approximately two and a half billion dollars impends in the Treasury and a new tax bill levying a billion dollars is to be laid upon the American people.

The last "beer year" showed there was a consumption of the cold amber liquid in these United States of 1,980,000,000 gallons. A tax of 25 cents per gallon would yield an annual Government revenue of approximately $500,000,000. More, if now permitted, it would put coal miners to work digging out those 2,990,257 tons which Mr. Pickett says the breweries annually required; more, it would put in use 200,000 freight cars and several hundred locomotives constantly per year, which Dr. Irving Fisher says were necessary for the transportation needs of the breweries; more, it would use up 64,000,000 pounds of sugar per year, and perhaps lessen the likelihood of civil war in Cuba; and yet more, it would employ 300,000 men who, dry Doctor Fisher says, were used annually in the brewing business; and still more, again, it would pull the Treasury deficit down to a figure where it could be comprehended. But what is more important to my friend from Harford County, who sold his wheat crop for 4 cents a bushel, is that it will require 3,000,000,000 pounds of foodstuffs per year, and, in the very nature of things, return him a higher price for any he may raise in the future.

Far be it from me to argue the moral side of this matter, for that would present the picture, no doubt, in certain quarters, of Bacchus talking with Moses. However, it did seem to me that a wiping out of the Treasury deficit, ending a possible civil war in Cuba, employing several hundred thousands of men now out of work, starting 200,000 freight cars and several hundred locomotives clanking over the rails, and getting my farmer friend more than 4 cents a bushel for his wheat contained some of the elements of godliness.

Every thoughtful person looks ahead to next winter with apprehension. The army of unemployed grows. Business further stagnates. A survey of the country shows much distress. In the State of Mississippi school-teachers have not been paid for a year, and the State government has taken 25 per cent of all the land in that State for nonpayment of taxes. In Chicago school-teachers and other municipal officials are unpaid. Many municipal governments are either laying off employees or not paying them due to lack of income. Banks have been failing. Thousands upon thousands of farms have been sold under mortgage foreclosure and delinquent taxes.

Question: Can we raise sufficient community funds, particularly in our large industrial centers, to properly feed, house, and clothe the unemployed next winter? I hope we can, and, of course, those able will do their best; but States and State governments in many cases may then be unable to assist, while here in the National Capitol we are trying desperately to raise enough money to pay the Government's current bills, and there is no money now in the Treasury which could be loaned to the States, the cities, or the communities. What are we going to do with all these unemployed people next winter?

My measure is, I believe, sound, simple, practical, and helpful. It provides work now for the unemployed. It increases no present taxes. It is calculated to have ramifications helpful to all business enterprises in America. The whole Nation will benefit. The construction program contemplates the building of structures we will build anyhow in the coming years, and which are now or will be needed shortly. It will help to alleviate the distress of next winter. And, if my proposition is not adopted by the Congress, won't we be less prepared to deal with the matter of unemployment successfully? Or, may I ask, who has a better plan to prevent the distressing future prospect?

The issue is clear-cut. Shall the bootlegger or the Government, which needs it, get this money? Shall crime flourish and unemployment exist, or shall crime be put down and unemployment be lessened? Shall we make the product of 2.75 per cent beer available in bottles and sold by the Government or sold illegally by a privileged few racketeers?

Now is the time for action. When the snows of next winter have fallen, it may be too late to deal rationally with a serious situation.

In the interest of all who are out of work and in want, in the hope of assisting their wives and children underfed and underclothed, and in the interest of what I hope will bring again some measure of prosperity to all and relieve the Treasury of some of its deficit, the construction amendment to the revenue bill is offered in the Congress of the United States.

EXCERPTS FROM ADDRESS BY LOUIS BROWNLOW

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD excerpts from the address by Hon. Louis Brownlow, director of Public Administration Clearing House before American Society of Editors at Washington, D. C., April 23, 1932.

There being no objection, the excerpts from the address were ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS

Among the things most commonly said these days in support of the well-nigh universal demand for reduction of governmental costs and reduction of governmental activities is this: "Private business has been forced to make cuts and government must follow suit." Within certain limits I have no particular quarrel with that, but at the very outset I would beg to suggest that private business has cut down when, as, and if the demand for its products, wares, and services has fallen off, and to point out that in many very important respects the demands on government have been tremendously increased by the very force of private business retrenchment.

One, but not the only one, of these demands on government that has increased, is now increasing, and inevitably will continue to increase for at least another 12 months, is for the provision of food and fuel, shelter and clothing, health and morale for some millions of Americans who have no jobs because private business has been forced to cut down.

For instance, in Chicago, in January of this year, it was calculated that more than one-third of the workers ordinarily employed were out of jobs, that the wage loss due to this fact was $2,000,000 a day, and that the expenditure for food and fuel for the jobless was $100,000 a day. In other words, a cut down in private business of $20 was producing an increase in public expenditure of $1. Since January the wage loss has increased, while the number of persons whose needs must be met, if at all, from the public treasury or from private philanthropy has increased also, but more rapidly as the resources of savings, of relatives, of neighbors, and of credit have been exhausted.

This single illustration of the increasing demand upon government is merely an example of what is going on in practically every community in the country, the figures varying with the varying effects of the economic crisis as determined by local conditions. It is a trend that further confuses and complicates the consideration of what is always, in our country, a confused and complex relation of private business to public business, of private philanthropy to public welfare, and, on the public side, the relations of the people and the taxpayers to their stratified governmental structure, local, State and Federal.

The problem is made more difficult because of its huge proportions. Measured in terms of the number of persons directly affected, it is the greatest calamity that has befallen the American people; in scope and complexity nothing to compare with it has so upset the industrial world order since the industrial revolution began; considered solely as a problem of succor for the suffering, it is of a size tremendously larger than ever before has been known in the United States. Is it any wonder that the American people as represented by their governmental organizations, by their philanthropic agencies, by their business institutions, by their newspapers, have been puzzled, confounded, and disturbed?

At the same time, perhaps the most disturbing factor in the entire situation is that the facts are not fully known; indeed, the existence of the problem is scarcely recognized in anything like its true and menacing aspect, by many of the very persons and institutions upon whom the solution must depend.

From the point of view of the newspaper, and of the public as well, this inadequate knowledge is in large part due to the lack of that sudden dramatic incidence that makes news.

Let us go back a little more than 60 years for another illustration—and again to Chicago. In October, 1871, Chicago had 300,000 people instead of 3,000,000. It was then that the widow O'Leary's cow kicked over the lantern and started the great conflagration that constituted one of the major calamities of modern times. For two days the flames consumed their fodder and left a city prostrate; a quarter of a thousand dead, a hundred thousand homeless, they and another hundred thousand as well without food, and $200,000,000 worth of property destroyed.

It was sudden. It was dramatic. It was news. Let me quote from the last edition of the Encyclopedia Britannica: "A vast system of relief was organized and received generous aid from all parts of the world. The money contributions from the United States and abroad were $4,996,782; of this, foreign countries contributed nearly $1,000,000 (England half of this). These funds, which were over and above gifts of food, clothing, and supplies, were made to last till the close of 1876. Out of them temporary homes were provided for nearly 40,000 people; barracks and better houses were erected; workmen were supplied with tools and women with sewing machines; the sick were cared for, the dead buried; and the poorer classes of Chicago were probably never so comfortable as during the first two or three years after the fire." That is the end of the quotation. After two generations we still think of the Chicago fire as a major calamity.

Sixty years later, in October, 1931, last October, Chicago had more than ten times as many people. Chicago's problem of the relief of the unemployed had begun to give extraordinary concern to those whose business it was to be concerned with such things as early as 1928, and that concern had increased rapidly through 1929.

In April, 1930, the jobless numbered 160,000. Then was set up the governor's commission on unemployment and a fund of $5,000,000 was raised from contributions from Chicago people. It was believed to be enough to last from October, 1930, to October, 1931. This was given over and above the amounts that were being given by the county, by private family-welfare agencies, and by the private person-to-person contacts with the needy. Did it last? No. On July 18, 1931, that fund was exhausted. In October, 1931, a new campaign for funds was started. This time the goal was set at $8,800,000, to last a year, but burdened already with the deficits incurred since mid-July. The people of Chicago were generous. They subscribed $10,500,000, nearly two millions more than the goal of the campaign. But by mid-December half of that money was gone. Local governments were handicapped by serious fiscal difficulties and Chicago turned to the State government. A fund of $18,000,000 was provided by the legislature in the early part of 1932—to last through the year. This week the legislature at Springfield was told that Chicago must have another $20,000,000 to see it through the year.

To-day in Chicago about 600,000 persons, twice as many as lived in the city at the time of the great fire, eat only the bitter bread of public charity. Five millions of dollars forthcoming from the whole world for the fire disaster was made to last five years. Sixty years later Chicago can scarcely make $5,000,000 last 60 days. And are there new houses for the poor? New tools for workmen? New sewing machines for the women? None. Are the poorer classes more comfortable? No one who knows how a family lives on the diminishing dole that a financially embarrassed Government supports from a tax-striking public would dare to say so.

Yet the creeping paralysis of this calamity of 1931 was not sudden, however numerous the victims it engulfed. It was not dramatic, however tragic to its hundreds of thousands of doomed. It was not news, in the sense that the great fire was news. It was and is a depressing and a deplorable fact, but it is not local to Chicago. There is the same tale to tell in hundreds of American cities.

From the beginning of American life, in the times of the Colonies the care of the destitute was assumed to be the obligation of the local unit of government until in a relatively few of the larger cities toward the very end of the nineteenth century it was taken over in part, but only in part, by private charitable agencies. Then there grew up in some of our more important urban centers a custom of devolving relief given in the homes of needy families upon private agencies, but usually retaining as a public duty the care of the destitute in institutions. In no two cities, in no two counties, in no two communities in the United States was the pattern of the division of responsibility precisely the same in organization, intent, or result.

Judging from the best figures that I have been able to find, it is unlikely that at any time in American history more than half of the money expended for poor relief was furnished by private agencies. Reliable statistics show that during the first two years of the present emergency 70 cents out of every dollar given for relief has come from public treasuries and only 30 cents from the generous private giver.

Last fall and winter, for the first time since the World War, the campaigns of the community chests were coordinated throughout the Nation and much publicity was given to the need for generous giving to meet the requirements of the unemployment situation.

Two hundred and ninety chests raised, if we include the estimated goals of a few still under way, for 1932 purposes a total of $100,000,000—a huge sum of money to be given for private philanthropy in times like these, and it came from the pockets of all classes of the people of these nearly 300 communities. But of this amount only 35 per cent, according to Mr. Allen T. Burns, executive director of the National Association of Community Chests and Councils, was intended to be spent for home relief of families. The other 65 per cent, says Mr. Burns, goes to such indispensable services as hospitals, visiting nursing, child welfare, crime prevention, and provision against the misuse of the immensely increased leisure time. Who shall say to Mr. Burns that the demands for the services represented by this 65 per cent have decreased? Not I.

That means that the campaign last fall and winter, with a few cities not coming in until this spring, raised by private subscription in the greatest national campaign for private unemployment relief ever undertaken a total of $35,000,000 in a coast-to-coast effort with the blessing of the President's organization and with the aid of the press and the radio and all the arts of publicity.

Was it enough? The State of New York alone will spend more than that in 1932 for this purpose. I do not know what the total will be, or can be, but I do know that public treasuries, local and State, will spend in 1932 much more than twice the total amount expended by private agencies.

Here intrudes another perplexing feature of the problem. What is paid out of public treasuries must come in from public taxation or from public borrowing which must eventually be repaid from taxes.

The burden of providing the bare necessities of life for the destitute lies as a legal obligation upon the local governmental unit in by far the greater part of the United States. Sometimes the township, sometimes the county, sometimes the city, has that duty to perform. Most of these governmental units derive most of their revenues from the general property tax, which in turn is levied and collected mostly upon real property.

What happens when a home owner no longer with an income exhausts his savings and is forced to turn for food to the public relief agencies? Does he pay his taxes?

What happens when a tenant no longer has an income, and turns to the public relief agency for food and for money to pay his rent?

What happens to the landlord when his tenants no longer can pay their rent?

In some places, no relief legally can be given to a family that has an equity, no matter how slender, in a home. So the family is forced to give up its home in order that it may find food. In some cities the relief funds do pay rents. If the funds are public that amounts to the city paying taxes to itself. In other cities the relief funds pay no rents. Sometimes the landlord says he can not evict the tenant, there is no other tenant in sight and the building will be sacked by vandals or torn down for fuel if it is left unoccupied. So the landlord has no income from which to pay taxes. In some instances landlords who are still the owners of tenant-occupied houses have themselves been forced to come to the city relief agency for the food that they no longer can buy.

Translated into the technical jargon of governments this means tax delinquencies. With mounting tax delinquencies local governments find it more difficult to borrow the money that they need to make up for the taxes they can not collect, and consequently more and more difficult to meet the need for unemployment relief.

It may be said that the local governments should cut out other expenditures to meet this situation. In many places, willingly or not, it is being done, but still this has not met the requirements of the major calamity of which I am talking.

Then there is recourse to the State governments. Some of them, too, rely mainly upon the general property tax. Others have income taxes. New York doubled its income tax to meet the specific requirements of this problem for a year and in six months had to propose a bond issue in order to double the provision of money. Other States have diverted gasoline taxes. Others have invented or are considering the invention of new taxes.

But with all this the problem is not solved. It is not even in better case than it was last winter. It is worse now than it has ever been. Every student of it agrees that it will be much greater in size and scope next winter than it is now.

From some 40 cities, according to reports compiled by the Survey and by Business Week and quoted in the New York Times, the crisis of the exhaustion of local and of State resources for relief will come this spring and early summer; in some places at the end of April; in others in May; in many in June. In fact, it appears that few, if any, of the larger cities involved are financed for their needs beyond August.

The seasonal upturn in employment is disappointingly small. The seasonal drop in demands for relief is almost imperceptible. Experts in the field are agreed that even if employment conditions were to begin now to improve that the exhaustion of savings and other factors will inevitably produce a greater number of persons who must be fed next winter than we had last winter.

There was, of course, the appeal to the Federal Government. It was not a unanimous appeal; and although I have seldom read anything more significant or impressive than the hearings before the Senate committee on the proposals for Federal aid to the States, Congress did not see fit to heed. It may be doubted if it saw fit to read.

Nothing is settled with respect to this problem. It is difficult to find all the facts about it. There are profound and utterly sincere differences of opinion about methods of procedure in dealing with it.

I have my own opinion, but suppressing that I appeal to the editors of the country that they assign their very best men to an examination of the facts, and that without prejudice or preconception; that they give to the facts so discovered as complete and as wide publicity as the delicate conditions of the country will permit; that it base upon these facts fairly faced and fully considered its opinion as to what ought to be done.

With the cause or with the cure, or with my notions of the cause or the cure, I have not dealt. I am content only if I am permitted to say that in my opinion the manner in which we deal with the crisis that we shall face this summer when funds are exhausted, the manner in which we shall make provision for the effects of this calamity next winter, may determine whether or not hungry Americans who can not find the work they desire above all charity will be fed; may determine whether or not if too much ahunger they will continue to suffer mutely or whether they will rebel against an order which has failed to find them food.

In my opinion, this is a profound social problem that can not be solved by reference to apparently inflexible divisions of the duties of government among its several levels as ordained in the late eighteenth century.

It will be hard in the midst of a presidential campaign to see these new things clearly and without the confusion caused by party politics. But if we are to avoid the spread of this disaster from the social to the political field, I am persuaded that we all of us must make the effort to meet this situation calmly, coolly, and courageously.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 27, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, APRIL 26, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord God, we pray to Thee, to whom we owe our first, our last, and our eternal allegiance. May nothing stand between us and our obedience to Thy holy will. Let Thy sympathy make us social, Thy love make us charitable, and Thy grace make us cheerful. So order our lives that they will respond to service and sacrifice. Endow us with the mind that sees the heights and with the soul that sounds the depths, and in all things keep us in harmony with Thy holy purpose. Spare our country from that poverty which kills the spirit that the physical nature may be preserved.

Bless us with that spiritual adventure through which we may see the real wealth of life. In the name of Jesus, our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 231. An act to grant certain lands to the State of Colorado for the benefit of the Colorado School of Mines;

H. R. 1231. An act for the relief of Grina Bros.;

H. R. 1768. An act for the relief of Alvina Hollis;

H. R. 4724. An act to confer to certain persons who served in the Quartermaster Corps or under the jurisdiction of the Quartermaster General during the war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition the benefits of hospitalization and the privileges of the soldiers' homes;

H. R. 4752. An act for the establishment of the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park;

H. R. 5484. An act extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1877 (19 Stat. 377), and acts amendatory thereof, to ceded lands of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation;

H. R. 5603. An act to authorize the conveyance by the United States to the State of Minnesota of lot 4, section 18, township 131 north, range 29 west, in the county of Morrison, Minn.;

H. R. 8084. An act for the protection of the northern Pacific halibut fishery;

H. R. 8914. An act to accept the grant by the State of Montana of concurrent police jurisdiction over the rights of way of the Blackfeet Highway, and over the rights of way of its connections with the Glacier National Park road system on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation in the State of Montana;

H. R. 9598. An act to authorize expenditures for the enforcement of the contract-labor provisions of the immigration law; and

H. R. 10495. An act amending an act of Congress approved February 28, 1919 (40 Stat. L. 1206), granting the city of San Diego certain lands in the Cleveland National Forest and the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation for dam and reservoir purposes for the conservation of water, and for other purposes, so as to include additional lands.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1029. An act for the relief of Basil N. Henry; and

H. R. 1770. An act for the relief of Senelma Wirkkula, also known as Selma Wirkkula; Alice Marie Wirkkula; and Bernice Elaine Wirkkula.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 332. An act for the relief of Samson Davis;

S. 570. An act to exempt from taxation certain property used by the National Society of the Colonial Dames of America, in the District of Columbia;

S. 669. An act for the relief of Chester J. Dick;

S. 1335. An act to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the district of New Jersey;

S. 1562. An act for the relief of William S. Cook;

S. 2409. An act to amend Title II of the Federal farm loan act in regard to Federal intermediate credit banks, and for other purposes;

S. 2654. An act to allow credit in connection with homestead entries to widows of persons who served in certain Indian wars;

S. 3472. An act to amend the act of Congress approved June 26, 1912, entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes";

S. 3477. An act for the relief of the Playa de Flor Land & Improvement Co.;

S. 3577. An act for the relief of Rolando B. Moffett;

S. 3852. An act to amend section 2288 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, with respect to the taking for highway purposes of lands entered upon under the homestead or preemption laws;

S. 3864. An act authorizing expenditures from Colorado River tribal funds for reimbursible loans;

S. 3911. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close Quintana Place, between Seventh Street and Seventh Place NW.;

S. 3929. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close certain alleys and to set aside land owned by the District of Columbia for alley purposes;

S. 3953. An act to amend the act approved February 7, 1927, entitled "An act to promote the mining of potash on the public domain";

S. 4029. An act to restore homestead rights in certain cases;

S. 4106. An act to provide for the closing of certain streets and alleys in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes;

S. 4148. An act to permit the United States to be made a party defendant in certain cases;

S. 4165. An act to remove existing discriminations incident to certain land grants and to subject them to the same conditions that govern other land grants of their class;

S. 4190. An act for the relief of Thomas E. Reed;

S. 4193. An act to authorize the issuance of bonds by the St. Thomas Harbor Board, Virgin Islands, for the acquisition or construction of a graving or dry dock;

S. 4416. An act to provide for the transfer of certain school lands in North Dakota to the International Peace Garden (Inc.);

S. J. Res. 36. Joint resolution to change the name of the island of "Porto Rico" to "Puerto Rico"; and

S. J. Res. 82. Joint resolution authorizing an appropriation for the expenses of the sixteenth session of the International Geological Congress to be held in the United States in 1933.

STREET IMPROVEMENTS IN JUNEAU, ALASKA

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas (when the Committee on the Territories was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 5052) to authorize the incorporated town of Juneau, Alaska, to use the funds arising from the sale of bonds in pursuance to the act of Congress of February 11, 1925, for the purpose either of improving the sewerage system of said town or of constructing permanent streets in said town.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Juneau, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to use the funds arising from the sale of bonds issued in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress of February 11, 1925, for the purpose either of improving the sewerage system of said town or of constructing permanent streets in said town.

SEC. 2. That the common council of said town is hereby authorized to direct the amount, if any, of the funds arising from said bonds that shall be used for either or both of said purposes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman make some brief explanation of the purpose of the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. This is a request on the part of the citizens of Juneau, Alaska. In 1925 Congress passed an act permitting this city to vote $60,000 worth of bonds, the money received from the sale of the bonds to be spent on an electric-light plant. Under this act the town council had the privilege of issuing $10,000 worth of bonds for sewer purposes. This bill proposes to give the city of Juneau, Alaska, the privilege of spending $30,000 on streets instead of sewers.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ISSUANCE OF MUNICIPAL BONDS OF PETERSBURG, ALASKA

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6487) to authorize the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000 for the purpose of improving and enlarging the capacity of the municipal light and power plant, and the improvement of the water and sewer systems, and for the purpose of retiring or purchasing bonds heretofore issued by the town of Petersburg.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, is hereby authorized and empowered to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000, to be used for the following purposes, namely: The sum of $40,000 for necessary improvements to the municipal electric light and power plant, owned by the town of Petersburg, Alaska, and the transmission lines and distribution system and for the purpose of doubling the capacity of said electric light and power plant; the sum of $25,000 for necessary improvements to the water system and water supply and sewer system of the town of Petersburg, Alaska, and the distribution systems thereof; and the sum of $35,000 to be used to purchase or retire outstanding bonds of the said town of Petersburg, Alaska, which bear interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum.

SEC. 2. That before such bonds shall be issued a special election shall be ordered by the Common Council of the Town of Petersburg, Alaska, and held in the manner pursuant to law after legal notice thereof, at which election the question of the issuance of said bonds shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said twon of Petersburg, whose names appear on the last assessment roll or tax roll of said town for the purposes of municipal taxation. Not less than 30 days' notice of such election shall be given in a newspaper printed and published in said town, and of general circulation, before the date fixed for such election.

SEC. 3. That said election shall be conducted in all respects in accordance with existing statutes enacted by Congress and the Legislature of the Territory of Alaska, and the canvass of the returns of said election shall be as far as possible and practicable in accordince with the requirement of existing laws governing general or special elections in said municipality. Said bonds shall be issued only upon condition that a majority of the votes cast at such election in said town shall be in favor of the issuance of such bonds.

SEC. 4. That the bonds above specified, when authorized to be issued as hereinbefore provided, shall bear interest at a rate to be fixed by the Common Council of the City of Petersburg, Alaska, before the issuance of such bonds, and which said interest shall not exceed 6 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, and the same shall not be sold for less than their par value with accrued interest, and they shall be in denominations not exceeding $1,000 each, the principal to be due in 25 years from the date thereof: Provided, That the Common Council of the Town of Petersburg may reserve the right to pay off said bonds or any portion thereof in numerical order at the rate of not to exceed $15,000 thereof per annum from and after the expiration of five years from the date of issuance of such bonds as shown on the face thereof. The principal and interest shall be payable in lawful money of the United States of America at the office of the town treasurer of the town of Petersburg, Alaska, or at such bank or banks or such place or places as may be designated by the Common Council of the Town of Petersburg, Alaska, such place or places of payment to be designated and set forth in each of the respective bonds issued: Provided further, That each of such bonds shall bear the written signature of the mayor and clerk of the town of Petersburg, Alaska, at the time of their issuance, and there shall be impressed thereon the official seal of said town.

SEC. 5. That no part of the funds arising from the sale of said bonds shall be used for any purpose other than that specified in this act, and such bonds shall be sold only when and in such amounts as the common council shall direct, and the proceeds thereof shall be dispensed for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned and under the orders and directions of the said common council from time to time as the same may be required for said purposes hereinabove set forth.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand from a reading of the report that one of the purposes sought is to retire some of the present bonds which are paying 7 per cent and secure the money at 6 per cent.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In view of the present condition of the money market as far as bonds and securities are concerned, does the gentleman think a little town of this kind, remote from the United States, will be able to obtain the money at 6 per cent?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. My information is that the individuals of this town will buy these bonds. That is the information I have. None of these bonds will be placed on the market.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I read the report I had some doubt as to whether they would be able to secure the money at 6 per cent.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. I am assured that all of these bonds will be bought by individuals living in this town.

Mr. STAFFORD. If they are going to be taken by the people of the town, who know local financial conditions, it may be they will have no difficulty in securing the loan.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MAINTENANCE OF GOVERNMENT WHARF AT JUNEAU, ALASKA

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 6713) for estimates necessary for the proper maintenance of the Government wharf at Juneau, Alaska.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is authorized to submit for the consideration of Congress such estimates as are in his judgment necessary for the proper maintenance of the Government wharf at Juneau, Alaska, constructed under authority contained in Public Resolution No. 33, Sixty-ninth Congress, approved May 28, 1926.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman explain—which the report does not—to what extent this bill affects the former authorization as embodied in the act of May 20, 1926?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that when this wharf was constructed, to be used by the Government, there was no department designated for the maintenance of the wharf. The time will soon arrive when it will be necessary that it be maintained. All this bill asks is authority for the Secretary of War to submit this in his budget in order to take care of the wharf in case it needs repairing.

Mr. STAFFORD. It designates the proper official to maintain the wharf. I have no objection to the bill.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEPERS IN HAWAII

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) to authorize the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service to make a survey as to the existing facilities for the protection of the public health in the care and treatment of leprous persons in the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this joint resolution is of sufficient importance to require some consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361), with Mr. COOPER of Tennessee in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The first reading of the joint resolution was dispensed with.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS], who prepared the report, to explain the joint resolution.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Chairman, this joint resolution is the outcome or the result of the consideration of the bill that was introduced by the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. HOUSTON] concerning payments by the United States to the Territory for the maintenance of leprous patients in the islands.

At the beginning it was proposed that we pay the same per capita cost for the maintenance of lepers in the islands as at Carville in the United States. Of course, we were not taking on any additional appropriations and we wanted to go along in accordance with our professed faith in economy, and it was finally suggested by the Public Health Service that a joint resolution be submitted for the purpose of studying the conditions in the islands.

This joint resolution was prepared, in whole or at least in part, by the Public Health Service. They now have stationed in the islands sufficient employees to make this survey without any further cost.

In the preparation of this report they will contact the offices of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture, so that when their survey is completed they can make certain recommendations to the Congress, to which they are directed to report on the opening day of the next session, as to whether or not the Public Health Service believes we should undertake to provide the same care for leprous patients in the islands that we do here in the United States. The joint resolution requires absolutely no appropriation, and the matter will be entirely up to the next session of Congress with respect to the action to be taken after the survey is made.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. How far does this change the present policy?

Mr. PARSONS. It does not change it at all. Doctor Cumming, who is in charge of the Public Health Service, has had a great deal of experience in the islands and recommends this action.

Mr. TILSON. I had supposed that the real purpose of the joint resolution was to change our policy in regard to the care of lepers.

Mr. PARSONS. The joint resolution simply calls for an investigation or survey, and it is up to the Congress to act on any further recommendations.

Mr. TILSON. But the joint resolution is offered with the purpose in view of making changes, provided they are recommended.

Mr. PARSONS. Yes; if they are recommended.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the joint resolution carry any additional appropriations?

Mr. PARSONS. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. But it looks forward to the National Government assuming a burden now borne by the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARSONS. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The situation is a very interesting one. As the report shows, Public Act 299 of the Sixty-fourth Congress provided for a national leprosarium for all such afflicted persons in the United States, its Territories, and so forth. The Territory of Hawaii is a part of the United States. They have their own leper colony. The Public Health Service of the United States has an examining station in the city of Honolulu, and, as a matter of fact, I presume under existing law every person afflicted with leprosy could move, at United States Government expense, from Honolulu to the leprosarium in Louisiana now. The expense of travel, of course, would be very great.

Mr. STAFFORD. It was never contemplated to have the leprosarium in Louisiana take care of patients coming from Hawaii. Hawaii is a separate institution, where leprosy was more general than in any other part of the country.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the law exempts them, then I am wrong in my assumption, but I have the law here quoted in the report. The lepers in the Hawaiian Islands are cared for by the people of the Territory, except for the public-health examining station in the city of Honolulu, and a proposal has come from the islands asking for relief. The proposal came in the form of a resolution passed by the Territorial legislature, which was referred to the Committee on the Territories; and this bill authorizes an inquiry by certain services, particularly the Public Health Service, as to what may be done. As a member of the committee, and as a member of the subcommittee on this particular joint resolution, I did not see any other way to work it out than to authorize the investigation, which, I assume, will be conducted by the proper Federal officials without any extra expense. Future steps will depend on the report to be made by these officials.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii and Mr. GREEN rose.

Mr. PARSONS. I shall now yield to the Delegate from Hawaii, who is in better position to know the conditions and will be able to answer any questions that may be asked.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. HOUSTON].

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, this joint resolution is felt to be necessary by reason of the situation in Hawaii. The basic act with respect to the treatment of lepers in the United States provides that they shall be taken care of by the Federal Government. It is quoted at the bottom of the first page of the report in which the word "Territories" follows the word "States":

> The existing authority for Federal care of patients afflicted with leprosy is based upon Public Act 299 of the Sixty-fourth Congress which reads as follows:
>
> "SEC. 2. That there shall be received into said home, under regulations prepared by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, any person afflicted with leprosy who presents himself or herself for care, detention, and treatment, or who may be apprehended under authority of the United States quarantine acts, or any person afflicted with leprosy duly consigned to said home by the proper health authorities of any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service is authorized, upon request of said authorities, to send for any person afflicted with leprosy within their respective jurisdictions, and to convey said person to such home for detention and treatment, and when the transportation of any such person is undertaken for the protection of the public health, the expense of such removal shall be paid from funds set aside for the maintenance of said home."

It is a fact that at the institution at Carville there is not at the present time enough room to take care of patients from Hawaii. Applications in due form have been made to the Secretary of the Treasury for the receipt of Hawaiian patients, but we have been answered that there was not room available for accommodation at Carville. The following correspondence was exchanged between the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii and the Public Health Service:

> DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
> OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
> Washington, D. C., December 7, 1931.
>
> Dr. HUGH S. CUMMING,
> Surgeon General United States Public Health Service,
> Washington, D. C.
>
> (Through the honorable the Secretary of the Interior.)
>
> DEAR DOCTOR CUMMING: We have, as you know, approximately 700 leprous patients in the Territory of Hawaii.
>
> I beg to inquire as to how many of these patients you could receive and care for at the United States marine hospital at Carville, La., under authority of the act of Congress approved February 3, 1917 (39 Stat. 872)?
>
> Your early reply will be very much appreciated.
>
> Respectfully yours,
>
> LAWRENCE M. JUDD,
> Governor of Hawaii.

> HONOLULU, December 22, 1931.
>
> Delegate HOUSTON:
>
> Following is a letter addressed to me, dated December 10, 1931, from Surgeon General Cumming of Public Health: "I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 17, 1931, making inquiry as to whether any portion of the 700 leprous patients in the Territory of Hawaii could be received and cared for at the United States Marine Hospital, Carville, La., under authority of the act of Congress approved February 3, 1917 (31 Stat. 872). In reply I regret to state that the facilities at Carville are sufficient only for leprous patients from the continental United States and Alaska. The rated capacity of the institution is 372 beds, and there are at the present 361 leprous patients under treatment there. Applicants for additional admissions to Carville have been received and I anticipate that in a short time the institution will be filled to capacity. The Public Health Service building plan includes provision for an additional hospital building at Carville, for which, however, the appropriations have not yet been made. This building is designed not so much to increase the capacity of the institution as to improve the facilities, especially for the care of the insane and criminal cases, and would not, therefore, provide the necessary facilities to admit patients from Hawaii; and if the Public Health Service were to assume the responsibility for the care of these patients it would be necessary to provide buildings and for their equipment and operation wherever located.

"Respectfully,

"H. S. CUMMING,
"Surgeon General."

Hope this will be helpful in securing Federal assistance for the Territory.

JUDD, Governor.

When the organic act for the Territory of Hawaii was originally passed about 32 years ago, a commission that was sent down there to investigate the situation and reported with respect to this matter that the Federal Government could do no better than to share in the expense then being incurred and carried on by the Republic of Hawaii for the care of lepers.

In 1898, in the Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, Senate Document No. 16, page 118, which is a report of the commissioners to arrange for the organic act, this sentence is used.

The Federal Government could not do better, either in point of economy or in point of effectiveness, at least so long as present conditions continue, than to permit this disease to be controlled through the local officers and existing machinery. But it would seem to be only just that the Federal Government should share in the expense.

In the original bill which I introduced, H. R. 306, it asked that the Federal Government, as in the case of hospitalization of veterans, pay to the Territory a per diem that would in a measure reimburse the Territory for expenses of this hospitalization. But inasmuch as that involved a large sum, and because of the situation which required economy this year, it was felt that, although there was merit in the matter, a resolution to provide for a survey and to recommend legislation would be better under the circumstances.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I read a statement some time ago which interested me very much with reference to the possibility of the Public Health Service having made considerable advance in the treatment of lepers by some new method. Can the gentleman give us any information whether medical research is making any practical advance in the elimination of the disease or in the cure for it?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. There has not been found any specific cure. Chaulmoogra oil has been used, but appears not to be a specific. Like tuberculosis, by proper treatment and care, which involves dietary treatment, the disease may be arrested. I am informed that at Carville, since its establishment in 1917, they have released 75 patients as being without menace to the public health.

Mr. BANKHEAD. They have made such progress that they have arrested the disease to such an extent that it is noncommunicable?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Yes; it depends on when the treatment begins. The incubation period is said to average about seven years; it may be 2 years or it may be 20 years after inoculation before the disease develops to a point where it shows.

Mr. GIBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. I yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. GIBSON. This joint resolution simply provides for securing information to lay before the Congress for intelligent action on the subject?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. GIBSON. No appropriation is asked for at the present time?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. None. It may develop after the investigation that it may be well for the Federal Government to take over in toto the receiving station, or it may be that the better plan for the Federal Government, as it does with reference to the hospitalization of war veterans in private hospitals, is to pay over a per diem for the patients cared for by the Territory.

Mr. GIBSON. And this has the approval of the Department of the Interior?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Yes.

Mr. GIBSON. It was drafted by the department and sent here?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. It was drafted by the Public Health Service and has the approval of the department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any information as to whether the home in Molokai is peopled by anybody except persons resident of Hawaii?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. As a rule no one but residents of Hawaii may be received. They are persons, as a rule, who do not respond to treatment. They stay at the receiving hospital as long as they respond to treatment. If they no longer respond to treatment, then they are sent over to the other settlement on the island of Molokai.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is generally understood as the established policy of the Government that the States shall take care of their insane and other afflicted persons as a State burden. However, some years back we did recognize, in establishing the leprosarium at Carrville, La., that the disease is of that character and cases are so few and the treatment necessarily so specific that it would be better to undertake that as a national problem, and, accordingly, we lifted from the burden of the States, because of that condition, the obligation of taking care of these particularly unfortunate persons. But Hawaii is a rule unto itself. It had more cases of leprosy than were general throughout the country. If the same conditions had applied to our States here and they were as prevalent as in Hawaii, we would very likely have required each State to maintain its own separate hospital for the treatment of leprosy. I understand the purpose of the gentleman is to lift this proper load from the Territory of Hawaii and place it upon the National Government.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. The basic law I pointed out to the gentleman from Wisconsin is that this is a function of the Federal Government. As a matter of fact, we had taken the burden and had assumed the burden before the Federal Government went into this matter; but may I point out to the gentleman that there are in the neighborhood of 14,000 troops in the island and about 4,500 men in the naval service. Those men after doing service there are distributed back to their homes on the mainland. We may never know, because we do not know how leprosy is transmitted, about the condition of those men. There is very little information of a scientific nature which is available. Therefore, because of that possible distribution from this focus, it is all the more necessary, as in all communicable diseases, that the Federal Government should interest itself in the matter. May I further point out to the gentleman that besides the institution at Carrville the Federal Government specifically takes care of the lepers in the island of Guam. The other day we passed the naval appropriation bill, in which an appropriation of $35,000 was carried for the little establishment on the island of Guam. That indicates that it is the established policy of the Government to take care of this situation, and it may be better done by the Federal Government than by an individual agency.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has referred, as a justification for lifting the load from the Territory of Hawaii and imposing it upon the National Government, to the fact that we have a large number of troops there that possibly may be affected. Are there many instances, and if so, how many, where our troops by reason of their domicile on the island of Oahu have been afflicted with leprosy?

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. I am not in a position to say that, but I call the gentleman's attention to the statement of Gen. Fox Connor, who was the commanding general of the Hawaii Department, to be found in the hearings, in which he states that it is very necessary that this matter should be gone into by the Federal Government, because of that particular situation.

The commanding general of the Army in the Hawaiian Department in 1930 wrote as follows:

The control of leprosy in this Territory is manifestly a matter of great moment to the people of the United States. It is also of particular concern to the Army in view of the constant presence in this department of some 15,000 officers and men of the Regular Army. Conditions here are extremely favorable to a comprehensive epidemiological study of this disease. However, the same conditions render its continued presence a menace to the community, including the personnel of the Army whose duty enforces residence in the Territory.

The following is the most recent resolution introduced in the Territorial legislature on this subject:

Joint Resolution No. 1

Joint resolution reaffirming joint resolution No. 8 of the sixteenth regular session of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, requesting the Congress of the United States of America to provide financial assistance to the Territory of Hawaii for the segregation, care, maintenance, and treatment therein of persons afflicted or suspected of being afflicted with leprosy

Whereas there was adopted by the sixteenth regular session of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii Joint Resolution No. 8 requesting the Congress of the United States of America to provide financial assistance to the Territory of Hawaii for the segregation, care, maintenance, and treatment therein of persons afflicted or suspected of being afflicted with leprosy; and

Whereas there has been introduced in said Congress H. R. 306, designed to afford the relief sought in said Joint Resolution No. 8; and

Whereas said H. R. 306 has not as yet been favorably acted upon by the Congress; and

Whereas the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii has subsequently been advised by letter from the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service that, despite the obligation imposed by the act of Congress of February 3, 1917 (39 Stat. L. 872), it is impossible to receive and care for at the United States Marine Hospital at Carville, La., any leprous patients from the Territory of Hawaii, due to lack of present accommodations thereat; and

Whereas since annexation Hawaii has spent over $7,500,000 in caring for its leprous patients; and

Whereas the Hawaiian Commission appointed in pursuance of the "Joint resolution to provide for annexing the Hawaiian Islands to the United States" reported, as printed in Document 16 of the Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, as part of a message from the President of the United States that "the Federal Government could do no better, either in point of economy or in point of effectiveness, at least so long as present conditions continue, than to permit this disease to be controlled by the local officers and the existing machinery; but it would seem to be only just that the Federal Government should share in the expense"; and

Whereas in view of all these facts and in all fairness and justice to the Territory of Hawaii the Federal Government should extend its financial aid to the Territory in its endeavor to cope with this problem: Now therefore

Be it enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, That Joint Resolution No. 8 of the sixteenth regular session of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii be, and it hereby is, reaffirmed, and the Congress of the United States of America is hereby urgently requested to take favorable action upon H. R. 306, now pending before said Congress, or on some similar bill directed toward the same result.

Extensive hearings on the matter were held on the original bill introduced—H. R. 306—and the published record is dated February 5 and 15, 1932.

It has been said that this should be a State matter. May I not therefore point out that Hawaii unfortunately has not yet reached that exalted sovereign position. We would like nothing better than to be a State. A resolution asking to be allowed to form a State convention has been adopted by the legislature, and we look hopefully to the time when there will be unanimity of opinion. If ever the argument as to State rights was not applicable, it is in the case of a Territory. Since the Federal Congress has full authority, and since it has established the principle of Federal control of this disease, it stands to reason that it should take steps to enforce the principle in a Territory.

The Territory has unflinchingly stood the charge up to the present, and has spent since annexation nearly $8,000,000 for this work.

I wish to express my appreciation for the very considerate and sympathetic action of the committee and the individual Members in this matter. They may well rely upon the cooperation of Hawaii.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I believe the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. HOUSTON] has well explained the purposes of the bill. I think the people of Hawaii have made considerable progress in the treatment and control of leprosy; also progress has been made by the Government at Carville, La. Several questions confronted the committee. Among those is whether or not the property now held by Hawaii as a leprosarium should be transferred to the Government of the United States in the event the Government should undertake to cooperate, and if so, at what price. Another question was whether or not we should contribute funds from the Federal Government to each patient. All of these questions confronted the committee. However, there was general feeling in the committee that the Federal Government should lend the same assistance to the citizens of the Territory of Hawaii as is given to the citizens of the States in this matter. It seems to me a very reasonable conclusion that a further study of the question should be made with the ultimate hope that Federal cooperation should be accorded, not only financial but through the medical authorities, to the end that the advances of the chaulmoogra treatment, or other treatment, may be carried on to further cure and success. I trust the bill will pass; it does not carry any appropriation but provides for a further study of the matter. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the study of leprosy is interesting, and it will pay the Members to read the hearings held in connection with this bill. I take these few minutes to pay a compliment to the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. HOUSTON] for his care and effort in presenting to the Committee on the Territories fairly and efficiently all matters pertaining to the Territory whose people send him to Congress as their Delegate. I think he is a worthy representative of that island, which has so many problems peculiar to itself. In addition to the extraordinary problems, I might add the observation, based on long-time membership with the Territories Committee, that both Alaska and Hawaii are poorly treated as stepchildren of Uncle Sam, in spite of all that the ever-changing membership of the committee can do to have these outlying Territories better treated. The leprosy situation is a case in point.

Read Public Act 299 of the Sixty-fourth Congress, and you will see that Hawaii can claim the same Federal care and treatment of its unfortunate lepers that every leprous person in continental United States is given. But Hawaii pays its own leprosy bill, which since annexation has amounted to more than $7,600,000. Since 1915 or 1916 the United States has paid the bill for the care of lepers in continental United States, and Hawaii has the right to call for similar treatment. This bill shows, however, how Federal expenses climb. We took over from the States the Federal care and treatment of lepers because even those States, except Louisiana, which wanted to care for them, could not find any community willing to accept a leper hospital. Now the whole bill for care is on the United States, and Hawaii under the law has a right to cut in.

The work of the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. HOUSTON] is much more varied and very much more difficult than many imagine.

The chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WILLIAMS], is willing and anxious to do his full part for fair and proper legislation for both Hawaii and Alaska. He is handicapped because laws for continental United States seldom fit Hawaiian and Alaskan situations. The chairman made a good selection when he named the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS] as the head of the subcommittee to investigate and iron out the leprosy situation. Mr. PARSONS has developed this substitute bill after much study. He deserves credit.

Also, I thank the Delegate for dropping his plans for immediate payments and settlements and going along with the subcommittee.

Mr. Chairman, I have held my place on the committee all of these years—nearly 20—because, being a Pacific coast Member, I am anxious to do my full part for the proper treatment and advancement and development of our two Territories—Hawaii and Alaska. One is our outpost and a producer of great commodity values as well as substantial revenues for the United States. The other is not only a producer but is a reservoir of treasure, undiscovered resources, and much of it a habitable place where in time 6,000,000 or more of our overflow population will live in comfort and contentment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask recognition in opposition to the joint resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any member of the committee desire recognition in opposition to the joint resolution? [After a pause.] If not, the gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for one hour.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this is an endeavor to have the camel stick his nose under the tent and throw upon the National Government a burden that properly belongs to the Territory of Hawaii. I can not criticize the Delegate from Hawaii for seeking to unload on the National Government these financial burdens that are properly a charge upon Hawaii; yet, as I said in my colloquial discussion with the gentlemen, if the number of leper cases were as general throughout the United States as they are in Hawaii, we would not have undertaken the national hospital at Carville. Because the cases were so exceptional throughout the country, we found it was not advantageous to throw that burden, for humanitarian reasons, upon the respective States, but to undertake that load from a national standpoint. It was a burden that properly belonged to the States. There is no question but what, as far as Hawaii is concerned, it is so general throughout the islands, not by reason of the troops being there but because of conditions that prevailed before the United States ever took possession of the islands, that we are called upon, or the gentleman is seeking to impose that burden that is entirely local, upon the National Government.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from "Little Egypt."

Mr. KELLER. I would like to know how the gentleman concludes that this would have been a matter for the States instead of for the General Government?

Mr. STAFFORD. I did not think I would be called upon at any time by any Democrat, or any man who professed to be a Democrat, to explain to him that the care of the health is a matter pertaining solely to the States and not to the National Government. I would suggest that the gentleman read something of Thomas Jefferson, and after having read some works of Thomas Jefferson, if the gentleman then thinks the care of the health is a national function, I will give further consideration to trying to enlighten the gentleman on Democratic principles.

I am fundamental in my opposition, and I differ from the gentleman from Illinois in that everything that pertains to the States, of a local character, such as the regulation of the health, the regulation of the morals, belongs to the States and not to the National Government. The gentleman is counter to that proposition, especially in the control of the regulations of drinking beverages. The gentleman believes that the National Government should supervise conditions in lower Illinois, known as "Little Egypt." I do not.

The condition prevailing in Herrin County, represented by the distinguished gentleman who has made this report, is a matter that pertains to the State of Illinois, and I believe the gentleman from Illinois believes in that principle, and does not wish to have the national Government invade the province that pertains particularly to his little district or some little foul spot in his district.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. I may say for the information of the gentleman, while I have no brief either for or against Herrin or Herrin County, which happens to be Williams County, it is not in my district.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I acquit the gentleman of being obliged to represent that district which is sometimes guilty of the gravest kind of disorder.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KELLER. With great pleasure I announce that Herrin is a part of my district, and there is no better town in America than Herrin.

Mr. STAFFORD. But it sometimes gets off the reservation.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Here is a real States' rights Democrat. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. I did not know that that county was in the district represented by my colleague, Mr. KELLER. I know it has been inhabited by splendid people, wonderful people, and that law and order prevailed for many, many years, until prohibition came in. Ever since prohibition came in crime has been rampant over there, as well as in many other sections of the country. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will help us repeal the eighteenth amendment or modify the Volstead Act, from that moment on I know that law and order will again prevail there, as well as all over the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman from Illinois making that request of me, when I have been a member of the subcommittee that has been continually considering that question? The gentleman should make his appeal to the gentleman who is counter to the efforts to bring about relief from these conditions down in Herrin County.

Mr. KELLER. There are not any such conditions as that.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from Wisconsin is one of the outstanding advocates of the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the amendment of the Volstead Act. I realize and appreciate that, but I simply say he should continue in his efforts so that we can force an early vote.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, I am working day and night. Even when the gentleman is out in Illinois I am working day and night trying to bring it about.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman knows that I have been working while he was still in Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the gentleman has been working assiduously.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does not the gentleman think that if the gentleman from Herrin would come in with the people who are opposed to prohibition it would help Herrin?

Mr. STAFFORD. From my knowledge of conditions, it would help any Democrat who believes in State rights in his return to this body.

Mr. KELLER. I thank the gentleman for the recommendation.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, what is the matter before the House?

Mr. STAFFORD. The question of whether the National Government should assume exclusively State functions.

Mr. TILSON. That is not what I have been hearing for the last 10 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Or whether the Territory should continue to assume its proper burdens of local self-government. If the gentleman was awake—and I assume he is always awake—he realizes it was the gentleman from "Little Egypt" who started this excursion as to conditions in Herrin County. Naturally I had to acquaint him with some Jeffersonian principles. That is what misled me.

Mr. BOYLAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BOYLAN. Directing attention to the subject under discussion, the gentleman knows that leprosy is a peculiar disease. It is singled out as an exceptional disease throughout the world. The gentleman would not want each State to have a leprosy hospital, would he?

Mr. STAFFORD. As I stated originally, if the conditions were so general as to warrant a leprosarium in each State, the Federal Government would not have been warranted in establishing a national hospital for such cases at Carville, La.; but it was because there were rather isolated cases, perhaps only one from a State, that Congress felt justified in having them collected and their treatment coordinated at Carville, La.

Mr. BOYLAN. The gentleman would not want them scattered all over the United States with an institution in each State?

Mr. STAFFORD. Here we have, through the ingenious activity of the Delegate from Hawaii, an effort in seeking to impose upon the Federal Government a burden that is purely territorial and local in its nature, and to which the United States has not contributed. It is not at all a burden that should be placed upon the National Government.

Mr. BOYLAN. Is it not a national menace?

Mr. STAFFORD. The people are not staying away from Hawaii because there is leprosy there.

Mr. BOYLAN. Is that why the gentleman is staying away?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am staying away for other reasons. People have not been staying away from Hawaii all these years because there is leprosy there. I was over there years back.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up further time. I object to the Public Health Service trying to extend its activities to intrude upon matters that are purely local and throw the burden more and more upon the National Government. Every day we hear protests from the people at home against the burdens of National Government, and yet here to-day we are proceeding to consider legislation that will ultimately provide for an additional expense. I have registered my protest. If the committee wishes to vote this resolution favorably, that is their privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further debate, the Clerk will read the joint resolution for amendment.

The Clerk read the joint resolution for amendment, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service is authorized and directed to—

(1) Institute a survey by officers of the Public Health Service to determine the adequacy of facilities and extent to which provision is made for the protection of the public health in the care and treatment of leprous persons in the Territory of Hawaii, and to report upon remedial legislation providing for the further control and eradication of the disease in the Territory.

(2) Prepare an estimate of the cost of the construction and equipment of a receiving station and hospital for the care and treatment of leprous persons, including the acquisition of necessary grounds for the location of said station and hospital, and an estimate of the yearly cost of maintaining and operating such station and hospital.

In the preparation of this estimate the Surgeon General shall ascertain from the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of Agriculture whether any military, naval, or other reservation suitable for the purpose is available for transfer, to be used for the location of said station and hospital, and shall consider also the cost of the purchase of the present Kalihi receiving hospital, its equipment and supplies, including the acquisition of the ground upon which the hospital is located and including such reconstruction or additional buildings as may be necessary.

The Surgeon General shall report his findings and estimates on the opening day of the second session of the Seventy-second Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the joint resolution back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 361) to authorize the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service to make a survey as to the existing facilities for the protection of the public health in the care and treatment of leprous persons in the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further Calendar Wednesday business be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11267) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11267, with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Janitors under the foregoing shall be appointed by the chairmen, respectively, of said committees, and shall perform under the direction of the Doorkeeper all of the duties heretofore required of messengers detailed to said committees by the Doorkeeper, and shall be subject to removal by the Doorkeeper at any time after the termination of the Congress during which they were appointed.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 3, on page 14, in order to offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to return to page 14 in order to offer a committee amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. SANDLIN: On page 14, line 3, strike out the following: "Norman E. Ives."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I will state that if this name is left in this bill and the economy bill becomes a law, the Invalid Pensions Committee would be left without salary for this position. By striking out the name, the committee will be permitted to have this position. I also understand from the chairman of the Invalid Pensions Committee that the present occupant of this position will not be disturbed if this name is stricken out and the economy bill does not go through as written.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerk hire necessarily employed by each Member, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner, in the discharge of his official and representative duties, in accordance with the act entitled "An act to fix the compensation of officers and employees of the legislative branch of the Government," approved June 20, 1929, $2,200,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Perhaps my inquiry is not pertinent to the amendment just offered by the gentleman from Louisiana, striking out the name of Mr. Ives, but I notice on page 17, line 7, the name of a specific person. Does the gentleman's proposal also apply in this instance?

Mr. SANDLIN. No; it does not apply to Mr. Lewis.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman repeat the real purpose of having the name of Mr. Ives stricken out?

Mr. SANDLIN. He is a retired employee of the Interior Department; and if the proposal of the Economy Committee is carried out, he could not serve in an active position.

Mr. STAFFORD. To which proposal does the gentleman refer?

Mr. SANDLIN. The proposal in the economy bill with reference to retired employees being appointed to any other position in the Government.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does he occupy the status of one of the retired employees?

Mr. SANDLIN. Yes; he does.

Mr. STAFFORD. What salary does he get as such?

Mr. SANDLIN. He gets $1,200 as retirement annuity.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries: Clerk, $4,000 and $800 additional so long as the position is held by the present incumbent; inspector under section 20 of the act approved January 12, 1895 (U. S. C., title 44, sec. 49), $2,820; assistant clerk and stenographer, $2,400; for expenses of compiling, preparing, and indexing the Congressional Directory, $1,600; in all, $11,620, one half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and the other half to be disbursed by the Clerk of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Will the gentleman inform the committee as to the maximum salary that the clerk of the Joint Committee on Printing receives under this or any other authorization of Congress?

Mr. SANDLIN. Four thousand eight hundred dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here you make provision for expenses of compiling, preparing, and indexing the Congressional Directory, $1,600. To whom does that emolument go?

Mr. SANDLIN. It is paid out under the order of the Joint Committee on Printing. I do not know the individual or individuals who are paid from the amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does it go to the clerk of the joint committee?

Mr. SANDLIN. I do not know.

Mr. STAFFORD. I suppose this is an additional emolument to that which he is receiving as an employee on the permanent roll?

Mr. SANDLIN. I can not say as to that. The joint committee controls that fund.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman does not know of any person about the Capitol who is performing this character of work and receiving only $800?

Mr. SANDLIN. I do not.

Mr. STAFFORD. So naturally it would be assumed that he is receiving some other basic pay and that this is an emolument?

Mr. SANDLIN. That could be assumed by the gentleman if he wants to assume it. To be frank with the gentleman, I do not know.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman's acquaintance with conditions prevailing around the Capitol certainly would not lead him to believe that there are any employees receiving as little as $800?

Mr. SANDLIN. The amount is $1,600.

Mr. STAFFORD. One-half to be disbursed by the Senate and one-half by the House.

Mr. SANDLIN. That is only the method of disbursement. The total is $1,600. It is paid $800 by the House and $800 by the Senate. I think there are a good many around the Capitol working for $1,600.

Mr. STAFFORD. There may be stenographers employed by Members of Congress who receive that amount, but there are no political attachés who are working for the political establishment of the Government in responsible positions who get as little as $1,600.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, and ask unanimous consent to return to page 17, line 8, for the purpose of making a point of order on the item of $420, which is not authorized by law.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, for the present, I object.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the gentleman reserve his objection so that I can make a statement about it?

Mr. SANDLIN. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, this bill came out of the Committee on Accounts about three or four years ago and was passed in the interest of the gentleman who held the position at that time, Mr. Ladd, but there has been no resolution passed pertaining to the present employee holding this office. There is no law authorizing this $420, and I hope the gentleman from Louisiana will not object to returning to it because here we say we are in favor of economy——

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I admit the point of order would be good if we should return to the paragraph, but let me make this statement:

The information the committee received was that when the salaries of the different positions of the Government here were gone over a few years ago, the salary of this place was not increased, because of this additional sum, and for that reason it is taken care of by this provision in the bill.

If I did not think this was a meritorious case and if I did not believe the employee was earning this salary, I would certainly not object to returning to the item. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that I am as much in favor of an economical administration of this Government as the gentleman is, at the same time I do not propose to cut the salary of some specific employee who, I believe, is earning every dollar he is receiving. If I had not believed this, I would not have allowed it to be written in the bill. I think this is a case where the employee should receive the salary, because he is earning it, and for that reason I would object to striking it out.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

The Clerk read as follows:

For salaries and expenses of maintenance of the office of legislative counsel, as authorized by law, $75,000, of which $37,500 shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and $37,500 by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, when this item has been reached in the past, for several years members of the Committee on Ways and Means and others of the leading committees have taken the opportunity to speak in approval of the great help given to the Congress by this service.

I see none of such members here at the moment, and so I presume to do it by reason of the fact that this winter I have had unusual occasion to see and to profit by the very admirable, efficient, loyal work of this agency. I think a word of testimony to its value should be recorded, and at the same time I would recall that a dozen years ago, when this agency was young, there were Members who criticized its purpose severely and attempted to block appropriations for it. In this period it has won its permanent place in the institutions of our Government.

The Clerk read as follows:

Capitol Grounds: For care and improvement of grounds surrounding the Capitol, Senate and House Office Buildings; Capitol power plant; personal and other services; care of trees; plantings; fertilizers; repairs to pavements, walks, and roadways; purchase of waterproof wearing apparel; maintenance of signal lights; and for snow removal by hire of men and equipment or under contract without compliance with sections 3709 (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 5) and 3744 (U. S. C., title 40, sec. 16) of the Revised Statutes, $120,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I direct my inquiry to the chairman having the bill in charge as to the principal item of expenditure of $120,000 for the care and improvement of the Capitol Grounds.

Mr. SANDLIN. I think I can give the gentleman the items. There is $73,000 for salaries and wages, $25,000 for a sprinkling system, $6,000 for sundry supplies and repairs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is there any sprinkling system for the Capitol Grounds?

Mr. SANDLIN. The gentleman will notice that they have started the installation of a sprinkling system. Instead of going around with a hand hose, they are putting pipes underground.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have never seen any sprinkling of the grounds by hand hose.

Mr. HARDY. If the gentleman will go out to the east front, he will see that pipes have been put through the grounds. They turn on the water and the ground is sprinkled automatically.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have never seen any sprinkling, and it seems to me that it has not been necessary on account of the climatic conditions, the abundant rainfalls during the summer season.

Mr. SANDLIN. The gentleman may have overlooked it.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says they are installing an additional sprinkling system.

Mr. SANDLIN. To take the place of the hose system.

Mr. STAFFORD. Have the grounds ever been sprinkled by hose?

Mr. SANDLIN. My information is that they have.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have been around here with my eyes open, and I have never seen any sprinkling of the Capitol Grounds by hose. Of course, I take the gentleman's word for it.

Mr. SANDLIN. I acknowledge that the gentleman is a keen observer, but he has overlooked that.

Mr. STAFFORD. It may have been done in the night.

Mr. SANDLIN. I have seen it done in the early morning.

Mr. STAFFORD. What are the other items?

Mr. SANDLIN. I have given the gentleman the items—$73,000 for salaries and wages, $25,000 for the sprinkling, $6,000 for supplies and repairs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Capitol garages: For maintenance, repairs, alterations, personal, and other services, and all necessary incidental expenses, $7,540: Provided, That the employees engaged in the care and maintenance of the Senate garage shall be transferred to the jurisdiction of the Architect of the Capitol on July 1, 1932, without any reduction in compensation as the result of such transfer: Provided further, That hereafter the underground space in the north extension of the Capitol Grounds shall be under the jurisdiction and control of the Architect of the Capitol, subject to such regulations respecting the use thereof as may be promulgated by the joint action of the Vice President of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read. My purpose is to get some information in regard to this expensive subterranean garage to the west of the ornate Senate Office Building. How much has been expended for the sole purpose of creating an underground garage for the benefit of automobiles used by the Senators of the United States?

Mr. SANDLIN. This garage was authorized under a special act of Congress. I have not the date at hand, but I will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. STAFFORD. Was there a special authorization, or did they proceed under some general authorization in an appropriation bill? I do not recall any special provision being incorporated in a general appropriation act or any special act of Congress authorizing the construction of a subterranean garage for the benefit of the Senators of the United States, involving an expense of more than a million dollars.

Mr. SANDLIN. In that act they adopted a definite plan which provided for this garage.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to see that, and also I would like to know the name of the person who originated the tunnel for the street cars approaching the northwesterly corner of the Senate Office Building.

I would say, offhand, that it took several hundred thousand dollars to provide for that subway I described as a tunnel a moment ago. I would like really to know who designed that proposal, and who approved it, and what the cost is. I know sufficient about the program to know that it has cost the taxpayers a mighty tidy figure.

Mr. SANDLIN. The gentleman is correct. I have no quarrel with the gentleman. It was expressly provided by an act of Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. When was that passed? Was it a rider upon an appropriation act?

Mr. HOLADAY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, this was carried in the general appropriation for the beautification of the Plaza between the Capitol and Union Station.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand it, the plan for the Plaza originated with the former Representative from Kentucky, Ben Johnson, who was then chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. It was the idea to condemn the property from the Union Station down to the Peace Monument and have it so arranged that there would be an unobstructed view to the Peace Monument to visitors coming by railway to the Union Station. Some one at some time has constructed an obstruction to that view, for the accommodation, perhaps, of the Senators of the United States who use automobiles.

Mr. HOLADAY. This is a part of the plan of the Park and Planning Commission. I may say to the gentleman that I opposed it at the time it was considered.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am very glad that the gentleman took that position, and I regret that he was unsuccessful in his effort to stop it. What was the ground of his opposition? I hope it was in line with what I regard as being an undue waste of public money.

Mr. HOLADAY. That was my position. I took the position that it was an unnecessary expenditure and a waste of public funds.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any information as to the total expenditure of that submerged architectural monstrosity?

Mr. HOLADAY. The cost of that garage was not so great. As the gentleman will recall, the building was built on about a level, and then over the garage on toward the Capitol it was filled in, so that the cost of the garage itself was not such a great item.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, I know that the granite facing on the bridge that crosses over the subway, for the accommodation of the street-car traffic, cost many thousand dollars. I am told that the entire subterranean structure has cost the Government over a million dollars.

Mr. HOLADAY. The Park and Planning Commission conceived the idea that the beauty of the whole project would be lost unless the street cars were submerged. It is one of the expensive and, as I consider, unreasonable plans that are constantly being forced upon the Government by the Park and Planning Commission.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Park and Planning Commission is not pretending to take the street cars from directly in front of the Union Station. They are observed there, and yet merely for the casual transportation of street cars underground, a little more than a quarter of a mile away, they wish them submerged.

Mr. HOLADAY. I quite agree with the gentleman in his sentiments.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I think after the landscaping is entirely completed, it will not be as ugly as the gentleman from Wisconsin suggests.

Mr. STAFFORD. But they have destroyed the prime purpose that Mr. Johnson had in mind, to have an unobstructed view for those who came here by the Union Station to see the Peace Monument.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And the Capitol?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; the Peace Monument. When they were throwing up the dirt around the Plaza along B Street I inquired of some officials connected with the Capitol what the purpose was. They did not tell me the real purpose was to build a subterranean garage. I am not objecting to the Senators having a garage, but I think it would have been more economical to have a modern garage contiguous to the Senate Office Building rather than to have this structure which can not be justified.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I think by the time the gentleman comes back next session and the landscaping is complete, it will satisfy his æsthetic taste.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have not the æsthetic taste of the Park and Planning Commission, which would destroy the prime purpose of viewing the Peace Monument and the equestrian monument erected by the Government in honor of General Grant. That is all obstructed by these æsthetes who block the original purpose entirely out of view. As I said, the practical thing would have been to erect a separate garage. I think the time is coming when we will have to erect a separate garage for the Members of the House rather than to have the automobiles scattered everywhere around the Capitol, but when we do, I hope they will not go to the extent of marring the beauty of the Capitol by the erection of some structure for the sole purpose of benefiting the street-car company.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of the gentleman from Wisconsin, this improvement is provided for in the act of March 4, 1929, entitled "An act to provide for the enlargement of the Capitol Grounds." One of the provisions is for the removal of the street-car tracks from Delaware Avenue and B Street, and the relaying of them, and an underground structure extending from Delaware to New Jersey Avenue.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I am acquitted in my own conscience of having neglected my duty, because it was passed before I entered the House.

Mr. SANDLIN. I am giving the gentleman the reason why we provided the money for this.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that it had escaped me and that it had been passed through the House after my return to Congress. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph and to appeal to my colleague from Louisiana to investigate the propriety of this and return to it later. I hope he will consider this request and look into the matter.

I think if he will investigate it, he will find it is entirely justifiable. To-day we started out with Calendar Wednesday, and we did not expect this bill to be read just now. Under those conditions, I feel the gentleman ought to grant us the privilege of returning to that, unless he indorses it entirely. The man there now is absolutely without any experience. This man was given that after years of experience, and he has built up the office.

Mr. SANDLIN. I have tried to make it plain to the gentleman that I do not know the man who is there at all. I never heard of him.

Mr. PATTERSON. The previous resolution was before our committee before I became a member, and we made a thorough study of it, and I think the gentleman will find that no more just request could be made.

Mr. SANDLIN. It has been explained to me by those present in the writing of the 1929 legislative pay act, and it was stated in our hearing that this was continued because this position was not increased in 1929 as the others were.

Mr. PATTERSON. That was not brought out before our committee when this original resolution was passed.

Mr. SANDLIN. I am not responsible for what was or was not brought out before the gentleman's committee.

Mr. PATTERSON. I am a member of the committee and I tell the gentleman that the resolution passed before the 1929 pay readjustments.

Mr. SANDLIN. Now, if the gentleman will pardon me, I do not talk very much, for the reason that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD costs about $46 a page to print.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield, I am willing to have all my discussions on the floor eliminated from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. If the gentleman thinks I am talking to get my remarks in the RECORD, I will ask unanimous consent to have them stricken out.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am here for the orderly discussion of legislation.

Mr. PATTERSON. The gentleman could not accuse me of taking undue time.

Mr. SANDLIN. This bill will not be completed to-day, and I will consider the request made by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. PATTERSON. I thank the gentleman; that is what I wish.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

LIBRARY BUILDING AND GROUNDS

Salaries: For chief engineer and all personal services at rates of pay provided by law, $46,960: Provided, That the Architect of the Capitol may continue the employment under his jurisdiction of Damon W. Harding, but not beyond June 30, 1934, notwithstanding any provision of the act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920, and any amendment thereof, prohibiting extensions of service for more than four years after the age of retirement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the proviso.

Mr. SANDLIN. It was explained to us that this gentleman had been working over there in this position ever since the Library Building was erected, and they thought he could give better service in this position than a new man. He knows where all the wiring of the building is, and it was stated he is a very valuable employee.

Mr. STAFFORD. But I believe the Committee on Economy is bringing in, as one of their recommendations, enforced retirement of all persons who are employed beyond the age of retirement.

Mr. SANDLIN. That is true.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here they are singling out a special individual. Let us get the picture. How old is he?

Mr. SANDLIN. Sixty-five. There is now under contract an addition to this Library Building. I know nothing about it except what the officials over there say about him.

Mr. STAFFORD. What officials, if I may ask?

Mr. SANDLIN. The Architect of the Capitol, who is in charge of that work at the Library. The hearings give a very clear statement of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. What salary does he now receive?

Mr. SANDLIN. Two thousand six hundred dollars.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, the proviso would change existing law so that this individual, beyond his retirement age, could be continued for another four years.

Mr. SANDLIN. I was mistaken. He has had two extensions. He is 69. This would extend him two years more.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been heretofore extended two years?

Mr. SANDLIN. Four years. This would extend him until he is 71 years old, if this is allowed to remain in.

Mr. STAFFORD. I see the gentleman from Texas rising.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Do I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin to intimate that because a man has reached the age of 69 years he is no longer capable and efficient?

Mr. STAFFORD. I take the position that when a man reaches the age of 69, willing or not, he should be retired.

Mr. BLANTON. Then we will retire some of the ablest men in the United States. We will retire some of the biggest heads of big business in the United States. We would retire some of the ablest Senators who sit in the other end of the Capitol. We would retire some men who are much more valuable to the country than some of us youngsters are just now.

Mr. STAFFORD. There may be exceptional cases. When the virile, aggressive, pungent Representative from Texas reaches the threescore-and-ten period, which is far distant, I know he will still be serviceable, but the gentleman is exceptional.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, I take it that this man is exceptional. It is an exceptional case. This committee must have some reason for this. They do not come in here spasmodically and make recommendations to the House without some good reason.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, this is a political employee, the gentleman must remember.

Mr. BLANTON. But a necessary one. They have passed on the matter. The committee is making its recommendations to the Congress. The committee is composed of 35 Members of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. And this man may be keeping somebody else out of employment. I will listen to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. SANDLIN. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that Mr. Lynn, the Architect of the Capitol, said this:

The recommendation of the Architect of the Capitol is that he be retained until June 30, 1934, in order that we may utilize his valuable and highly experienced services during the period of the construction of the addition and annex to the Library of Congress. In order to insure this retention, it is the desire of the Architect of the Capitol to have the necessary legislation passed to continue his services.

Mr. Bond, who is working under Mr. Lynn, said this:

Mr. Harding has been employed in the Library of Congress since 1898. He entered the service about one year after the building was opened, and his service has been continuous except for the time when the Architect of the Capitol asked that he be transferred to the Capitol in connection with the old House Office Building wiring. He has personal knowledge of everything pertaining to the electrical equipment of the building, and a lot of it is not of record. It is mentally preserved with him, and we feel that we would like to retain him at least until these two buildings are completed—that is the annex building and the addition—and the entire electrical equipment installed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Louisiana has made a good case as to the retention of this individual who has in his possession certain technical information that no other man may have. I am sufficiently acquainted with expert builders to know that they acquire information about construction work that can not be handed down. Therefore, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Apropos of what was embraced within the reservation of the point of order, and apropos of the continual effort to retire Government employees in the very prime of life and pay them big retirement fees and let them continue to draw big salaries, I want to point the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin to the office in the rotunda of the Capitol where all the statues are placed.

Mr. STAFFORD. The chamber of horrors?

Mr. BLANTON. Statuary Hall is its name. Over in the corner presides Andy Smith, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD clerk, who has been working for the Government loyally and faithfully in this Capitol for 57 years. He is 77 years old. He is on the job right now. He is able, efficient, energetic, and better qualified than any other man in the Nation to handle that position. Would you retire him, forsooth, because he is 77 years old? We know he is able to do his work, and we know that he does it well. And no man half so well qualified can be found to take his place.

I want to point the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] to Hon. William Tyler Page, who, until we Democrats wrested the power of authority from our brother Republicans, was the clerk of this House—an able, efficient Clerk, than whom there has never been an abler one. He is a great historian and is one of the best-informed men in the United States Capitol, and is one of the loyal, patriotic citizens of the United States. He has been employed in this Capitol for over 50 years. Does the gentleman want to retire him because, forsooth, he has reached up in years?

For the benefit of some of our new colleagues who are serving their first term in this House I want to crave your indulgence long enough to give them a few facts about this faithful public servant.

William Tyler Page was born near here at Frederick, Md., October 19, 1868. He is one of the lineal descendants of Carter Braxton, signer of the Declaration of Independence. He was given his middle name because he is a collateral descendant of President John Tyler. He was educated in the public schools of Baltimore and at the Frederick Academy.

William Tyler Page began his service as an employee of this Government on December 19, 1881, when he was appointed a page in the Clerk's office of the House of Representatives. He has been a faithful employee ever since, his service being continuous, and he has rounded out more than 50 years of loyal service to the United States. He was elected Clerk of this House on May 19, 1919, and continued in such position until last December.

William Tyler Page is senior warden of St. Columba's Episcopal Church, is author of Page's Congressional Handbook, and during the World War he wrote the American's Creed, which was officially adopted by the Commissioner of Education, who was authorized to select a creed.

I am sure that it will be worth while for me to quote from the remarks of Mr. Matthew Page Andrews, representative of the Vigilantes and chairman of the committee of award, the following:

In March, 1917, the city of Baltimore, through Mayor James H. Preston, offered a prize of $1,000 for the best creed. Committees were then appointed to pass upon the creeds submitted. These committees were (1) a committee on manuscripts, consisting of Porter Emerson Browne, Henry S. Chapin, Hermann Hagedorn, and representatives from leading American magazines; (2) a committee on award, consisting of Matthew Page Andrews, Irvin S. Cobb, Hamlin Garland, Ellen Glasgow, Julian Street, Booth Tarkington, and Charles Hanson Towne; (3) an advisory committee, consisting of Dr. P. P. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education, and other national and State officials.

Several thousand creeds were submitted to the committee on manuscripts prior to the closing of the contest on September 14, 1917. Fifty of these were turned over to the committee on award, and "creed No. 384" was selected as the best. The envelope containing the author's name was opened in New York City March 6, 1918.

It was then disclosed that the author of No. 384 was William Tyler Page, of Friendship Heights, Md. [Applause.] His creed was selected because it was not only brief and simple but remarkably comprehensive of the best in American ideals, history, and tradition, as expressed by the founders of the Republic and its greatest statesmen and writers. This creed will be read for the first time by Doctor Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education, to whom I now present it on behalf of the national committee on award. [Applause.]

Chairman CLAXTON. The creed is as follows:

"THE AMERICAN'S CREED

"I believe in the United States of America as a government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic; a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States; a perfect Union, one and inseparable, established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice, and humanity for which American patriots sacrified their lives and fortunes.

"I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its Constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies."

This is a creed very fitting to be announced at this time, and the good thing about it is that it is not new, but it sums up the fundamental faith of all of the greatest of our leaders from the beginning until now; a creed that can be recommended not only to those who may come from the shores of Europe or Asia to make their home among us and become of us but to those of our own flesh and blood who come from the shores of eternity to grow up among us and to take our places and to carry on our institutional life and to support and defend the country.

I am asked to make this explanation, that the first clause—"I believe in the United States of America," is from the preamble to the Constitution of the United States; that the second clause, "a government of the people, by the people, for the people," is from the preamble to the Constitution of the United States, Daniel Webster's speech in the Senate of January 26, 1830, and Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg speech.

"Whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed," is from the Declaration of Independence.

"A democracy in a republic," is in substance from No. 10 of the Federalist, by Madison, and Article X of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States.

"A sovereign Nation of many sovereign States," from 'E pluribus unum," the great seal of the United States, and Article IV of the Constitution of the United States.

"A perfect union," goes back to the preamble to the Constitution.

"One and inseparable," Webster's speech in the Senate of January 26, 1830.

"Established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice, and humanity," from the Declaration of Independence.

"For which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes," from the Declaration of Independence and Lincoln's Gettysburg Address.

"I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it," in substance from Edward Everett Hale, the man without a country.

"To support its Constitution," from the oath of allegiance, section 1757 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

"To obey its laws," from Washington's Farewell Address and from Article VI of the Constitution of the United States.

"To respect its flag," the national anthem, The Star-Spangled Banner; Army and Navy regulations; War Department circular on flag etiquette, April 14, 1917.

"And to defend it against all enemies," from the oath of allegiance, section 1757 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

That is part of the record, Mr. Chairman, of one of our faithful employees, and he has served in this Capitol for over 50 years. Why, it would be foolish to talk about retiring him simply because he will soon be 64 years of age.

Let me call attention to another loyal, faithful employee, who is 72 years of age, and who has been working here continuously since 1880—over 52 years, if you please. I refer to Sam Robinson. Who could do his work better than he does it? He comes on duty about 12 noon every day, when the House meets, and he works until about midnight every night. He is active, efficient, trustworthy, and thoroughly dependable. Before he retires each night all copy for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is in the Government Printing Office. Because of his splendid services we are going to provide in this bill that Sam Robinson is not to be retired. And I sincerely hope that no Member will oppose that provision.

Why, you might as well talk about retiring our present efficient Doorkeeper, Joe Sinnott, for whom we all have affection. He has reached the top and has started down the other side of the hill. Where is there a man in this Nation who could make a better Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives? He has served the House of Representatives at a time when we could pay him only a small salary, incommensurate with his manifold duties and the real value of his service, yet he worked loyally and faithfully in a menial position for years.

It makes me tired to see on this floor continually efforts being made to retire Government employees because they have served 20 or 30 years, or have reached the age of 45.

Mr. WITHROW. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. WITHROW. Did you not vote to unseat Mr. Page and put another man in his place?

Mr. BLANTON. I did that from the standpoint of party regularity only. I knew when I did that that we were going to take care of him. When I did that we had already prepared a resolution that we were going to present here to take care of him, and our good friend Joe Rogers. If I had had my way on it, I would have put onto that resolution a further provision to take care of our former efficient Doorkeeper, Bert Kennedy, one of the best men we have had here in charge of that office, and also I would have taken care of our good friend Frank Collier, our former splendid Postmaster, who rendered able service to every man in this House, whether he was a Democrat, a Republican, a Socialist, or a Mugwump. [Laughter.] All of us liked him.

Why did we not take care of Bert Kennedy and Frank Collier? The time has come when we ought to take that matter up and do justice to those two men. They are receiving a little salary the equivalent of that paid a janitor. I hope the very next bill that the Committee on Accounts brings in will be amended to carry an appropriate salary for Bert Kennedy and for Frank Collier.

Mr. MEAD. We have one or two minor employees over in the House Office Building who are in the same category. They ought to be protected.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course they ought to be; and I want to help you do it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For the Register of Copyrights, assistant register, and other personal services, $249,380.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I assume the salary of the librarian is fixed by law?

Mr. SANDLIN. It is fixed by law at $10,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. He receives only $10,000?

Mr. SANDLIN. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was wondering what his salary was. What does the Register of Copyrights receive, if the gentleman has that information?

Mr. SANDLIN. He receives $5,600.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

DISTRIBUTION OF CARD INDEXES

For the distribution of card indexes and other publications of the Library, including personal services, freight charges (not exceeding $500), expressage, postage, traveling expenses connected with such distribution, expenses of attendance at meetings when incurred on the written authority and direction of the librarian, and including not to exceed $62,010 for employees engaged in piecework and work by the day or hour and for extra special services of regular employees at rates to be fixed by the Librarian; in all, $180,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Did the committee make any reduction in the appropriation for the distribution of the card indexes which are now under consideration?

Mr. SANDLIN. No. It was increased $9,500 on the explanation of the librarian that the work had increased.

Mr. STAFFORD. I believe this is a reimbursable item?

Mr. SANDLIN. It is. There is a little profit.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

INDEX TO FEDERAL STATUTES

To enable the Librarian of Congress to revise and extend the index to the Federal Statutes, published in 1908 and known as the Scott and Beaman Index, to include the acts of Congress down to and including the acts of the Seventieth Congress, and to have the revised index printed at the Government Printing Office, as authorized and directed by the act approved March 3, 1927, as amended June 14, 1930, the unexpended balance of the appropriation for this purpose in the legislative appropriation act for the fiscal year 1932 is continued available for the fiscal year 1933.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. For a long time I have been of the opinion that the Scott and Beaman Index was not of much value to any persons except the West Publishing Co. and other law publishing companies. As I recall, in the last session of Congress there was some authorization to appropriate a considerable amount of money for bringing this index down to date. Certain persons connected with the Library of Congress have called my attention to the needlessness of this elaborate compilation, and, as I said, it is only utilized by some large law-book publishing houses.

Mr. SANDLIN. The index to Federal Statutes is directed by the act of March 3, 1927, as amended, and to carry out the provisions of those acts this appropriation is made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman's committee made any investigation as to the real need of this so-called Scott and Beaman Index? This is a large amount of money to keep extant a certain index of the Federal Statutes, and I have been informed it is of but very little current value except to law publishing houses.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I thought it was just the reverse. I think the law publishers have a better index than we have.

Mr. STAFFORD. For that reason this is of very little value. We are giving this honorarium to some Government employees for the upkeep of a compilation of statutes that I dare say is never referred to by any Member of Congress.

Mr. SANDLIN. I will say that the legislative counsel uses this index a good deal.

Mr. STAFFORD. The legislative counsel is one of the beneficiaries of this compilation.

Mr. SANDLIN. No; the gentleman is wrong. It is done by the Library.

Mr. STAFFORD. Originally Mr. Beaman, one of the legislative counsel, when employed by the Government as a member of the Library staff, received this gratuity to the extent of several thousand dollars. I have been told by persons connected with the Library of Congress, and particularly the law library, that this is of very little current value.

Here is another instance where the Government could save money. We get started on something and some employee is desirous of having his hand in the public crib and keeps holding on to the purse strings and never gives up. I am quite certain if the committee would investigate this matter, even though it is authorized by law, they would not appropriate for it.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, it would certainly seem to me it is very important that the Committee on the Judiciary and the Members of Congress generally should know——

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman ever examined this index?

Mr. SANDLIN. I have never had occasion to examine it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have had it sent to me, and it is of no current value at all. Not only that, but the cost of publishing it at the Government Printing Office is a waste of money.

Mr. SANDLIN. I am very glad to have the gentleman's suggestion and I shall look into it thoroughly.

Mr. STAFFORD. I brought the matter up for that purpose, so that next year when we are confronted with the same condition of a depleted Treasury as we are to-day, the gentleman will strike out some of these needless appropriations.

Mr. SANDLIN. Of course, the gentleman understands that the appropriation is made by authority of law.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it were not by authority of law, I would use the bludgeon of a point of order and strike it out.

Mr. SANDLIN. The members of the Committee on the Judiciary were instrumental in having this legislation passed and I understand they are favorable to its continuation.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We use the established public works every time we have occasion to look up a Federal statute. I think every lawyer does this.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is not a lawyer in the country that uses it, and I dare say there is not a Member of Congress who uses this needless publication.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE LIBRARY

For miscellaneous and contingent expenses, stationery, supplies, stock, and materials directly purchased, miscellaneous traveling expenses, postage, transportation, incidental expenses connected with the administration of the Library and Copyright Office, including not exceeding $500 for expenses of attendance at meetings when incurred on the written authority and direction of the Librarian, $9,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, on page 35, line 16, I move to strike out the words "traveling expenses."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 35, line 16, strike out the words "traveling expenses."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have just had compiled and sent to me an official, certified statement of the traveling expenses of the general counsel of the Veterans' Bureau since 1923.

It is astonishing that they would allow this man to attend all the various conventions over the country and thus waste a sacred fund that we set apart for that bureau to rehabilitate disabled veterans.

For the benefit of my colleagues, so they will have a picture of it before them, I ask, Mr. Chairman, unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to put in the RECORD this salary account and some other excerpts that I want to bring to your attention.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I wish you would read this in the RECORD in the morning. Here is the letter from Gen. Frank T. Hines, Director of the Veterans' Administration, with the travel account of William Wolff Smith certified as correct, to wit:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, April 25, 1932.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: This is in compliance with your request of April 23, 1932, asking for complete information as to the travel performed by Maj. William Wolff Smith since February 1, 1923, regarding all trips outside of Washington.

Attached hereto you will find a summary of each trip made and a summarization of the total travel performed. The data furnished includes, by trips, the period of travel, points of travel, purpose of travel, and cost of travel, the latter item being divided into the cost of transportation and Pullman, per diem, and other expenses.

The data indicates that Major Smith was on travel status during the period covered for a total of 562 days, the total cost involved being $7,510.40.

You requested a special itemization of the trip performed to Paris. Major Smith made two trips to Europe during this period, and you will find inclosed photostat copies of the vouchers with supporting papers covering each of these trips.

The data submitted relative to Major Smith's travel is complete, with the exception of a trip made during the current month to Columbia, S. C., and Norfolk, Va. This trip was made in connection with war-risk litigation. The voucher has not as yet been submitted, and detailed information relative to this trip is, therefore, not available.

I trust that the information submitted herewith presents the facts which you desire.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Administrator.

Summary statement of travel, William Wolff Smith, period May 18, 1923, through March 11, 1932

Period	Number days	Transportation and Pullman	Per diem	Other expenses	Total
1923
May 18-23	6	$24.10	$16.00	$2.59	$42.69
May 23-June 29	37	106.75	26.00	9.10	141.85
Aug. 22-Sept. 2	12	108.88	29.00	6.35	144.23
1923
Sept. 21-23	3	16.28	11.00	12.60	39.88
Oct. 6-28	23	283.99	90.00	21.03	395.02
Dec. 28-31	4	23.78	15.00	5.35	44.13
1924
Jan. 12-16	5	63.20	18.00	5.60	86.80
May 17-25	9	63.20	35.00	5.60	103.80
July 11-Aug. 17	5	[1] 70.00	20.00		90.00
Sept. 12-21	10	66.05	37.00	7.50	110.55
1925
Mar. 18	1	2.14			2.14
Apr. 1-5	5	48.27	18.00	8.45	74.72
May 4-6	3	40.42	11.00	5.60	57.02
May 16-June 1	17	107.23	63.00	11.50	181.73
Sept. 1-8	8	55.86	19.00	5.60	80.46
Sept. 28-Oct. 12	15	116.92	55.00	11.70	183.62
Oct. 28-Nov. 1	5	58.44	15.00	6.30	79.74
1926
Mar. 24	1	[2] 1.75	3.00		4.75
Apr. 1-4	4	40.42	13.00	5.50	58.92
May 12-21	10	114.43	37.00	13.80	165.23
July 10-Aug. 10	32	307.29	145.50	26.83	479.62
Sept. 22	1	21.91	6.00	3.70	31.61
Oct. 8-15	8	[2] 8.85	45.00	1.00	54.85
Dec. 3	1	7.15	3.00	1.80	11.95
1927
Jan. 7-12	6	63.05	30.00	8.15	101.20
Jan. 27-31	5	69.16	27.00	5.95	102.11
Apr. 20-May 16	27	169.37	153.00	37.50	359.87
Aug. 28-Sept. 4	8	[2] 19.70	40.50	5.00	65.20
Sept. 9-Oct. 19	41	594.78	196.00	71.81	862.59
1928
May 15-21	7	60.26	34.50	8.95	103.71
July 9-12	4	234.71	150.00	20.23	404.94
Oct. 2-21	20	160.16	70.50	17.05	247.71
Nov. 22-24	3	[2] 6.60	13.50	1.00	21.10
1929
Jan. 12-16	5	70.01	25.50	6.25	101.76
Apr. 24-29	6	64.31	28.50	6.55	99.36
May 13-June 4	23	132.55	133.50	33.25	299.30
July 21-27	7	[2] 7.50	33.00	1.50	42.00
July 30-Aug. 2	4	18.04	22.50	1.50	42.04
Sept. 2-4	3	23.78	15.00	4.00	42.78
Sept. 23-Oct. 7	15	39.18	81.00	3.50	123.68
Oct. 14-25	12	93.11	63.00	8.20	164.31
Nov. 9	1	2.22			2.22
Nov. 12-20	9	62.26	46.50	7.85	116.61
Dec. 9-12	4	23.78	21.00	5.70	50.48
1930
Mar. 25-Apr. 13	20	131.86	112.50	16.80	261.16
May 13-17	5	63.20	22.50	4.85	90.55
June 29-July 6	8	56.09	30.00	4.95	91.04
Aug. 9-13	5	42.03	24.00	5.30	71.33

[1] Per diem and transportation allowed only for travel from London to Paris and return and for time consumed in travel and conferences.
[2] Gas and oil.

Summary statement of travel, William Wolff Smith, period May 18, 1923, through March 11, 1932—Continued

Period	Number days	Transportation and Pullman	Per diem	Other expenses	Total
1930
Aug. 17–26	10	$76.94	$54.00	$12.55	$143.49
Sept. 27–Oct. 20	24	[1] 30.95	132.00	6.00	168.95
Nov. 11–15	5	63.20	22.50	5.00	90.70
1931
May 12–19	8	67.38	40.50	8.65	116.53
June 12–20	9	[1] 16.19	52.50	3.00	71.69
Sept. 16–29	14	97.75	67.50	12.70	177.95
Nov. 16–30	15	76.37	55.00	12.65	144.02
1932
Mar. 8–11	4	41.36	17.50	5.85	64.71
Total	562	4,435.16	2,545.50	529.74	7,510.40

[1] Gas and oil.

Mr. BLANTON. The following is the expense voucher that William Wolff Smith turned in for his pleasure trip abroad, to attend the American Bar Association Convention, but much of which General Hines turned down and refused to allow, to wit:

GENERAL INSTRUCTIONS

1. This form of voucher will be used in accounting for actual necessary expenses of travel. Where an account is too large to be stated on this form, use continuation sheets, and fasten them together in the upper left-hand corner. Fill in the form on the back of this voucher, showing how transportation requests were used. Accounts must embrace each and every item of expenditure pertaining to the period for which the account is rendered.

2. Each account must be sworn to by the person rendering it, in the form of oath prescribed on the face of this form. Officers and employees traveling upon official business of the bureau, other than those receiving a per diem allowance, or mileage, in lieu of subsistence or actual expenses, under express provisions of law, are expected to travel as though on their personal business, and will be allowed their actual travel expenses, usual and essential to the ordinary comfort of travelers, as explained and embraced in the travel regulations of this bureau as published in General Order No. 18. The provisions of this order must be strictly observed in order to avoid suspensions and disallowances in the settlement of accounts. Copies of the order will be furnished upon application.

Itemized schedule of travel expenses and other expenses incurred under stress of urgent or unforeseen public necessity

Date, 1927, and character of expenditure	Amount: Transportation items only	Amount: Items other than transportation
July 11. Washington, D. C., to New York, N. Y., via Pennsylvania R. R. (Pullman included)	$11.91
Transfer of baggage, home to station, Washington	1.90
Tip to station porter, Washington	.25
July 12 Tip to Pullman porter, New York	.25
Tip to station porter, New York	.25
Transfer of baggage, station to hotel	.75
Tip to hotel porter	.25
Transfer of baggage, hotel to dock	.75
Tip to hotel porter	.25
Tip to porter at dock	.25
July 12. Sailed steamship Berengaria New York to London	278.85
Steamer chair	2.00
Tip to deck steward	5.00
Tip to cabin steward	5.00
July 19. Arrived in London (remained in London, July 19 to 26, 1924, inclusive).
July 27. Left London for Paris	35.00
July 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31, inclusive, spent in Paris in connection with matters re French subrogation cases; reimbursement for traveling expenses from July 27 to July 31, 1924, inclusive, at $4 per diem in lieu of subsistence		$20.00
Aug. 1. Left Paris for Naples
Aug. 7. Sailed from Naples for New York, steamship Duilio (claimed fare from Paris to New York)	296.25
Tip to deck steward	5.00
Tip to cabin steward	5.00
Steamer chair	2.00
Aug. 17. Arrived in New York
Tip to porter at dock	.25
Transfer of baggage, dock to station	1.00
Tip to station porter, New York	.25
Left New York for Washington (Pennsylvania R. R.)	10.04
Tip to Pullman porter	.25
Tip to station porter, Washington	.25
Transfer of baggage, station to home	1.90
Reimbursement for traveling expenses July 17, 1925, at $4 per diem in lieu of subsistence		4.00

Itemized schedule of travel expenses and other expenses incurred under stress of urgent or unforseen public necessity—Contd.

Date, 1927, and character of expenditure	Amount: Transportation items only	Amount: Items other than transportation
Aug. 17. Baggage consisted of a trunk and two suit cases. The two latter were too heavy to carry. Receipts for the above travel have been lost and it is impracticable to secure duplicates.
Total	$664.85	$24.00
Total of column 1		664.85
Total of column 2		24.00
Total		688.85

Mr. BLANTON. And here is a copy of General Hines's decision refusing to allow all of this account to William Wolff Smith, certifying that Smith went abroad for personal reasons to attend the American Bar Association Convention:

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR.

To ASSISTANT DIRECTOR, Finance Service.
From the DIRECTOR.
Subject: Travel expenses—general counsel—re: Subrogation cases.

It would appear proper to me for the Government to stand the transportation expenses from London to Paris and return for the conferences referred to of July 28, 29, 30, and 31.

In view of the fact that the general counsel went abroad for the purpose of attending the meeting of the American Bar Association in London, and this attendance was for personal reasons, I do not feel justified in authorizing his transportation at Government expense to and from England.

FRANK T. HINES, Director.

And here is the travel account for his other trip abroad that William Wolff Smith tried to get out of the Government, and did get the major part of it, to wit:

Itemized schedule of travel and other expenses

1927	Character of expenditure	Amount
Sept. 9	Leave Washington, D. C., 12.25 a. m., arrive New York, N. Y. 6 a. m.
	Hotel porter (3 pieces) Washington, D. C.	$0.25
	Taxi to station from hotel, Washington,, D. C.	1.00
	Transfer of trunk from Washington, D. C., to New York City dock (including 3 pieces baggage)	3.30
	Station porter, tip	.25
Sept. 10	Pullman porter, tip	.25
	Station porter, New York City	.25
	Taxi to hotel from station	1.00
	Hotel porter, tip (arrival)	.25
	Taxi to dock from hotel	1.25
	Hotel, New York City (room)	2.50
	Hotel porter (leaving)	.25
	Transfer of trunk from boat to Cherbourg, France, to Paris	2.50
	Dock porter (6 pieces) 25 cents each	1.50
10	Leave New York City 10 a. m. steamship Leviathan.
16	On board Leviathan.
16	Arrive Cherbourg, France, 4.29 a. m.
	Leave Cherbourg, France, 10.30 a. m.
	Arrive Paris, France, 4.20 p. m.	Francs
	Porter from boat to tender	20
	Tender through customs to station	20
	Stateroom steward	$6.00
	Dining-room steward	$5.00
	Deck steward	$2.00
	Cabin boy (shoe shine)	$1.00
	Steamer chair	$2.00
	Steamer rug	$1.00
		Francs
	Train porter (Pullman)	10
	Station porter (Paris)	10
	Hotel porter (Paris)	40
	Taxi from station to hotel	30
17	Taxi from hotel to Trocadero (convention hall), Paris; necessary on account of official papers being carried	16
18	----do	16
19	----do	16
20	----do	16
21	----do	16
22	----do	16
23	----do	16
24	----do	16
25–29	Paris, France.
29	Leave Paris 12 noon (personal business).
Oct. 11	Arrive Paris 9 a. m.
	Leave Paris 9.35 a. m.
	Taxi from hotel to railroad station, Paris	30
	Hotel porter	40
	Station porter	10

Itemized schedule of travel and other expenses—Continued

	Character of expenditure	Amount
1927
	Train porter (Pullman)	$0.10
	Porter baggage station through customs	.20
	Customs to tender	.20
	Transfer of trunk from Paris to boat in Cherbourg (not included in railroad ticket)	1.42
Oct. 11	Railroad fare Paris to Cherbourg, France	10.00
	Leave Cherbourg 7.30 p. m.
12-17	On steamship Leviathan.
	Stateroom steward	6.00
	Dining-room steward	5.00
	Deck steward	2.00
	Cabin boy (shoe shine)	1.00
	Steamer chair	2.00
	Steamer rug	1.00
17	Arrive New York 10 a. m.
	Dock porter (6 pieces)	1.50
	Transfer of trunk and baggage from dock to hotel, New York City	3.00
	Taxi, dock to hotel	1.50
	Hotel porter	.25
18	New York City.
19	Leave New York City 12.40 a. m.
	Hotel porter	.25
	Station porter	.25
	Taxi from hotel to station	1.00
	Pullman porter	.25
	Arrive Washington, D. C., 7.05 a. m.
	Taxi from station to hotel	1.00
	Transfer of trunk and baggage	.75
	Station porter	.25
	Hotel porter	.25
Sept. 9	Per diem	6.00
10	To noon, $3; from noon to midnight, $3.50	6.50
11-29	Noon, 18½ days, at $7	129.50
Oct. 1	From noon to midnight	3.50
12-16	5 days, at $7	35.00
17	To 10 a. m., $3.50; from noon to midnight, $3	6.50
18	Per diem	6.00
19	do	3.00
	Baggage too heavy to carry (6 pieces).

Mr. BLANTON. And the following two documents executed by General Hines will throw some light to this trip abroad:

OCTOBER 21, 1927.

Maj. WILLIAM WOLFF SMITH,
General Counsel United States Veterans' Bureau,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The travel order issued to you under date of August 2, 1927, is hereby amended for the purpose of authorizing your detail in New York City, N. Y., for a period not to exceed two days for the purpose of attending the ratifying convention of the American Legion, held in that city on October 18.

No additional transportation expenses are involved. Six dollars per diem in lieu of subsistence will be allowed (D. O.—Convention).

This travel order is issued in accordance with Public Act No. 600, making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, etc., which states that not to exceed $4,000 may be expended by the Veterans' Bureau from the appropriation "Salaries and expenses, Veterans' Bureau, 1928," for the expenses, except membership fees, of employees detailed by the director to attend meetings of associations for the promotion of medical science and annual national conventions of such organizations as may be recognized by the director in the presentation or adjudication of claims under authority of section 500 of the World War veterans' act, as amended, including reimbursement to employees, for similar travel heretofore authorized, from the appropriation for the fiscal year in which the travel was performed.

Very truly yours,

FRANK T. HINES, Director.

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU,
Washington, November 3, 1927.

Maj. WILLIAM WOLFF SMITH,
Room 1046, Arlington Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In the audit of your account for the period from September 9, 1927, to October 19, 1927, in which you claim $286, it has been found necessary to make deductions in the aggregate of $18.19, as indicated below; therefore, your account has been approved in the sum of $267.81 instead of the amount claimed.

Prorate reduction to bring expenses within appropriation of $4,000.

For the director:

HAROLD W. BREINING,
Assistant Director.

Mr. BLANTON. I want my colleagues to note that this William Wolff Smith, general counsel of the Veterans' Bureau, has been traveling all over the United States and Europe having a good time ever since he entered the bureau in 1923. And remember that he draws a salary of $9,000 per year and additional retired pay of $187.50 per month as a disabled officer, when he had only 13 days' service before the armistice. Note that he pays $5 tips on boats and $2 for steamer chairs to recline in, and is generous with public money Congress gave the Veterans' Administration to use in granting relief to sick and disabled veterans.

I do want to commend the bureau for the fact that when he went to Europe they would not allow all of his expenses. They only allowed certain parts of same. General Hines cut the rest of it off, and I want to commend him for it. But he should not have allowed him to go at all.

It is ridiculous and absurd for every department of Government to let their little bureau chiefs travel all over the United States and Europe at Government expense. You will find that the travel account of almost every bureau chief or subbureau chief in the United States and out of it amounts, in some cases, to more than his salary.

This condition exists in every bureau; and if you will read the hearings of the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations in bringing out the various supply bills, you will find that the traveling-expense accounts that have been submitted are astounding. We must put a stronger limitation on them. They are going to bankrupt the Government if we do not stop them. I want you to carefully look over these travel accounts of William Wolff Smith.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. How is he getting along? How does he feel these days?

Mr. BLANTON. Well, he is taking up hospital space in Mount Alto Hospital now that some disabled veteran ought to be occupying. I have applications from bedridden veterans, veterans who saw the front with my colleague from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], who are afflicted with wounds from shot and shell. They are bedridden now and can not get in a hospital and this great general counsel is occupying a room over there that they ought to have. He is not entitled to it by law and the Government ought not to be paying for it. If we made him go to a private hospital and pay his own expenses he would get well very quickly.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. We would at least find out whether he is well and able to perform his duties or is really sick.

Mr. BLANTON. When I was on the bench I was trying a murder case once, and I had a big bunch of veniremen summoned to pick the jury from, and there must have been 150 witnesses there, summoned from all over the State. Some of them were prominent physicians and surgeons who were away from their practice, and when the case was called the defendant was not there and his lawyers stated he was sick and could not be tried.

He was down at his home, 7 or 8 miles distant. They said he was unable to come to court, because he was very sick, and they produced a doctor's certificate. I called three of the best doctors in town and said, "You go down there, take a stretcher and the sheriff, and if the man is really sick, leave him there. But if you think he is simulating, if you think he is able to come to court, you bring him back," and they brought him into court on the stretcher. After the district attorney began the examination of witnesses he waked up and began to take an interest in the proceedings, and appeared as well as anybody. That is my idea of this man's trouble out to Mount Alto. He does not want to be tried. He does not want to answer some pertinent questions that I am going to ask him.

The Clerk read as follows:

For any expense of the Library of Congress Trust Fund Board not properly chargeable to the income of any trust fund held by the board, $500.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to call attention to the fact that once more the appropriation for the Library of Congress has received the approval of this body without criticism, barring only that of one minor function imposed upon it by Congress itself.

Whenever one of the agencies of the Government succeeds year after year in thus fully meeting the approval of our Appropriating Committee, and of the House itself, it is testimony to the efficiency of the administration thereof that ought to have at least a word of recognition.

While I am on my feet I would like to get in the RECORD another word of recognition. It may not be given in any official way but ought to be made as an acknowledgment of the gratitude of the Government for the beautiful building, with its wonderful collection, known as the Folger Shakespeare Library [applause], which was added formally to the attractions of the Capital a few days ago.

While the giver intrusted the care of this to the trustees of one of our colleges, it is in essence a gift to the Nation, a contribution to the culture of America that we may well here recognize with a word of thankfulness for the lofty spirit of the man who made a gift we shall always prize by reason of its adornment of the Capital, its contribution to scholarship, and its fitting tribute to the greatest of all the writers of the English language. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

Public printing and binding: To provide the Public Printer with a working capital for the following purposes for the execution of printing, binding, lithographing, mapping, engraving, and other authorized work of the Government Printing Office for the various branches of the Government: For salaries of Public Printer, $10,000, and Deputy Public Printer, $7,500; for salaries, compensation, or wages of all necessary officers and employees additional to those herein appropriated for, including employees necessary to handle waste paper and condemned material for sale; to enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of law granting holidays and half holidays and Executive orders granting holidays and half holidays with pay to employees; to enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of law granting 30 days' annual leave to employees with pay; rent, fuel, gas, heat, electric current, gas and electric fixtures, bicycles, motor-propelled vehicles for the carriage of printing and printing supplies, and the maintenance, repair, and operation of the same, to be used only for official purposes, including operation, repair, and maintenance of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for official use of the officers of the Government Printing Office when in writing ordered by the Public Printer; freight, expressage, telegraph, and telephone service; furniture, typewriters, and carpets; traveling expenses; stationery, postage, and advertising; directors, technical books, newspapers and magazines, and books of reference (not exceeding $500); adding and numbering machines, time stamps, and other machines of similar character; rubber boots, coats, and gloves; machinery (not exceeding $300,000); equipment, and for repairs to machinery, implements, and buildings, and for minor alterations to buildings; necessary equipment, maintenance, and supplies for the emergency room for the use of all employees in the Government Printing Office who may be taken suddenly ill or receive injury while on duty; other necessary contingent and miscellaneous items authorized by the Public Printer: Provided, That inks, glues, and other supplies manufactured by the Government Printing Office in connection with its work may be furnished to departments and other establishments of the Government upon requisition, and payment made from appropriations available therefor; for expenses authorized in writing by the Joint Committee on Printing for the inspection of printing and binding equipment, material, and supplies and Government printing plants in the District of Columbia or elsewhere (not exceeding $1,000); for salaries and expenses of preparing the semimonthly and session indexes of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing (chief indexer at $3,480, 1 cataloguer at $3,180, 2 cataloguers at $2,460 each, and 1 cataloguer at $2,100); and for all the necessary labor, paper, materials, and equipment needed in the prosecution and delivery and mailing of the work; in all $3,000,000, of which $500,000 shall be immediately available, to which shall be charged the printing and binding authorized to be done for Congress, the printing and binding for use of the Government Printing Office, and printing and binding (not exceeding $2,000) for official use of the Architect of the Capitol when authorized by the Secretary of the Senate; in all to an amount not exceeding this sum.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I do so to ask the chairman of the subcommittee a question. Are there many reductions made in appropriations this year—in the appropriation for the same activity in the last appropriation bill? I refer to the appropriations in the Government Printing Office.

Mr. SANDLIN. Not under the Printing Office. The appropriations for printing for the other departments are in other bills. These appropriations are for the legislative printing.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In all the confusion, turmoil, excitement, noise, and stampede for economy we have heard and read in the newspapers that economies were going to be made in the public printing. I hope we have not arrived at that stage where it will be impossible for the people of the country to get any public documents on request. Does the gentleman know just how far this economy plan is going to cut into the appropriation for the Government Printing Office?

Mr. SANDLIN. I can not give the gentleman the information. I am not a member of the Economy Committee. Their bill was not available until a short time ago.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman will be on guard to see that as far as it is necessary the printing for the legislative branch and the printing for the Government will not be curtailed beyond necessity?

Mr. SANDLIN. I do not think there ought to be any economy that would interfere with the proper administration of any department.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I think most of the Representatives do not understand the significance of this item which is carried in this bill. Last year $2,500,000 was carried and this year this has been raised to $3,000,000. The object of this item is to cover the cost of printing done for the legislative branches of the Congress. We have over here a public-printing plant which does the printing for all departments of the Government. That plant is supposed to be operated at cost. All the work that goes through the plant is charged up at a certain figure, and all collected from it equals the amount paid out, with a profit of about $80,000 a year, which goes into the Treasury. It has been necessary to raise the amount of $2,500,000 to $3,000,000 because the smaller amount does not cover the cost of printing that we have had done for the Congress this year. I have been making some inquiry about this. In private industry a man who has a job of printing done wants to know what he is going to pay for the job before he gets it done.

In the Congress of the United States I have found nobody who has any supervision in any way, shape, or form over the amount of printing that is done for the Congress. A resolution is brought in authorizing a committee to have certain printing done. The chairman of that committee or the clerk sends the work to the Public Printing Office to be done. Nothing whatever is known about the cost of the job to be done. Cost has no determining factor with what is printed or how much. The result is that our printing bill mounts higher and higher each year. Of course, gentlemen have heard the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD talked about and its costing so much per page. It costs about $42 a page as it runs, and more when the copies are bound. That runs to about $600,000 in a session, and in a long session like this it will run nearer $750,000. The thought I have in mind is that no person, no committee, no authority in this Congress has anything to say about how much printing shall be done or what the cost of the printing is.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. Under the rules of the House a certain number of copies of each document is permitted to be printed. Does the gentleman maintain that the Public Printer prints any number that he desires in disregard of the rules and laws of the House?

Mr. HARDY. No; I do not refer to that at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is all established by a rule of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. HARDY. What I mean is how many pages of a document you are going to have printed. They do not consider the cost of these hearings before they are ordered. We do not consider the cost of anything here. We get done what we want done. Who sets the charges? The Public Printer, of course. He tries to set them at actual cost. The cost is high as printing goes, and there is a reason for this which I shall explain.

Mr. ARENTZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. ARENTZ. The other day the gentleman was speaking about the cost of hearings before the different committees and the amount of material that is inserted in some hearings which might just as well be left out. Along that line it seems to me that the committee, whether it is a subcommittee or a full committee, should be able to audit its hearings and delete such portions as are either duplications or are useless, with the result that the argument the gentleman uses against some of these hearings would not lie. It certainly would be a saving in money if it is done.

I admit that oftentimes these hearings contain a great deal of matter that is irrelevant and useless, but at the same time the committee could cut that down to a point where all of the meat of the arguments would be in the hearings and at the same time a saving effected.

Mr. HARDY. The gentleman is entirely right about it. I am not finding fault with any particular thing whatever, but I do want to call attention to the cost of things done for the Congress at the Public Printing Office. A page of 10-point type in hearings like the one I hold in my hand costs $5.22. If there are figures in it, it may cost $12 a page, and if there is heavy tabular work it will cost $21 a page. The average cost per page of hearings runs about $10.

I am going now to take the time to tell a few things about the public-printing plant. We have the finest job-printing plant in the world, perhaps. We do about $14,500,000 worth of printing annually in that shop, all done for Government activities. The printing plant cost about $4,500,000 and the equipment has cost about $4,500,000. We have $9,000,000 invested in the plant. It occupies 22 acres of floor space. There are 404 typesetting machines, including 175 linotypes; fast-running presses, every imaginable modern improvement and equipment that a printing plant could desire. They have laboratories for the testing of paper and materials, and they make their own printing ink. They have a fine modern photo-engraving plant for making cuts, and so forth. They have a large binding establishment. The plant is kept in the finest condition of any printing plant in the country. About $300,000 a year is spent for its improvement and in the replacement of materials. It employs 5,040 people. The best working conditions prevail there of any printing plant in the country. The job printers get from $1 to $1.05 an hour, the linotype printers $1.05 to $1.15 an hour with 15 per cent extra for night work, one and a half times that scale for Sundays and holiday work, 30 days' annual vacation, all of the holidays, and the Saturday afternoons off with pay. The Saturday afternoon off that we inaugurated last year cost $500,000 annually and added 6½ per cent to the cost of printing.

Jobs are under the civil service, and the retirement act gives the workers a feeling of security not felt in private industry.

Much of the work is done under high pressure, rush jobs that have to be gotten out regardless of cost. The business man back home is careful about having his work done so as not to have to pay extra for overtime for his work. Government officials and employees are not so careful. About 1,000 people are being employed at night-work rates at the public-printing plant at this time. This is what helps to make Government printing expensive.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 39, line 8, strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That all envelopes furnished for the speeches of Members shall be paid for at 10 per cent above cost."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I think it is a limitation. If the Members order speeches which are in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to be printed for them in pamphlet form, the Members pay for those speeches. An effort was made some years ago by the Joint Committee on Printing to provide that the Members should also pay for the cheap manila envelope in which the speeches are placed.

Members are frequently charged that speeches are printed at Government expense. They are not. The envelope is given to the Member free of cost. It is a very small cost, it is true; but if the Members were obligated by an amendment like this to pay the trifling cost of the light-weight manila envelopes in which the printed speeches are sent out, plus 10 per cent, they would be then free to say that the speeches were not printed at Government cost, and the Government would be the gainer 10 per cent above the cost of the envelopes. I had hoped that this would not be considered out of order. It will raise a little money for the Government. It will leave the Members of Congress in a correct position in their statements that they are printing speeches entirely at their own expense.

Only the other day I passed the minority or the majority room and I saw sacks and sacks and sacks of matter being sent out, undoubtedly political speeches made by Members. There should not be a cent of cost to the Government, as far as we can relieve the Government of this cost, in behalf of every Member who sends out speeches, whether he is engaged in an effort to retain his seat in the House of Representatives or to help the political party to which he belongs. I am quite serious about this, and I hope the amendment will be adopted. I do not care whether the saving to the Treasury is small or large. Probably it is simply one of these little leaks that no one watches.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I urge the point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, may we again have the amendment reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again reported the amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I press the point of order. It is a limitation.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, it is not quite a limitation, but it is money saving.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make his point of order?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, it comes within the third section of the Holman rule, which states that "or by reduction of the amount of money covered by the bill." On the face of it, it shows there will be a saving to the Treasury of the United States. Because of that fact, it is in order on this paragraph, which relates to the printing of envelopes as well as other printing for the use of Members of Congress and others.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, it does more than that. It provides for the sale of those envelopes at a profit. It is the same as if it provided for a fee for a service.

Mr. STAFFORD. To that extent it saves more for the Government. Under the provision of the Holman rule it is in order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is so valuable for the membership that I hope the gentleman will not press the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WARREN). The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair does not think the amendment is germane, nor does the Chair think it comes within the meaning of the third provision of the Holman rule, because it does not seek to reduce an appropriation; but in the opinion of the Chair, it seeks to raise revenue.

Therefore the Chair will hold that it is not germane, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, for a great many years I served as a member of the Joint Committee on Printing. Back in the days when Champ Clark was Speaker and Woodrow Wilson was President a gentleman from Indiana, Mr. Barnhart, brought out a printing reform bill from that committee. The rules in those days with regard to Calendar Wednesday permitted every single Wednesday in a session to be used by one committee. That printing reform bill was used as a buffer on every Wednesday for two solid sessions against other legislation. It contained many desirable reforms. It would have saved millions of dollars. At one time, shortly after the armistice, by a rider to an appropriation bill, I saved six or seven million dollars in one year alone in an effort at printing reform. The method was changed completely.

Now, with reference to the amendment I have offered, I am sorry it is subject to a point of order, as at the moment I see no other way to offer it. If I buy $500 worth of my printed speeches made on this floor and reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, perhaps with a small extension, should I not be able to pay $40 or $50 more for the manila envelopes as long as I am paying for the printing of the speech itself?

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield.

Mr. ARENTZ. Does the gentleman not think the Members ought to pay for envelopes in which are sent out farm bulletins? If they must pay for the envelopes which contain their speeches, let us pay for all of them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, no. The answer to that is very simple. We authorized the distribution of certain Government documents, and they are printed by the Government, to addresses furnished by us on the theory that our constituents need the information in that bulletin. But if I send a speech, no one has asked me to send that speech. It is volunteered on my part. The speech may or may not convey some information of value, but it is mainly sent out in behalf of the Member.

Mr. ARENTZ. No one asks you to send them a list of farm bulletins, do they?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. And I do not do it, either, as a volunteer proposition.

Mr. ARENTZ. But some of us do.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I yield.

Mr. STEVENSON. I think the gentleman's amendment is a very judicious one, except that I do not think the Members should be penalized by charging them 10 per cent profit.

Mr. SANDLIN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON] that I think a proper amendment to meet the situation would be the following: "Provided, That no funds appropriated herein shall be used to pay for envelopes to be used in sending out speeches."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will not the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee offer such an amendment himself?

Mr. SANDLIN. If the gentleman suggests such an amendment, I shall accept it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, to give the gentleman time to prepare his amendment, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, with all due regard to the criticism that is made by our friends the newspaper boys of Members sending out excerpts from the RECORD, I think it is of more benefit to the people of the United States than all the rest of the money that is spent by the Government. Members pay for the expense of printing the excerpts. And the small cost to the Government is negligible.

Suppose the big newspapers should get it in for our friend from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] because he voted with us to kill the sales tax, because he does this, or because he does that, and they play him up in an improper way before his people or before the people of the country. He has his redress. He can have reprints made of what he did say from the daily RECORD of this Congress and send it to the people, if he wants to pay for the printing of the speeches.

Suppose the dry people in the United States—and there are some of them outside of Congress as well as in, in Illinois and in other places—in Illinois on election day, in Illinois on primary day. [Laughter.] Suppose they get it in for our friend from New York because he is a wet and they played him up. He has got a right to show what his exact stand is. It is a very valuable right and of interest to all of the people.

A very prominent newspaper reporter in the Capitol who reports for a whole string of papers told me the other day that they liked Senator SHEPPARD; that Senator SHEPPARD was one of the finest of fellows and was a personal friend, but their papers were wet and would not permit them to ever play him up in a proper way because he was an extreme dry. Is not that unfortunate for Senator SHEPPARD? But that situation does exist. The boys in the gallery take likes and dislikes to us because we are either for or against something they want. That is shown here and there in their little articles. They are human beings just like everybody else. We can not blame them; they are human. That is exemplified in the kind of articles they send out.

I used to think the Associated Press was the gospel. I believed everything I saw with "A. P." on it. Their representatives are splendid young fellows, but sometimes they take dislikes to us and their articles are colored by the way they feel at the time they write the articles. Associated Press dispatches were sent to the Dallas News and the San Antonio Express, two big papers in my State, about what once transpired here on the floor, but the Associated Press article on that matter that appeared in my home paper was entirely different and did me a great injustice. When I checked the matter up with the papers it developed in this instance that when the national Associated Press article reached Dallas it was there rewritten and the part that went to my home was specially edited. That is the way they are handled.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is a daily protection for every Member of Congress. It is a protection to the people the Members of Congress represent. Never take away the right of Congressmen to send excerpts from the RECORD to the people.

Did you know that I have had speeches of my colleagues printed at my own expense? I have had reprints made of speeches of different colleagues that struck me as being of outstanding value, that were in the interest of the people of this country, paid for it out of my pocket, and sent them to the people of the country. That is the way to let the people of the country know exactly what they want to know. Now, that the gentleman has his amendment ready, I will yield the floor.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 39, line 8, strike out the period, insert a colon and add the following: "Provided, That no funds appropriated herein shall be used to pay for envelopes in which speeches of Members are wrapped or mailed."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment in that it implies an investigation on the part of the Public Printer to ascertain what goes into the envelopes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I reply to the point of order by stating that nothing is supposed to go into any franked envelope that is not an official statement from this RECORD.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Suppose we send parts of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; what would happen in that case?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington is proper. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, may I say just a few words in support of the amendment? The cost of these envelopes in very large quantities will be very small. I imagine they can be bought now as low as 65 cents a thousand, and by paying that small charge the Members will relieve themselves of criticism, and it will be a trifling, petty charge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. As the amendment is drawn, and we saw how hurriedly it was drawn, it does not do what the gentleman has in mind.

I submit that we may draw envelopes to send out speeches or any part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. We may draw envelopes and send out any public document, but if we have reprints made—I do not know whether that is what the gentleman from Washington has in mind or not—of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, then it would seem that no part of the funds appropriated shall be used for such envelopes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman says draw envelopes. He means from the small stationery allowance?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; I do not. I refer to manila envelopes which are marked "Part of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD." I do not know what I will do to comply with the gentleman's requirements, unless I submit everything I send out to the Public Printer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I venture the assertion that the gentleman uses his stationery allowance in a month.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. How much would this save the Government of the United States altogether?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I do not think it would be very much.

Mr. SIROVICH. Would it be $2,000 or $3,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It would be a great deal more.

Mr. SIROVICH. How much?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] said it would not save the Government $5,000 a year.

Mr. SIROVICH. How much does the gentleman from Texas say it would save?

Mr. BLANTON. It is such a bagatelle compared with other savings we might make. Let us go after the hundreds of millions of dollars of waste. Let us go after the big waste and not after these bagatelles.

Mr. ARENTZ. In our office we have a series of envelopes running from the size of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD down to the smaller sizes. Does the gentleman refer to the medium-size envelopes or the smaller envelopes?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Envelopes in which are placed the printed speeches of the Members, paid for by themselves, extracts from the RECORD which are sent to the public.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Now, gentlemen, I submit that after all we have certain responsibilities here as legislators. When I am requested to send out any part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or the complete RECORD, or any public document, I do so as a part of my official duties. Therefore, I believe we should be provided with envelopes in which to send out those matters. I know there is a great deal of timidity on the part of some of the Members by reason of this mania, this hysteria, and this insane drive for economy. I for one am not ashamed nor afraid. I am going to stand up and I am going to resist it because I know the source from which it comes. I think it is wrong for the gentleman or anybody else to take the floor to-day and make a grand-stand play on this question of envelopes. I do not know how other Members feel about it, but I say it is picayune, and I say it is unworthy of even receiving the attention of this House.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Right now I am getting several hundred requests a day from people scattered here and there in all the States to send them copies of House Joint Resolution 355. Suppose I did not have the right to send them in Government envelopes? Suppose I had to pay for the envelopes in which to send them? I would not send them. Your constituents are writing me for them, and I send them. I paid to have extra copies of the resolution printed, but the Government ought to furnish the envelopes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Every Member of Congress must go into his own pay to do some of the necessary research work connected with our legislative duties. Many Members specialize in certain branches of legislation and they get demands from all over the country and not alone from their own districts. I get mail from other districts, as the gentleman from Texas stated, and other Members do. I get requests from all parts of the country as to matters in which I have taken an active interest. I could not afford to buy the envelopes necessary to send out all of the information that was requested of me with reference to the tax bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If the gentleman will permit, I will ask unanimous consent to insert, after the words "speeches of Members," the words "printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and reprinted."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. This is the third time we have had an amendment of this kind. Gentlemen, let us vote it down.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do not want to detain unduly the committee, but I would like to know precisely upon what I am voting in connection with this proposition. I think it is a small matter and it may be there is no vast economy involved in the proposition, yet it does present a principle that might make an appeal to some members of the committee.

We have a stationery allowance or account of $125 a session, and I understand that when we draw these manila envelopes that are sent to our offices to send out bills and things of that sort, they are charged to this stationery account. Is that true?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not sent out a speech to my district, except to two counties a few days ago, for 10 years, so I am not familiar with what goes on in this regard. I would like to have this explained so we will know exactly what is involved if the amendment should be agreed to.

I am not at all inclined to support the amendment unless it involves the proposition where a Member for political purposes wants to send out a vast number of speeches, aside from the employment of correspondence as to his usual official duties. In this event there may be some merit in the gentleman's suggestion that the Member ought to pay for it, inasmuch as it is a matter of promoting his personal preferment. Is that the question involved?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; that is it. Let me read the amendment as it would read if I may be permitted to amend it:

Provided, That no funds appropriated herein shall be used to pay for envelopes in which speeches of Members printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and reprinted are wrapped or mailed.

This limits it entirely to paying the small cost of the envelope for the speeches that you do pay for.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, how is this going to be determined? The printer or the people who wrap and mail these things would not wrap or mail them until the Member has some idea of how much the envelopes are going to cost.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is not it. The gentleman is the hard-working chairman of the Committee on Printing, and the gentleman knows that if a Member orders 1,000 or 5,000 or 20,000 speeches he gets an estimate of the cost and a bill and he pays the bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. And he would pay for these envelopes at the time he pays for the speeches?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; that is the whole purpose of the amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. Has the gentleman taken out that provision that provided for payment of 10 per cent profit?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is out of it. When he orders an estimate of the cost of the speeches, he would get an estimate on the cost of the cheap envelopes which the Government is now compelled to pay for.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman from Alabama said that the Members of the House have an allowance of $125 for stationery. If the economy bill passes, the gentleman can say that the Members formerly had that allowance.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is that the contribution my friend desired to make to this debate?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The Economy Committee has edged in on the stationery allowance and also on the mileage.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington) there were—ayes 6, noes 47.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

No part of any money appropriated in this act shall be paid to any person employed in the Government Printing Office while detailed for or performing service in any other executive branch of the public service of the United States unless such detail be authorized by law.

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SANDLIN: On page 41, after line 3, insert the following new paragraph:

"The Public Printer may continue the employment under his jurisdiction of Samuel Robinson, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD messenger, notwithstanding the provisions of any act prohibiting his employment because of age."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I think it would be rather charitable to really retire some of our good, old, faithful employees.

Mr. SANDLIN. Does not the gentleman think Sam is faithful?

Mr. STAFFORD. I like him as well as I do any person about the Capitol.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, he is up here at nights until 1 o'clock.

Mr. STAFFORD. I sometimes think it would really be charitable to some of these old employees to really force them from the pay roll of the Government, so they may have a little retirement and not drop dead in their tracks.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman knows that Sam is the youngest old man around the Capitol.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama, and I recall the deserved tribute the gentleman from Alabama paid to the person under consideration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I agree with him that probably, as a general proposition, his attitude might be justified, but there is a matter not only of sentiment involved here with reference to this amendment, but this old man is peculiarly well acquainted with all the Members——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to press the point of order, but the responsibility of his dropping dead or being struck by a passing automobile in his advancing years will not be upon me if I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Sam would rather be struck dead than have his salary taken away from him.

Mr. STAFFORD. He would have retirement pay and good retirement pay.

I do not press the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In order to keep the expenditures for printing and binding for the fiscal year 1933 within or under the appropriations for such fiscal year, the heads of the various executive departments and independent establishments are authorized to discontinue the printing of annual or special reports under their respective jurisdictions: Provided, That where the printing of such reports is discontinued the original copy thereof shall be kept on file in the offices of the heads of the respective departments or independent establishments for public inspection.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Goss: Page 42, line 17, after the word "inspection," insert a new paragraph as follows:

"That in the expenditure of appropriations in this act each contracting officer shall, unless in his discretion the interest of the Government will not permit, purchase or contract for within the limits of the United States, only articles of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States, notwithstanding that such articles of the growth, production, or manufacture of the United States may cost more, if such excess of cost be not unreasonable."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I offered the amendment to this appropriation bill because it appears in all the other bills. If there is a purchase of any large amount of supplies for the Government Printing Office, like paper and other things, they could carry out and function the same as other departments of the Government. I recognize that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOSS. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is quite well acquainted with the fact that foreign sulphite is used in the manufacture of paper in this country.

Mr. GOSS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Under this amendment, the American mills, which buy raw Swedish sulphite pulp, would be barred from selling their product to the Government Printing Office.

Mr. GOSS. Not at all; if the contracting officer feels that, in his discretion——

Mr. STAFFORD. In my city there are cardboard manufacturers who find it necessary to purchase foreign pulp, and they would be barred from contracting with the Government Printing Office to supply their manufactures.

Mr. GOSS. I think if the gentleman will examine my amendment, he will see that it does not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchases may be made from the foregoing appropriation under the "Government Printing Office," as provided for in the printing act approved January 12, 1895, and without reference to section 4 of the act approved June 17, 1910 (U. S. C., title 41, sec. 7), concerning purchases for executive departments.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. Mr. Chairman, I offered my amendment to the other paragraph because I thought that it would protect us better. I would like to hear from the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. SANDLIN. I made no point of order against the gentleman's amendment. The Government is making purchases of general supplies under the act of 1910, and this permits them to make the purchases without reference to that act.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. No part of the funds herein appropriated shall be used for the maintenance or care of private vehicles.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment as a new section that I desire to offer following section 2.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Colorado that it was the purpose of the Chair at this time, the reading of the bill having been concluded down to the bottom of page 42, to recognize the gentleman from Louisiana to move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. STAFFORD. That will not prevent the gentleman from Colorado offering his amendment when the committee resumes its session.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not; and the Chair will recognize him for that purpose and for the purpose of having the amendment reported.

Mr. HARDY. I think if the chairman of the subcommittee will permit the amendment to be offered now it will be a good deal better than to take it up to-morrow, when we have this large omnibus bill to consider.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HARDY: Page 42, after line 25, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3. The salaries of Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners shall be at the rate of $9,000 per annum during the fiscal year 1933."

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order to offer a substitute to that amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman, of course, can offer a substitute; but the Chair suggests that the substitute be offered when the committee again resumes its session. The Chair stated that he was going to recognize the gentleman from Louisiana to move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BACON. I ask unanimous consent that the substitute be read now for information.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute by Mr. BACON for the amendment offered by Mr. HARDY:

"After June 30, 1932, the compensation of Senators, Representatives in Congress, Delegates from the Territories, Resident Commissioners from Porto Rico, and Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands shall be at the rate of $7,500 per annum."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 11267 and had come to no resolution thereon.

EVENING SESSION—RULES OF PROCEDURE

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent has been granted for the consideration of bills unobjected to on the Private Calendar in the House as in the Committee of the Whole from 8 o'clock until 11 o'clock to-night, and it is the understanding of the Chair that they will be considered under the rules of the House in existence at the time that that consent was granted—that is, that one objection will be sufficient to prevent the consideration of a bill. The Chair thinks he should make this statement at this time because he is going to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] to act as Speaker pro tempore to-night.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. IGOE, on account of illness.

To Mr. CHAVEZ, for to-day, on account of illness.

RECESS

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now stand in recess until 8 o'clock to-night.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock p. m.) the House stood in recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAINEY, at 8 o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. RAINEY). Under unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into, the House is now in session until 11 o'clock p. m. to-night for the purpose of considering bills, unobjected to, on the Private Calendar, commencing where the call left off on March 9.

May the present occupant of the chair suggest that from the point where the last call stopped to the end of this calendar there are 495 bills. On the 9th of March the House remained in session until 10.30, and it was possible to call only 38 bills. The condition of the public business is such that it may be some time before there is another call of this calendar, and the present occupant of the chair desires to suggest to-night that if parties who object to bills will, as far as possible, make their objections and not reserve them, it will expedite business greatly; and if the proponents of bills desiring to explain their bills will ask permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD, and do it, we will be able to make some considerable progress to-night.

The Chair simply makes these suggestions. The Chair is powerless to carry them into effect, but he submits the matter to Members of the House and to their judgment and asks for their cooperation.

SENELMA WIRKKULA

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to prefer a unanimous-consent request, by direction of the chairman of the Committee on Claims. The Senate passed on yesterday the bill H. R. 1770, with an amendment. By direction of the chairman of the Committee on Claims, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 1770) for the relief of Senelma Wirkkula, also known as Selma Wirkkula, Alice Marie Wirkkula, and Bernice Elaine Wirkkula, with a Senate amendment and agree to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a question of order. Is the bill which the gentleman desires to call up the first bill on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No. It is a bill which has already passed the House and the Senate, with a Senate amendment. The gentleman is asking for consideration of a House bill with a Senate amendment.

Mr. PITTENGER. The House passed the bill, H. R. 1770. When the Senate passed it, it placed on there the 10 per cent attorney's fee limitation, which was overlooked when the House passed the bill. There is no objection to the amendment. In fact, I want it on there.

Mr. STAFFORD. The only question is that we are not privileged, under the order of the House, to consider any business except bills on the Private Calendar. The gentleman can bring it up the first thing to-morrow morning.

Mr. PITTENGER. Well, it is a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair holds it is a unanimous-consent request. The House can do as it pleases.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have already examined the bill, and I understand the Senate amendment is the 10 per cent attorney's-fee clause. I shall not interpose any objection, but it violates the order of the House, which provided for consideration only of bills unobjected to on the Private Calendar after the star.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 15, after "Minnesota," insert: ": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, in view of what the Speaker has said, may I submit an inquiry?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PARKS. I understood it had already been agreed that after to-night we were to have night sessions here to clear up this Private Calendar. Am I correct in that?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no agreement as to that.

Mr. PARKS. I understood the statement had been made, as I read it in the RECORD that we were to have a session night after night until we cleared this calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No. That was to consider other business, the economy program and the legislative bill, but not the Private Calendar. The unanimous-consent request extended only to this evening, and then only until 11 o'clock.

The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar.

FLORIAN FORD

The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 5940, for the relief of Florian Ford.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $175 to Florian Ford, in full settlement for his loss through the burning of his barn and other property, located on land under the police jurisdiction of the Crow Indian Agency, under authorization of Federal officers engaged in the capture of George Bolton on October 29, 1926.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. G. A. BRENNAN

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4244, for the relief of Mrs. G. A. Brennan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

JUDD W. HULBERT

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1921, for the relief of Judd W. Hulbert.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. WEST. Will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. WEST. This bill for the relief of Mr. Hulbert is a meritorious proposition. This bill has been reported before, and the case is one that has received considerable attention, and the facts in the case show that Mr. Judd W. Hulbert is entitled to the relief that is proposed in this bill. I would appreciate it if I may have an opportunity for my colleague, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. DOXEY], who prepared the report on this bill at the last session, to make a statement in connection with it at this time.

Mr. DOXEY. I will ask the gentleman to state his objection if he will, please, so that if I can satisfy it I will be delighted to do so.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. The record shows that the bill has been here before; it has been objected to before. The man received settlement for his injuries, payable at the rate of $66.67 per month, and becoming dissatisfied with the amount of his monthly income, in 1922 he arranged for and obtained a lump-sum settlement of $2,542.73, which has been in his possession since April, 1922. Now he seeks to have the $66.67 reinstated and the full amount paid from the time the $2,542.73 would be paid him as if the $66.67 had been payable to him from April, 1922, to the present time.

He has had two adjudications and now wants a third adjudication. It seems entirely unfair to others who are in like circumstances for him to be permitted to make a guess in 1918, another guess in 1922, another guess in 1930 as to what he might be entitled to receive as proper compensation for the injury suffered.

Mr. DOXEY. If the gentleman from Colorado will withhold his objection for a moment, I will briefly try to explain the cause of the guesses, as the gentleman terms them.

This old man was past 60 years of age when he received this injury. The only information of any kind that I have on it was obtained when I was a member of that committee. I am not now a member of that committee. As the chairman stated, we had quite extensive hearings. This bill was objected to at the last Congress, and after it was objected to the gentleman who objected, after he ascertained the merits of the case, said he wished that he could withdraw his objection and that the bill could be passed.

Mr. Hulbert was awarded $66.67 by the Compensation Commission on account of an 80 per cent disability. According to the hearings and according to the record, this man was persuaded that the amount of his award was going to be reduced, although he was totally disabled; that his award was going to be reduced to $14 at once. We had witnesses before this subcommittee. We ferreted out the reason why the old man wanted a lump-sum settlement and we found it was due to rumors that his award was going to be cut down.

After he received the lump-sum settlement, which, under the law, could be made him at that time, the committee determined that it was absolutely inadequate, that he had been imposed on, that he had been overreached, you might say, not so much by the committee but by possibly those who had advised him. Not only did we have Mr. Hulbert before us but we had the Government doctors examine him, and they reported unanimously that he was not only 80 per cent disabled but totally disabled.

The only relief this bill gives, which is a very nominal relief, is that of reinstating to the extent that he may draw the $66 less the amount of the lump sum paid him. That is the explanation of it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is my impression that some of the gentlemen in the House this evening are under the impression that we are operating under the old rule.

Mr. PATTERSON. We are, according to the statement of the Speaker.

Mr. STAFFORD. We will continue to operate under the old rule for some time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I make the point of order that, the rule having been adopted on Saturday without reservation, the Private Calendar can not be considered under the old rule.

Mr. PARKS. But the agreement to have this night session had been obtained prior to the adoption of that rule.

Mr. O'CONNOR. In that respect, whether or not an agreement was made as to the holding of the night session, on Saturday last we adopted a rule offered by the Rules Committee, of which I am a member, and with which rule I had considerable to do in offering suggested amendments——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order. If we can not carry out the understanding under which we came here to-night, to consider these private bills, there is going to be no night session to-night. This afternoon the Speaker said that we would consider these bills under the old rule, which was in effect at the time we unanimously agreed to have this night session. If that is not going to be carried out, I am going to make a point of no quorum at this moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Speaker made that statement, and the Chair has his statement before him.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the rule under which we are operating. That was the old rule in effect when we made this unanimous-consent agreement. We would not have granted unanimous consent if it had not been for the old rule, because we are not yet prepared to operate under this new rule. We are going to have to organize some machinery, and we are going to organize some machinery. We are going to stop all bad bills if we have to organize in the House to do it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the statement of the Speaker of the House this afternoon. I have no purpose in rising at this time except to see the regularly adopted rules of the House carried out. I know the gentleman from Texas has opposed this progressive rule, as we call it, for the consideration of the Private Calendar. I did want, however, to call the attention of the House to the fact that some day—and we have long waited that day—we must operate under this new rule. Now, if unknown to me the statement of the Speaker of the House this afternoon was that we are operating under the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore made, I withdraw my point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, much as I sympathize with this claimant and his claim, I must object in the interest of fairness to all.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we are operating under the old rule, are we not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. We are.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, to make it clear and so the RECORD may show it at this point, I will state that we are now at this moment, at 8.14 p. m., on the 26th day of April, 1932, operating in violation of the rules of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the Speaker will not so rule.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in defense of the position of the Speaker—in view of the criticism leveled against the ruling of the Speaker, as shown by the attitude of the gentleman from New York here to-night—that the rule which was adopted late on Saturday, with hardly a corporal's guard present, provides that on Saturdays it shall be in order to consider bills on the Private Calendar. It does not prevent unanimous-consent agreements to consider bills unobjected to on the Private Calendar on any other day or at any night session, and that is the way we are proceeding to-night.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, nobody in this House respects the Speaker, his statements, or his submission of unanimous-consent requests to this House more than I do, and any criticism I make is not directed against the Speaker of this House; but I am saying that on Saturday last we adopted a rule which we have been struggling to adopt for years.

Mr. PARKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is, the Clerk will call the next bill.

GALLUS KERCHNER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2027, for the relief of the legal representatives of Gallus Kerchner, deceased.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

WILLIAM BARDEL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4408, for the relief of the estate of William Bardel.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

MRS. J. J. BRADSHAW

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 798, for the relief of Mrs. J. J. Bradshaw.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a similar Senate bill on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the Senate bill for the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill (S. 3095), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to J. J. Bradshaw and Addie C. Bradshaw, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $897 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for hospital and medical expenses and physical pain and suffering due to an injury Addie C. Bradshaw received by being struck by a United States naval ambulance in the city of Norfolk, Va., on or about September 10, 1927.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 798) was laid on the table.

MAY L. MARSHALL, ADMINISTRATRIX

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 804, for the relief of May L. Marshall, administratrix of the estate of Jerry A. Litchfield.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the Secretary of War recommends that the same action be taken in this case as was taken in the claim of George W. Boyer and that it be referred to a court. It seems to me this is the proper action to be taken in order that the matter may be adjudicated by the court. There was a companion case which was so submitted.

Mr. SNOW. The court fixed the responsibility.

Mr. BLANTON. And how much damage was ascertained?

Mr. SNOW. Whatever they claimed.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman from Maine think we ought to take the same action in this case?

Mr. SNOW. No; I think it would be very unfair to force this widow to go into court and take the same action over again when the court has already decided that the United States was responsible for whatever damage there was, including damage to the barge.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman got that decision?

Mr. SNOW. Yes; absolutely.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall not raise any further objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $5,000 to May L. Marshall, administratrix of the estate of Jerry A. Litchfield, who was killed on the night of December 7, 1925, in a collision between the barge Pine Grove and the highway bridge at Coinjock, N. C., while said bridge was owned and operated by the United States, and by the lowering of the draw of said bridge on the pilot house of the barge Pine Grove, in which said Jerry A. Litchfield was a passenger: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to, or received by, any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive, any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding.

SEC. 2. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHASE E. MULINEX

The Clerk called the next bill (H. R. 1230) for the relief of Chase E. Mulinex.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the regulations of the department, they are allowed to credit these accounts up to $10,000 where there is any default or where any money is lost and the amount involved here is less than $1,000. With this precedent established in the Post Office Department, unless I can get some explanation of this matter, I shall object for the time being.

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman will withhold his objection.

Mr. PATTERSON. I withhold it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, we have passed a great number of bills of this type where postmasters have had their funds in banks that failed, and they were only asking for the definite amount they had in the bank less the dividends that were paid them and with the assignment of remaining dividends to the United States. There is no question about this man being owed this money.

Mr. PATTERSON. Does not the Post Office Department have the right to credit this man in this amount, if they see fit to do so, and is not the limit larger than the amount involved in this bill?

Mr. BLACK. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not understand they have such power. We have any number of bills of similar import here.

Mr. PATTERSON. They certainly do in cases of theft.

Mr. BLACK. No. The department has recommended the passage of this bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. I think they have the right to credit his account, anyway.

Mr. STAFFORD. No.

Mr. PATTERSON. They have in the case of loss of postage stamps by theft, for instance.

Mr. STAFFORD. No; not in the case of loss of postage stamps.

Mr. BLACK. We have had a number of bills for all kinds of cases of that sort.

Mr. PATTERSON. But only up to a certain amount.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no general law pertaining to any such policy.

Mr. PATTERSON. No; no law, but a regulation.

Mr. STAFFORD. There could not be a regulation authorizing crediting such accounts in any amount unless it was based upon a law.

Mr. BLACK. I think the gentleman has made a good suggestion and there should be a law to that effect, but until we get a general law I think we should pass these bills.

Mr. PATTERSON. I withdraw my objection in view of the explanation the gentleman has made.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Chase E. Mulinex, postmaster at Tolley, N. Dak., in the sum of $1,209.35, due the United States on account of the loss of postal funds resulting from the failure of the First National Bank of Tolley, Tolley, N. Dak.: Provided, That the said Chase E. Mulinex shall assign to the United States any and all claims he may have to dividends arising from the liquidation of said bank.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 5 strike out "$1,209.35" and insert in lieu thereof "$529.33 in his postal account and in the sum of $680.02 in his Treasury savings account."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed; and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DANIEL S. SCHAFFER CO. (INC.)

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1419, for the relief of Daniel S. Schaffer Co. (Inc.).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, this is the claim of Daniel S. Schaffer & Co. (Inc.) who had three contracts for the building of Bancroft Hall and Isherwood Hall at the Naval Academy. After he made the subcontract with J. Henry Miller (Inc.), the principal contractor, the Government started to build other buildings at Holabird, Camp Meade, Dundalk, and so forth, and they let cost-plus contracts in these places, and through this action they fixed a higher wage than prevailed generally. The consequence was that the Schaffer Co. had to pay a higher scale of wages than were paid at the time the contract was made.

Mr. BLANTON. The only point to be considered is whether or not, after we pass this bill, amended and reduced, according to the suggestion of the department, it will not be enlarged in another body. If the gentleman will assure us that he will see to it that the amount will not be raised somewhere else, that we will hold it to the amount the department suggests, I have no further objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will assure the gentleman that, so far as I can and so far as the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GAMBRILL], whose bill it is, is concerned, we will do that.

Mr. BLANTON. And that if it is raised, you will bring it back and give us an opportunity to vote on it?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I certainly will.

Mr. BLANTON. With that assurance, I shall not object.

Mr. PATTERSON. Reserving the right to object, I understand that this party lost on account of the fact that he had to employ people at higher wages.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. Suppose that the wages had gone down, did any of these parties ever pay anything back to the Government?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I never heard that they did, but I presume there are some people honest enough to do so. This matter was gone into thoroughly by the Navy Department and they have recommended the payment of this sum. They have cut off some $16,000 already. This company lost really $33,368.72.

Mr. STAFFORD. The difficulty I had in considering the bill after reading the report was whether Schaffer & Co. as subcontractors might not have had his damages included in the claim of the principal contractor, whose right was recognized under general law. The general law did not extend to subcontractors, but it did to the principal contractor. Where is there any evidence to show that this subcontractor did not receive his claim for damages through the principal contractor?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not know whether the gentleman is acquainted with J. Henry Miller & Co., but they are large contractors, and they lost $48,000, which they never received from the Government, so far as I am aware. I am absolutely sure that this company did not get anything through J. Henry Miller (Inc.).

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman have any objection to the usual amendment with relation to attorney's fees?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not think there are any attorney's fees in this case; still, I have no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. With that assurance, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to substitute the bill S. 3270, an identical bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Daniel S. Schaffer Co. (Inc.) the sum of $17,765 to reimburse said Daniel S. Schaffer Co. (Inc.) for losses incurred by it during 1917 and 1918 as subcontractors for metal furring, lathing, plastering, and board lining in connection with the east and south wings of Bancroft Hall, of the groined arched ceiling of the mess hall and mess-hall extension of Bancroft Hall and of Isherwood Hall, both of said buildings forming a part of the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., the said contracts in connection therewith being known, respectively, as contracts Nos. 2416, 2416T, and 2437, and said sum is hereby appropriated.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 6, after the word "appropriated," insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The House bill was laid on the table.

THERESA M. SHEA

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2033) for the relief of Theresa M. Shea.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, so that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] may give me an explanation to some of the objections that I have. In the first place, I do not think this legislation ought to be considered until we have a statement from the claimant.

Mr. CELLER. The statement of the claimant is in the jacket of the bill.

Mr. MOUSER. If it is in the report, I have failed to find it.

Mr. CELLER. Last year when the bill was on the calendar it was objected to on the ground that there was no statement from the claimant in the record. I remedied that by requesting the statement, and she submitted the statement and it is in the papers in possession of the committee.

Mr. MOUSER. Is that statement attached to the report?

Mr. CELLER. I do not know what happened to it in the Claims Committee. It was submitted, and in that statement the woman outlined all the facts and circumstances of the accident. She was crossing this particular street at the intersection of what is known as Willoughby Avenue and Broadway, in the Borough of Brooklyn, in the city of New York, on this night about 10 o'clock. It was raining, and as she reached about the middle of the street, at the middle of the crosswalk, she was struck down by this truck, driven by somebody in the employ of the Post Office system, who did not sound his horn, who had no chains on his rear or front wheels, and who was driving at a rate of speed beyond the realm of caution. There was an eyewitness, a disinterested person, who brought out every fact the claimant indicated in her affidavit.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I shall ask that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will remain on the calendar if the gentleman objects, as a matter of course.

Mr. CELLER. This is a meritorious bill. We satisfied every objection that was raised. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] last year objected because it was not down to $2,000. We cut it down to $2,000. Mr. Box, then a Member from Texas, than whom there was no more distinguished and careful Member of the House, carefully sifted all of the evidence in the case and agreed to the claim being paid.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOUSER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Every objection that has been made here by the gentleman from West Virginia and others of us has been met.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman objected that there was not a statement, and they got a statement from the claimant.

Mr. MOUSER. The statement is not attached to the report.

Mr. BLANTON. It is in the files. They reduced it to $2,000, which was demanded. It occurs to me that the bill ought to pass in its present form.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. Has the gentleman any objection to an amendment that this shall be in settlement of all claims against the Government?

Mr. CELLER. I shall gladly accept that amendment.

Mr. MOUSER. As well as the usual attorneys' fees amendment?

Mr. CELLER. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. In view of the statement the gentleman has made I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The difficulty I had at the last session, as shown by the report, that this claimant did not cross the thoroughfare, according to the report, at the intersection, but midway in the block, with a raised umbrella, and walked deliberately into a passing postal truck.

Mr. CELLER. That is what the driver said.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is what the postmaster of Brooklyn said of this accident.

Mr. CELLER. Oh, he simply repeated the story of his driver. You can not expect a man who drives a truck and runs down somebody to accept all of the blame. He was simply trying to excuse himself by making that statement. There is a statement here of a disinterested person.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; but she refused absolutely to give any testimony whatsoever to the post-office inspector when he went there to get that testimony.

Mr. CELLER. That is not true.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is according to the statement in the report.

Mr. CELLER. But the report is in error, because all of the while the post-office authorities said there was no statement, the statement was in the record and was made as far back as 1920. I can give the gentleman my word for that, because I procured that statement from this Mrs. Coyle and put it in the papers of the Claims Committee. Why it was not seen by the department is beyond me; but because they did not see it, they had no right to say that there was no statement. That is their negligence.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman, upon his position as a Representative, states that there is such a statement and that this accident occurred at the crossing and not midway of the street?

Mr. CELLER. I do state that.

Mr. STAFFORD. What does the statement of the claimant show?

Mr. BLACK. That is not the statement of the claimant; that is the statement of an eyewitness.

Mr. CELLER. It is as I stated, that she was walking along at the crosswalk and not in the middle of the block.

Mr. STAFFORD. And from the gentleman's examination of the facts he believes it was the fault of the postal chauffeur?

Mr. CELLER. I do.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the reservation of the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Theresa M. Shea, of Brooklyn, N. Y., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 in compensation for injuries sustained on March 9, 1918, when struck and knocked down by a United States mail motor truck.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$2,500" and insert "$2,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOUSER: Page 1, line 6, after the figures "$2,000," insert the words "in full settlement of all claims against the Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOUSER: At the end of the bill insert:

"Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHARLES C. BENNETT

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 5235, for the relief of Charles C. Bennett.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the investigation shows negligence on the part of claimant. I may say, in view of the seriousness of the injury and the fact that, although the claimant was driving on the wrong side of the road, the operator of the Government vehicle suddenly turned across in front of claimant. If the gentleman will consent to an amendment reducing the amount of $5,000 to the actual amount of his expenses, namely, $2,174, I will have no objection. Otherwise I will be compelled to object.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, in the last Congress I reported that bill after careful consideration and study of the evidence to the Claims Committee, which reported it unanimously. The War Department Board of Inquiry indicated that the Government was responsible by reason of the negligence of its agent, the driver of the car, and that board, after careful investigation and hearing, rendered a decision to reimburse Mr. Bennett in the amount of $2,174.60. Therefore it was not unreasonable for the committee to follow that evidence and that decision, together with the other facts, and recommend the usual amount that we pay in these cases, $5,000.

Mr. MOUSER. It is true the Government has already paid the claimant $565.75, simply recognizing a moral obligation. There is no evidence of negligence that would sustain a court of law to so instruct a jury.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOUSER. I yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. The statement of the evidence referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER], who looks very carefully after these claims, is the thing that convinced me.

Mr. SCHAFER. I might state that the report of the Army Board, as incorporated on page 2 of this committee report, even recommended that the reimbursement be made to the claimant in the amount of $2,174.60.

Mr. MOUSER. I am willing to follow that recommendation, as I told the gentleman.

Mr. SCHAFER. But the recommendation of the Army Board, while establishing the liability of the Government, does not establish the amount that should be carried in the bill, because this House has uniformly adopted policies with reference to the amounts to be carried in a bill for these disabilities. I hope the gentleman will not try to overturn the unanimous report of the Committee on Claims, both in the last Congress and in this Congress, and try to overturn the findings of the Army Board as to liability.

Mr. MOUSER. There are two bills on this calendar tonight that have been passed by the Claims Committee, where the Government has already paid the money during the last session of Congress; so that does not mean anything.

Mr. PATTERSON. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman accept an amendment reducing the per cent in the proviso from 20 to 10?

Mr. LAMBETH. No; I can not accept such an amendment.

Mr. MOUSER. I will ask the gentleman if he will accept the amendment I referred to?

Mr. LAMBETH. This is a case with which I am personally acquainted; and I think if the gentleman had studied the case as I have and as the members of the Claims Committee have, he would not expect me to agree to any reduction in the amount.

Mr. SCHAFER. There is no use taking up any more time. I shall not expect the gentleman to accept such an amendment, and I will not accept it as a member of the Claims Committee. We will soon have a chance under the rule recently adopted where one Member of this House will not prevent consideration of a meritorious claim like this.

I call for the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FRANK BAGLIONE

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4833, for the relief of Frank Baglione.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think the amount is excessive. Originally the claimant entered a claim for $848, as shown by the report on page 2. He has already been paid $250. If the gentleman will accept an amendment making that amount $600, I will not object.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the author of the bill I would not feel warranted in accepting such a great cut. This boy is evidently permanently injured by an accident caused through no fault of his own.

Mr. MOUSER. There is no evidence that this boy was permanently injured. He was attending school. The only thing he claims is that he has headaches occasionally. His father is claiming the right to collect from the Government because of being away from his work several months. That is not a proper claim. It could not be considered in court.

Mr. BLACK. He was compelled to take care of this boy for 17 weeks. The mother could not do it. There is enough medical evidence to show that the boy is permanently injured.

Mr. MOUSER. There is no evidence that he is permanently injured.

Mr. BLACK. Absolutely.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will yield, I came to the same conclusion as the gentleman from Ohio, that there is no evidence in the report to show that this boy is permanently injured.

Mr. BLACK. The boy is continually having headaches, according to the report. He is doing his best to attend school.

Mr. STAFFORD. When I was in high school, I had continual headaches, but not the headaches I have at present.

Mr. BLACK. I insist the gentleman from Wisconsin has been giving headaches to all of us. [Laughter.] The evidence is that this boy is an ambitious boy, doing his best to get along in school, but he is having these headaches, which the doctors say are the result of this injury. I will not try to interpret all the medical terms in these various reports, but there is no doubt about it that for a long period of years this boy required medical attention. They say he is always having these headaches. I think the boy is entitled to the money. I will make a reasonable arrangement with the gentleman.

Mr. MOUSER. The original claim was $848, and he has been paid $250.

Mr. BLACK. That is the only amount that the department could take care of under the law. This is for the additional injury, the continuing injury, and for the 17 weeks that the father could not work.

Mr. MOUSER. I will be fair to the gentleman. Will he consent to make it $1,000?

Mr. BLACK. Make it $2,500.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order; there is no use bartering and trading over injuries.

Mr. MOUSER. I object.

RESTITUTION OF EMPLOYEES OF POST OFFICE AT DETROIT, MICH.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5256, a bill for the restitution of employees of the post office at Detroit, Mich.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it appears from the report that these supervisory officials who are sought to be reimbursed under this bill were negligent in the performance of their duties. If such be the fact, what obligation is there upon the Government to relieve them, especially supervisory officials who fail to perform the duty of scrutinizing the work that is immediately before them?

Mr. McLEOD. If the gentleman will read the last paragraph of the report by the Postmaster General, he will see that apparently there was no negligence.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield?

Mr. McLEOD. Certainly.

Mr. ARENTZ. There have been a number of post-office bills; and in every case where there was a robbery or where there was an embezzlement, the post-office inspector has investigated and claimed that some of the men were responsible. They have not only collected from the bonding company, but they have hooked different clerks that may have been in contact with this embezzler from time to time, clerks who have absolutely nothing to do with the embezzlement.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin is contributing a great deal through the careful scrutiny he gives these bills, but, as has been pointed out by the gentleman from Nevada, this practice on the part of the inspectors has grown to such an extent that it almost amounts to an abuse.

Mr. ARENTZ. The post-office inspector makes his investigation and seeks to fasten this onto clerks and assistant clerks, and the result is they are threatened with being fired if they do not pay. The purpose of this bill is to reimburse employees whose money has been taken.

Mr. McLEOD. There was one employee who refused to take the reduction in rank or contribute money. He was forced to take the reduction. The balance of them paid from $1,000 to $2,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman satisfied that the supervisory official was not negligent in the performance of his duties?

Mr. McLEOD. I believe so.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Peter Wiggle, the sum of $2,150.75; to Alden Catton, $1,821.92; to George D. Walker, $1,821.92; to James P. Murray, $1,000; to Charles C. Kellogg, $1,493.26; and to James P. Bacon, $1,000, these sums having been collected by the Post Office inspection department in the amounts named from these employees' personal funds to make up a shortage of funds embezzled by Charles E. Mussey, a clerk in the Detroit post office, and who committed suicide on August 17, 1926.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

MARY MURNANE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5998, for the relief of Mary Murnane.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $609 to Mary Murnane, of New Haven, Conn., in compensation for injuries sustained January 19, 1926, in the city of New Haven, Conn., when struck by a United States Post Office Department motor vehicle: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$609" and insert "$109."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ALLOWANCE OF CERTAIN CLAIMS FOR EXTRA LABOR ABOVE THE LEGAL DAY OF EIGHT HOURS AT CERTAIN NAVY YARDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 987, for the allowance of certain claims for extra labor above the legal day of eight hours at certain navy yards certified by the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call attention to the fact that this bill contains 91 pages. There are 1,377 claimants. It takes 89 printed pages to name all of the claimants and the different amounts they are to get. It involves $332,342.74 that will be taken out of the Treasury if this bill passes. I want to submit to our distinguished minority leader whether or not it is a wise policy to take up a bill of this stupendous magnitude and character, involving $332,342.74, and pass it in two minutes? There could be a dozen mistakes in the sets of 1,377 names of claimants in 89 pages and there could be a dozen mistakes in figuring out the amounts that are due each one of the 1,377 claimants. Does our distinguished minority leader, who used to run this House, think it is wise to take up a bill of this character and pass it in two minutes without even reading it?

Mr. SNELL. I will answer the gentleman if he will give me time.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I want to know.

Mr. SNELL. In the first place, there is not a single claim in this bill that has not been to the Court of Claims and been passed on.

Mr. BLANTON. How do we know they are correct?

Mr. SNELL. They have been passed upon by the United States Court of Claims. Every claim in this bill has been there.

Mr. BLANTON. Why, then, does not the Appropriations Committee make an appropriation to pay these claims?

Mr. SNELL. Because they have not been authorized, and that is the reason I am trying to get an authorization. As a matter of fact, I do not know a single claimant named in this bill; not a single claimant resides or votes in my district.

The only reason I have any interest in this bill is because a respectable workingman came to my office two or three years ago and said the Government is not fair to small claimants. I heard the gentleman's argument, and finally I said, "Produce your proof." He came there and we spent an entire afternoon together in going over the matter. You can not find a black mark against these claimants from the beginning to the end, and what could I do except present these claims to the American Congress? This matter has been passed upon twice by the House, once by the Senate, and has been recommended and approved by every Secretary of the Navy for the last 40 years. Every one of these claims has been to the Court of Claims and passed upon by the Court of Claims. Now, the only question is: Is the Government going to pay small claimants or not? It does not make a bit of difference to me whether it is a claim of $2 or a claim of $200,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say to the gentleman from New York that I am more anxious to pay small claimants than I am large ones. I never object to small claims.

Mr. SNELL. These are all small claims of workingmen in Brooklyn.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say that these 1,377 claims——

Mr. SNELL. There are only 600, as a matter of fact.

Mr. BLANTON. This bill specifically names 1,377 claims.

Mr. SNELL. Six hundred of them have been approved.

Mr. BLANTON. I have carefully counted them myself, and there are 1,377 separate, distinct claimants named specifically in 89 pages of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. What difference does it make whether there are 6 or 600? These claims have been to the Court of Claims, and that court has passed on each individual claim.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Marion, Ohio, just called attention to the fact that we have on this Calendar two bills that were passed in the last Congress, and have been already paid.

Mr. MOUSER. I say there are bills on this Calendar which have passed this House and the Senate and which have already been paid. If the gentleman from Texas does not see fit to object, as much as I dislike to do so, I feel constrained to object.

Mr. BLANTON. I would rather have the gentleman object, if he will do it. It would save me the trouble.

Mr. MOUSER. Involving, as it does, this large amount of money, I do not think it is proper legislation to be on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. Then why does not the gentleman object to it, and let us get it off of the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNELL. How could it be considered otherwise?

Mr. MOUSER. We could have a special rule for its consideration.

Mr. SNELL. You can not get a special rule for claims. That has never been done in the history of the Congress.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, it is refreshing to find a new Member here who indicates that he will object to bad bills once in a while.

Mr. SNELL. There has not been a private claim considered under a rule for years. I really do not care what you do with this bill. I am only interested in the principle involved here.

Mr. BLANTON. It is too big a bill to pass here in five minutes without reading and without proper consideration.

Mr. SNELL. That has nothing to do with it. If it is a proper bill and these claims are just, the bill should be passed.

Mr. MOUSER. These claims go back to 1878.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, since no other Member will object to the bill, I object.

As I have unanimous consent to extend my remarks, I want to give my reasons more clearly for objecting to this bill.

It embraces 91 printed pages. It seeks to pay 1,377 separate, distinct claims, with a specific amount for each claim, paid to different claimants, practically none of the amounts being the same. All of the amounts aggregate $332,342.74, and if we pass this bill here to-night in two minutes without reading it and without debate, it will take out of the Treasury the stupendous sum of $332,342.74, to raise which in cash we will have to provide new items of taxation upon the already overtaxed people of the United States.

Let me mention just 2 of these 1,377 different claims, which are on page 87 of the bill. Here is one:

To Mary A. Curran, executrix of the estate of John J. Curran, deceased, late claimant in his own right, and as sole heir of Murty Curran, deceased, $1,032.94.

Here is another:

To Everett Gildersleeve, Emma Francis Hathaway, Josephine Hewitt, and Ruth Clark, sole heirs of Samuel W. Gildersleeve, deceased, $873.33.

Here is another one on page 80 of the bill:

To Ida M. Hoffacker, Susie A. Antrim, Margaret Meager, Fannie Fort, Harry Tantum, Elmer Tantum, Fred Tantum, and Walter Tantum, sole heirs of Henry N. Bennett, deceased, $457.63.

Who here knows whether the above are "the sole heirs of Henry N. Bennett, deceased," or the "sole heirs of Samuel W. Gildersleeve, deceased," or "the sole heir of Murty Curran, deceased"? They might be, and they might not be the sole heirs. Remember, the above are just three claims. There are 1,374 other claims embraced in this 91-page bill, some payable to one person, and some of the claims payable to numerous persons, and in many instances, to the purported sole heirs of persons deceased.

There are undoubtedly many errors and mistakes made regarding some at least of these 1,377 claims, and respecting some at least of these 2,000 personages who are to be benefited by this $332,342.74 bill.

Why a case in court involving $332,342.74 would be carefully tried by a bevy of good lawyers who would devote probably at least a week of hearing testimony.

These claims are 40 years old. It seems strange, indeed, to me that if they are so meritorious they could not have been passed in the last 40 years.

I can not permit such a large bill, involving so many persons, and such a large amount of money, to be passed here at a night session without reading, and without consideration, when it is 91 printed pages, and would take $332,342.74 out of the Treasury; hence I object to the bill.

JAMES E. FRASER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1260, for the relief of James E. Fraser.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, here a certain sculptor entered into a contract with the Government to do certain work. There was delay connected with the inauguration of the work by reason of the building of the Memorial Bridge. I have had some difficulty in seeing wherein the Government should bear the expense, to the extent of $17,000, for the delay in the construction of the Ericsson Memorial.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Speaker, may I say in reply to the gentleman that this contract was entered into on May 19, 1921, for a certain site. After the contract was entered into the Government changed its mind about the site and dillydallied around for three years. Meanwhile the contract was entered into for a specific cost. Through no fault of the sculptor, the man who contracted to build the fountain, but entirely through fault of the Government in delaying for three years the selection of the site, he sustained a loss of over $22,000. This bill is only for $17,000. So, in effect, he really contributes $5,000 to the cost of the memorial.

This bill has been before several Congresses and has received great attention from Colonel Grant, who makes a very strong recommendation in favor of the passage of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the statement of the gentleman from New York and after reading the report that the delay may have taken away the profit of the sculptor, I shall not press the objection, if the gentleman agress to the customary attorney's fees amendment.

Mr. BACON. I agree to that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $17,003.37 to James E. Fraser, of New York City, N. Y., to compensate the said Fraser for losses suffered by him in the designing and erection by the said Fraser of the Ericsson Memorial in the District of Columbia under his contract with the United States dated May 19, 1921, said memorial having been completed by the said Fraser and accepted by the United States November 29, 1927.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: In line 13, after "1927," insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JEANNETTE WEIR

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1290, for the relief of Jeannette Weir.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have carefully gone over the records in this case. My sympathy goes out to the family. The daughter of this woman ran into a truck and was killed. There was clearly no negligence on the part of the driver. However, due to the shock in the family because of the death of the child the mother suffered great mental anguish. One of her children died shortly after the accident. If the gentleman will agree to amend the amount to $500, I am willing to permit the bill to go through without any objection on my part, purely on account of the circumstances of the family.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, the child is not dead——

Mr. MOUSER. One of the children in the family died. I do not mean to say it was this child that died.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman is accepting the report of the Post Office Department. If the Post Office Department had made a report to the effect that the driver was responsible for this child's injury, naturally, that man would have lost his position.

Mr. MOUSER. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman will find that in any large city you can seldom get the Post Office Department to say that the driver is in any way responsible unless it happens, as very rarely happens, that the man is intoxicated.

Mr. MOUSER. There are other reports here where they say the driver was at fault.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. This child was crossing the street. There were no witnesses. The truck struck this child, and I am willing to admit that there is no evidence here to show that it was through the negligence of the Government employee, but there is no evidence to show that the child was responsible. There is some evidence in the file.

This bill has been before the House three times, first at $2,500, and I agreed to a reduction; second, at $2,000, and I agreed to another reduction, to $1,000, in the last Congress.

It has gone to the Senate twice; it has been cut down to a thousand dollars, and I can not agree to any further reduction.

Mr. MOUSER. Does the gentleman think that there is any evidence, as far as the record goes, that the driver of the Government truck was negligent?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I say no, as far as the report of the committee shows.

Mr. MOUSER. Then, there is no legal obligation on the part of the Government. There is nothing here but the mental anguish of the mother, and if the gentleman gets $500, that would seem to be liberal.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. As I have said, this claim has been twice reduced by the House, and I can not agree to a third reduction. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] knows all about this claim.

Mr. SCHAFER. As the gentleman from Missouri states, the amount of the claim has been reduced, and if there had been positive evidence of negligence of the agent of the Government the amount recommended by the committee would have been $5,000.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. Why does not the Claims Committee put it in the report. There is nothing in the report showing any negligence at all.

Mr. SCHAFER. The Claims Committee can not print all of the evidence that is produced before the committee. On some bills the evidence is contained in a file 6 inches thick.

Mr. MOUSER. The Claims Committee could put in four or five lines showing a summary of the evidence.

Mr. SCHAFER. I suggest that the gentleman become a member of the Claims Committee, and one of us will resign.

Mr. MOUSER. Oh, the gentleman is unfair, we are trying to be helpful, and he is engaging in generalities. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection, and will offer an amendment later.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I hope the gentleman will leave the $1,000 stand.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States, to Jeannette Weir for injuries sustained by being struck by a United States mail truck January 4, 1922.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 5, strike out the figures "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$750."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOUSER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, the usual amendment relating to attorney's fees.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 9, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

R. W. DICKERSON

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1292, to extend the benefits of the United States employees' compensation act to R. W. Dickerson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I object.

ANNA LOHBECK

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1322, for the relief of Anna Lohbeck.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MOUSER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, the objection I raised when the bill was up before was that the claimant was clearly at fault in this action.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The reason the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] objected before is that he maintained the driver of the truck was not on duty. The gentleman did not raise the question before that the claimant was at fault. There is nothing in the evidence to show that the claimant was at fault. On the contrary, it shows that the driver of the truck was at fault. The driver was on duty.

Mr. MOUSER. The gentleman from Missouri is correct in saying that the main question is whether the Army sergeant was acting in his line of duty.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The driver was acting under instructions from his superior officer. The organization stationed at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., was at the rifle range, which is about 25 miles from the barracks. The men returned to the barracks, and when they arrived they discovered that they had left the cooking utensils at the rifle range. The officer ordered the sergeant back to the rifle range to get them, and he was on his way back to the barracks when he struck this woman.

Mr. MOUSER. The question seems to grow out of whether or not he was within the line of his duty. In other words, in a court of law, if the master be held liable for the negligence of the servant, it will have to be shown that the servant was acting within the scope of his employment.

I find here a disagreement as to the actual facts, and I see that the same committee found that the sergeant did actually go on this mission with the knowledge of his superior officer—at least, he tacitly consented. I have a further question here as to whether or not in the gentleman's opinion $1,500 is excessive, considering the nature of the injury.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. This woman is permanently injured, and it is a deserving case and the bill should be passed.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman made a powerful argument in reference to the necessity of an agent acting within the scope of his employment. I think we should all realize that when you serve in the Army or the Navy as an enlisted man you are subject to Army discipline, and you are within the scope of the Army employment 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and 365 days a year, and the gentleman from Ohio knows that from his experience in the Army.

Mr. MOUSER. In view of the gentleman's explanation, as far as I am concerned, I withdraw my objection. The gentleman says that this woman is in need of nursing?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The evidence shows that the lady needs this money now that she is permanently injured.

Mr. MOUSER. I withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500 to Anna Lohbeck as payment in full for personal injuries sustained by being struck by an automobile driven by Sergt. Wurrel Sturdivant, of the United States Army.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ARTHUR H. TEEPLE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1786) for the relief of Arthur H. Teeple.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Arthur H. Teeple the sum of $154.10 to reimburse him for expenses incurred in procuring medical and hospital treatment as a result of injuries incurred while engaged in mounted drill as a member of Troop E, One hundred and sixteenth Regiment Idaho National Guard Cavalry, at Camp John M. Regan, Boise, Idaho, June 15, 1927.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PINKIE OSBORNE

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2013) for the relief of Pinkie Osborne.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Pinkie Osborne, of Elizabethtown, Hardin County, Ky., the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for injuries arising out of gunshot wound inflicted by the discharge of a machine gun in Elizabethtown on April 6, 1918: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act shall be paid or delivered or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,500."

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

HEIRS OF HARRIS SMITH

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2038) for the relief of the heirs of Harris Smith.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid on the table, as the bill has already been passed.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to call attention to the facts in this case. I am not reflecting upon anybody, but this bill was reintroduced at this session of Congress, reported by the committee, notwithstanding the fact it was passed during the last Congress and the money paid to the claimants. It seems to me there should be some check in the Claims Committee that would determine bills that are duplicated, which might escape the notice of the Committee of the Whole House or the Members of the House and result in a double payment by the Government.

Mr. BLACK. The chairman of the Committee on Claims called the attention of the House to this mistake. In fact, the bill might have passed if he had not done so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be laid on the table.

HEDWIG GRASSMAN STEHN

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2042) for the relief of Hedwig Grassman Stehn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to hear what the gentleman from New York has to say on behalf of the bill.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, this bill is the result of injuries sustained by this woman, who comes from Brooklyn. She was walking about 6 o'clock in the evening along what is known as the Shore Road in Brooklyn, adjoining what is known as Fort Hamilton. Numerous battleships and destroyers are apt to anchor right below the drive. An explosion occurred on the lighter Amackassin. As a result of the explosion the woman was hit on the left shoulder blade by some missile that came from the ship. A board of inquiry was had, composed of various Army officers attached to Fort Hamilton.

They came to the following judgment, that the injury was due to an explosion which took place on the United States Army steam lighter Amackassin as a result of fire on that vessel, while she lay at the dock at Fort Hamilton on December 5, 1920. That the injury was due to accident, not the fault of any officer or agent of the United States or any other person; that it was not the necessary result of military operations.

This, of course, was no accident due to any cause that could be attributed to the woman herself, who was peaceably walking along. It may be that there was no negligence on the part of the military authorities, but nevertheless the explosion occurred on this ship as a result of which this missile, this very large missile, as it was discovered later, lodged in her left shoulder. The injuries consisted of her right arm being broken, the right shoulder blade fractured, and bruises on the head. The injuries are believed to be permanent. As a result of that she is 50 per cent disabled.

The woman came down to see me some months ago, and I saw her. She insisted upon my seeing her injuries. She has in her left shoulder blade a huge hole about the size of two baseballs thrown together, right at the tip of the shoulder blade. She can not lift her arm. If corroboration is desired on that point, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] also saw the injury, and I would ask the gentleman, in the interest of justice, to make a statement with reference to what he saw.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will state that I was a subcommittee that reported this bill in the prior Congress, and I had a little difficulty in the consideration of the bill because some lawyers from New York wanted to come down and see me. I told them I did not need to see them; that there was plenty of evidence in the folder. That is the reason why we have the 5 per cent attorney fee limitation.

The report indicates serious disabilities, and if the gentleman reads the physical condition as outlined therein, very carefully, I must corroborate the statement of my colleague that this woman is seriously injured. I have personally seen her.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Is $5,000 the correct amount?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes. That would be the amount, in the judgment of the committee.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. SCHAFER. There are some of us who know that an injury like this would draw ten or fifteen thousand dollars in a court of law. We have no opportunity to increase the amount. Five thousand dollars is only too little for an injury like this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Hedwig Grassman Stehn the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States resulting from serious permanent injuries due to the explosion of munitions on board the United States Government steam lighter Amackassin: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 5 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 5 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN O'TOOLE

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 2117, for the relief of John O'Toole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, this claim was heard prior to the compensation act of 1916, and I object.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask for recognition.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will withdraw the objection in order to give the gentleman an opportunity to make an explanation.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Just a few minutes ago I had a bill on the calendar where a young man, Mr. Dickerson, lost his right hand in a machine at the Naval Academy. That man is now a resident of my district. He is married and has children. He was injured in 1916. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON] objected to my bill. I asked for an opportunity to be heard and I did not even get that opportunity when objection was raised. Here is a bill introduced by the gentleman from Colorado, who objected to my bill, where the gentleman asks the same consideration for his constituent that I asked for mine and his constituent was injured in 1910. I would like to know from the gentleman from Colorado why he objected to my bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I want an explanation as to why the gentleman objected to my bill.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object, because I do not want any altercations on the floor to-night.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I should like to know why the gentleman objected to my bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Every bill that has been reported by the Committee on Claims on the calendar at this Congress, seeking to extend the provisions of the employees' compensation act of 1916, for injuries occurring prior to that date, has been objected to, and the gentleman from Colorado is within his rights in objecting to the gentleman's bill, and this bill referred to an accident that occurred in 1910 and is objectionable for the same reason, and I object.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. So that is the reason the gentleman objected to my bill? Under the new rule I might be able to get consideration at a later date.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. That is all. There was no intention to deprive the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] from explaining his bill. There have been a number of bills of this type. None have passed. All have been objected to at this Seventy-second Congress when it appeared that the claimant was injured prior to the enactment of the employees' compensation act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard. The Clerk will call the next bill.

ELSIE M. SEARS

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 2189, for the relief of Elsie M. Sears.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Elsie M. Sears, of Plymouth, Mass., the sum of $250 in full compensation for personal injuries and damage to her clothing as the result of an accident which she suffered, without negligence on her own part, on the 22d day of July, 1926, while in the Federal building in said Plymouth.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 6, strike out "$250" and insert in lieu thereof "$50."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I have sent to the desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MOUSER: In line 7, strike out the word "compensation" and insert in lieu thereof "all claims against the Government."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WALTER E. SWITZER

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2574, for the relief of Walter E. Switzer.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

WALLACE E. ORDWAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2777, for the relief of Wallace E. Ordway.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

OWNERS OF STEAMSHIP "EXMOOR"

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2841, for the relief of the owners of the steamship Exmoor.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000 to Magee Bros. (Ltd.), of Philadelphia. Such sum represents the amount which was paid by them to the United States as security for an immigration fine on account of the landing from the steamship Exmoor at Philadelphia in June, 1924, of a Chinese seaman named Chow Fat, said sum having been declared forfeited by a decision of the Department of Labor dated August 23, 1924, but subsequently having been ordered paid back to them by a decision of the Department of Labor dated November 17, 1924, but which amount had been covered into the Treasury of the United States by the collector of customs at Philadelphia less the amount of expenses incurred.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$950.33."

Page 2, beginning with line 2, after the figures "1924," strike out the remainder of the bill and insert "less the amount of the expense incurred."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

LAUREN GOSNEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3375, for the relief of Lauren Gosney.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid on the table.

Mr. MOUSER. This is one of the claimants that has already been paid.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be laid on the table.

There was no objection.

DAVID C. JEFFCOAT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3467, for the relief of David C. Jeffcoat.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I read this bill the claimant seeks the privileges of the employees' compensation act for an injury that occurred subsequent to the enactment of that law. I have prepared an amendment, although I do not know that it will be acceptable to the author of the bill. Perhaps it will remove the objection of the gentleman from Colorado. Perhaps the gentleman from Colorado is predicating his objection upon the fact that this injury occurred prior to the enactment of the employees' compensation act. I have prepared the following amendment as a substitute:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of David C. Jeffcoat as to whether he suffered an injury while employed in the Postal Service compensable under the employees' compensation act, and occurring after the date of its enactment, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said David C. Jeffcoat had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20: Provided, That no benefit shall accure prior to the enactment of this act."

Would that remove the objection of the gentleman from Colorado?

The purpose of this substitute is to vest in the Employees' Compensation Commission authority to ascertain whether the injury occurred after the enactment of the employees' compensation act; and if so, whether it is a compensable injury under that act.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. I was not mistaken as to the date this injury occurred. If it is the sense of the House that this type of claimant should be permitted to have compensation and that the statute of limitations should be waived, I think now is as good a time as any for the House to express itself and permit a bill of this type to be passed. I do not stand alone in the objection. I have not been alone in the objection. There are probably 19 bills of the same type which have been considered at preceding sessions to which objection has been made.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman from Colorado will permit, as I understand the legislative policy of those who have been called upon to review all bills reported on the Private Calendar, it is that if an injury has occurred subsequent to the enactment of the employees' compensation act and, perchance, the claimant did not know, or waived, his right to file his claim within a year following the accident, that we will vest in the Employees' Compensation Commission authority to investigate that claim to see whether the injury occurred under the terms of that act; and if so, to grant him relief from the date of the passage of the relief act.

That was the established policy in the last Congress, and although some bills were objected to at an earlier session by some Member of the House, I think those bills will be reached again and we will have a uniform policy to which, I believe, the gentleman will subscribe whereby a Government employee who has unwittingly failed to file his claim within the statutory 1-year period may have his day in court. Perchance, he did not know that such a law exists, and because of that he should not be barred from the rights which the Government says he should have because of an injury which he suffered while in the service of the Government. The purpose of the proposed substitute is to insure that the injury occurred after the enactment of the workmen's compensation act of September, 1916.

Mr. PATTERSON. If the gentleman will yield, I want to support what the gentleman from Wisconsin has said. That was the policy which was adopted toward the close of the last Congress. If the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin should be adopted, I think this would be a good bill and other bills in the same class would be good bills. I believe we should allow these people to have their day in court, where these injuries occured after the passage of the act.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Of course, the gentleman understands this is not a personal matter with me. From the beginning of this session it has been my personal view that this type of bill ought to be allowed to pass without objection. I am very glad that the gentleman and others who have spoken have suggested this policy, so that bills of this type which are reported by the Committee on Claims can be given favorable consideration, bills where the only right that has not been availed of by the claimant is that he did not come in before the statute of limitations expired.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me say further to the gentleman that the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia, the minority whip of this House—than whom there is no more earnest or able Member—made a study of these bills. He made several speeches in regard to the matter and made quite a contribution. He came to the conclusion that these people should have their day in court.

Mr. SCHAFER. I now have a case pending before my subcommittee of the Claims Committee where a nurse, physically fit 100 per cent at the time she entered the Government service, was employed in a tuberculosis hospital taking care of active cases of tuberculosis. She came in contact with these active cases in the course of her employment, and she contracted an active pulmonary tuberculosis while still on the pay roll. She did not know she could file a claim with the United States Compensation Commission, and her old dependent father and mother will be prevented from getting what is due them if the House is going to adopt the policy of not extending the statute of limitations. There is no use of the Committee on Claims spending any time in considering that bill if it is to be the policy of the House not to extend the statute of limitations under these justifiable circumstances.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Would it not be in order at the present time to ask unanimous consent that there be reinstated on this calendar, immediately after the star for the next consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, the several cases of this type which during this session have heretofore been passed over, so that every one of these cases would have exactly the same consideration by this House which you are now proposing to give to this case? I submit it is only fair to each one of these claimants that this be done.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. EATON] has called attention to a fact that I think deserves the attention of the present Speaker as majority leader. Early in the consideration of this calendar objection was made by a certain Member of the House, who was ignorant of the policy that had been established by those who pass on these bills in review, as to giving a privilege to those claimants who were ignorant of the act or who suffered injury subsequent to the enactment of the employees' compensation act. I hope at some future time, if we are going to have another night to consider bills on the Private Calendar unobjected to, and I hope there will be many, that it may be your pleasure to reinstate these eight or nine bills that were unwittingly objected to, similar in purport to the bill that is now going to be considered without objection. I will give the present Speaker a list of these bills so he may consider asking, at some future time, the consideration of the bills that were objected to, which, as the gentleman from Colorado has said, should be passed as the present one is about to be passed.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to receive the claim of David C. Jeffcoat as if it had been filed within the time specified by the compensation act of September 7, 1916, as amended. Any payments to be made as compensation shall begin with the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer a substitute amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of David C. Jeffcoat as to whether he suffered an injury while employed in the Postal Service compensable under the employees' compensation act and occurring after the date of its enactment, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said David C. Jeffcoat had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the enactment of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ATCHISON, TOPEKA & SANTA FE RAILWAY CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3582, for the relief of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, this bill is for the relief of a railroad which, by understanding with the Government, reconstructed some revetment work that had been washed by a flood of the river. The department recommends this bill. There is no doubt about the understanding; there is no doubt about the construction; there is no doubt about the Government engineers passing upon it; there is no doubt about the price of the job. The claim is here for one-fourth of the entire job, and it comes here with the approval and recommendation of the department. It is a just claim. If the railroad company had not done this, the Government would have had to do the job. It is a fair and just and reasonable claim, and I think it ought to pass. I do not think there is any question about the claim.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co., out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $7,420.83 as a reimbursement to the said railway company of one-fourth of the cost and expense of work performed in 1923 in protecting the bank of the Missouri River near Eton, Mo., the same having been done by the railway company at its own cost and expense to meet an emergency, at the request of the engineer officers of the United States and upon assurances of said officers that one-fourth of the cost of the work would be borne by the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 3, strike out the words "at the request of the engineer officers of the United States and upon assurances of said officers" and insert "with an understanding.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

WILLIAM KNOUREK

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3693, for the relief of William Knourek.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay William Knourek, deputy collector of internal revenue of the State of Illinois, the sum of $421, being the value of internal revenue stamps charged to him and stolen at Chicago, Ill., in May, 1919.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, in line 5, after the word "Illinois," insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: In line 5, after the word "Illinois," insert "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

LELA B. SMITH

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 3811, for the relief of Lela B. Smith.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PATTERSON. Reserving the right to object, I want to know why it is necessary to pass this bill; is she not entitled to something under the law?

Mr. CLAGUE. No; she is not entitled to it; that is, there is no law providing for it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Why should we make a special act for this woman?

Mr. CLAGUE. We have passed a dozen similar bills in the last few years.

Mr. MOUSER. This is the customary amount allowed in these cases.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is there a certain amount allowed under the law?

Mr. MOUSER. No; nothing under the law, except what they may get in the form of a gratuity.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is she entitled to a pension?

Mr. CLAGUE. No; this will be in full for all claims.

Mr. PATTERSON. This man was a lieutenant.

Mr. CLAGUE. He was a lieutenant in the Reserve Corps, and was at Marshall Field when the accident occurred.

Mr. MOUSER. He left a widow and five children with practically no property. This amount is equivalent to six months' pay, and is the amount which is customary to allow in these cases. He was killed in the line of duty, and due to no fault of his own.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Lela B. Smith, widow of Harry A. Smith, late lieutenant, Air Corps Reserve, United States Army, who was killed in an airplane accident while in the line of duty at Marshall Field, Fort Riley, Kans., on October 1, 1929, the sum of $1,181.22, being a gratuity equal to six months' pay at the rate received by Lieut. Harry A. Smith at the time of his death.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, before the word "lieutenant," insert the word "second."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOUSER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill strike out the period, insert a comma, and add the following: "being in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOUSER. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer the following attorney fee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 per cent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HARRY W. WARD

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 3812, for the relief of the estate of Harry W. Ward, deceased.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75.41 to the estate of Harry W. Ward, deceased, of Redwood Falls, Minn., for actual financial loss sustained by Harry W. Ward, without negligence on his part, through refund already made to the Post Office Department, wherein postal funds for which he was responsible as postmaster at Redwood Falls, Minn., were on deposit in the First National Bank at Redwood Falls, Minn., which said bank failed under date of July 21, 1925, and was liquidated, none of said sum being repaid from the assets of said bank.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

W. A. BLANKENSHIP

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4071, for the relief of W. A. Blankenship.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PATTERSON. Reserving the right to object, according to the report of the Secretary of Agriculture, this man suffered no loss.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Let me explain to the gentleman. This bill passed the last Congress too late to be considered by the Senate. The fact is this man's claim was $2,000. I forced him to strike out his claim for injury to his crops and injuries to his family. The situation is this: This amount of this bill has been reduced to the pitiable sum of $350.

Mr. PATTERSON. The Department of Agriculture takes the position, after investigation——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think these investigations have cost more than the $350. They stated that during the first session of the Seventieth Congress an identical bill was introduced, and so on, and on a request of the Committee on Claims the department made a report thereon and forwarded copies of the correspondence. The department's view, as stated in the letter, is that Blankenship may be entitled to $100; but they said that if it should be established that the slide would continue, he should be allowed an additional sum, not exceeding $350. I have seen this, the place and the damage, which in my opinion was fully $2,000, but I have not asked for any more special inquiries by Government agents. This man's house is damaged because the Government was building a public highway there and diverted a creek so that the creek undermined his house, and the diverted water entered his meadow and changed his meadow into a swamp. I have seen the man's home some years ago; and so far as the house was concerned, not a door would shut properly nor could a window be opened.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am sure the gentleman from Alabama just wanted to hear the explanation of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, I am not so sure about that. I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] to make a statement.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman ought to agree to this. The department recognizes $350 in addition to the $100, provided there is satisfactory evidence warranting the payment of the $350. The Committee on Claims thinks there is such satisfactory evidence, but the gentleman from Washington is not asking the $100 in addition to the amount stated in the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to W. A. Blankenship, of Randle, Wash., the sum of $350 in full settlement of all claims against the Government on account of damages to his property resulting from the construction of the Purcell Creek section, Randle-Yakima Forest Road project, Rainier National Park, Lewis County, State of Washington.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ENZA A. ZELLER

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 4233, for the relief of Enza A. Zeller.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the author of the bill accept an amendment in lieu of the committee amendment, in the approved form, which provides that no benefit shall accrue prior to the approval of this act?

Mr. MAAS. Yes; certainly.

Mr. STAFFORD. Before that stage is reached, I reserve the right to object. I would like to have the author of the bill explain how mounting a horse at a camp on the part of a hostess is within line of duty of a hostess.

Mr. MAAS. She was on duty at the time, and it was a part of her duty to entertain these boys and keep up her own health. The War Department reports that there is no question that she would have come under the compensation act had she filed a claim within the proper time. The reason she did not file the claim within the proper time was due to a defect in the X-ray machine at the post hospital. She did not want to cause any trouble. They told her it was not going to be serious because of the defect in this equipment; but as time went on, she found that she had a permanent injury, and she has been rendered incapable of permanent employment since that time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain just wherein the injury was in the line of employment?

Mr. MAAS. That was accepted. It comes under the terms of the compensation act, which provides that it is in the line of duty if it is not due to her own misconduct, and this was in no sense her own misconduct. It was a part of her duty, as she was expected to entertain these boys, and she was on duty at the time.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is no question that she was on duty at the time, but it seems to me that the duties of a hostess do not extend to getting on horses and riding around the country.

Mr. MAAS. Under the compensation laws, if you are on duty and the injury is not the result of your own misconduct, it is interpreted to be in the line of duty. That is recognized as the basic principle.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have some acquaintance with the real duties of a hostess, and I have thought her work was to entertain them around the camp. I did not think her duty was to mount horses.

Mr. MAAS. I happen to be quite familiar with this; and if the gentleman will permit, a part of the training of these boys is horseback riding. They found it was desirable to have the hostess able to ride and accompany these boys on the boat, and also in order to keep up her own health.

I hope the gentleman will not object, as this bill has passed the House once before and simply failed to be reached in the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am willing to take the broad view that perhaps in her province of entertainment she should go horseback riding with the boys; but under reservation of objection, I will ask whether the gentleman will be willing to accept the customary amendment, as follows:

That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Enza A. Zeller, on account of injuries sustained upon June 28, 1922, while employed by the War Department, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Enza A. Zeller had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefit shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

Mr. MAAS. Yes; I accept that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 to Enza A. Zeller, employed as a hostess in the United States Army at Fort Snelling, Minn., as reimbursement for expenses actually incurred by her as the direct result of personal injuries received by her during the course of her employment at Fort Snelling, Minn., and as full compensation for said injury, the pain and suffering from the same, including loss of earnings, and any permanent disability resulting from said injury.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled 'An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries, and for other purposes,' approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Enza A. Zeller, a former employee of the War Department."

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment, which I have sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EATON of Colorado as a substitute for the committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: "That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Enza A. Zeller on account of injuries sustained upon June 28, 1922, while employed by the War Department, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Enza A. Zeller had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefit shall accrue prior to the approval of this act."

The substitute for the committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. During this entire session when the majority leader has asked for night sessions, he has asked for them from 8 o'clock until 10.30 p. m. For some reason, in preferring the request yesterday, the gentleman stated it should continue until 11 o'clock p. m. Would the Speaker object to a motion to adjourn being made at 10.30, the usual hour for adjourning? We are all worked down.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would not object.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair will entertain a motion at 10.30?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I shall make that motion at 10.30.

MRS. LAWRENCE CHLEBEK

The Clerk called the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 4234, for the relief of Mrs. Lawrence Chlebek.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have this bill marked for objection.

Mr. MAAS. What did the gentleman find objectionable in the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. There was no fault on the part of the Government just because the snow fell from the heavens and turned into slush.

Mr. MAAS. I will say that all of the information is not available in the report. Even so, from the report, if the gentleman will examine it, he will find that there was negligence. The Treasury Department itself denies any negligence; but, as a matter of fact, they permitted snow and slush to remain on the marble steps. It is the common practice, certainly in all private buildings, to put sawdust or salt or ashes on those steps. This woman slipped because of the fact that the snow had been permitted to accumulate.

In addition to that, there was a faulty drain pipe which had been leaking. It was at a half-freezing temperature. The step was slippery. The ambulance driver and the police surgeon both testified that the step was in a negligent condition.

Mr. STAFFORD. How can the Government recognize the principle that we will be held responsible for accidents flowing directly from an act of God?

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Certainly.

Mr. MOUSER. I may say that I have a great respect for the judgment of the gentleman from Wisconsin on these bills, but I wonder if the gentleman from Wisconsin has considered this claim. This claim goes further than an act of God. It will be my position to recommend claims that are worthy, just as much to object to those that are unworthy. But the act of God ceased on the outside of the building where it was snowing. The tracks of the people who had a right to enter that building for public business made these steps and marble floors slippery. It seems to me it was negligent, in view of that condition, not to put something on that floor so that the people would not fall down and break their necks.

Mr. STAFFORD. No amount of protection can prevent the accumulation of slush on the steps of Government buildings.

Mr. MOUSER. But this was inside of the building.

Mr. MAAS. This was inside of the building. This was not on the outside steps. It was snow that had been tracked inside.

Mr. STAFFORD. How frequent it is in my home city, through the winter season, for the slush or moisture to be tracked inside! The Government is not obligated to keep that floor mopped all the time.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. There are cases where business men have left an icy condition in front of their place of business, without putting ashes or salt or sawdust there, where people have slipped, and those business men have been held answerable in damages.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know the law of Wisconsin, which does not hold a property owner to any liability by reason of the conditions of a sidewalk occurring through acts of nature.

Mr. MOUSER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. MOUSER. Let me say further that the law is uniform in all States as to there being no responsibility for acts of God; but after the act of God when human agency can enter in to save life or property, there is a duty then on the part of people to safeguard the safety of the public. This was on the inside of a Federal building; and because of the public bringing in snow as they entered, as they had a right to do upon public business, the marble steps became so slippery that this woman fell.

The department, in its report, admits responsibility. The matter has been decided on the question of merit. The objection is confined to the amount asked in the original bill, $2,000. Only $500 is asked here. Having in mind at the outset the admission of the department that they are liable, that this slush was on the inside of the building, on the stairway of the building, the only objection could be as to the amount. This woman was the mother of 14 children. I think if the sponsor of the bill would lower his claim to $500 that the Congress would pass it. There is in this record this additional fact, that the condition of the stairway was very dangerous, being wet and slippery from many people coming in and onto it out of the storm. It would seem that there must have been some duty there for some servant to mop up the slippery condition of the floor.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact I have a sick friend here who has a bill on the calendar that he hopes to have reached, I call for the regular order.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

JEFF DAVIS CAPERTON AND LUCY VIRGINIA CAPERTON

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4859, for the relief of Jeff Davis Caperton and Lucy Virginia Caperton.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the author of the bill accept an amendment to the effect that no benefit shall accrue prior to the approval of the act and in the form of other bills of like kind?

Mr. HALL of Mississippi. I have no objection to it whatever.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Then I have no objection.

Mr. HALL of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a similar Senate bill (S. 194) be considered in lieu of the House bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 17 and 20 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes," approved September 7, 1916, as amended, are hereby waived in favor of Jeff Davis Caperton and Lucy Virginia Caperton, parents of J. P. Caperton, who was killed August 24, 1918, at Nitro, W. Va., when a freight train backed into the ambulance he was driving while in the performance of his duties.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Jeff Davis Caperton and Lucy Virginia Caperton arising out of the death of J. P. Caperton on August 24, 1918, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Jeff Davis Caperton and Lucy Virginia Caperton had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

KENNETH G. GOULD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 4885, for the relief of Kenneth G. Gould.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. PATTERSON. I will; but I intend to object.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand there is a favorable report from the Secretary of War as to this claim.

Mr. PATTERSON. But I understand this lieutenant took the matter in his own hands; whereas if he had gone through the regular routine, this bill would not have been necessary. I see my colleague present, and I would very much like to yield to him, but under the circumstances I shall have to object.

Mr. HESS. This was the first assignment this lieutenant had ever had. He was ordered from Cincinnati to the Walter Reed Hospital. Not knowing the regulations of the War Department he crated and shipped his household effects to Washington and he paid for them the sum of $199.50. The War Department recommends the payment of the claim. The bill passed the last Congress toward the end of the session but failed of passage in the Senate because of the lack of time.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the gentleman's fundamental objection to the bill?

Mr. PATTERSON. My fundamental objection is that a man who is an officer in the United States Army should know the regulations. He took the matter in his own hands, and therefore he should not be reimbursed.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will agree that when an officer of the United States Army, the Navy, or the Marine Corps is ordered to change his station, he is entitled to an allowance for the shipment of his household goods.

Mr. PATTERSON. Absolutely.

Mr. STAFFORD. It appears from the report that this young officer did not understand the regulations.

Mr. PATTERSON. He should have understood them.

Mr. STAFFORD. He is not being reimbursed any more than he would have received if these goods had been shipped according to regulations. The Government is not out anything. This bill merely seeks to recompense him for the money he paid out.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, for the present I shall object.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. EATON of Colorado. It appears that this bill is in the interest of economy because this young officer saved the Government $20 or $25. This officer by his conduct saved the Government real money, even though that saving was not made in accordance with the exact regulations. Under those circumstances does not the gentleman think he is entitled to be reimbursed for the money he spent? Does not the gentleman think he has learned his lesson and is entitled to get his money back?

Mr. PATTERSON. It will not hurt him to wait a few more days and learn more. For the present I object.

A. W. HOLLAND

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5265, for the relief of A. W. Holland.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I recall this is a bill that is similar to many that might be presented in behalf of fourth-class postmasters in a growing country, where they need additional help. There is no question but what he was put to additional expense by reason of the growth of the office, but he received the benefit of the advanced position of his office. Why should we adopt an exceptional rule in this case?

Mr. McKEOWN. Unfortunately this man did not receive the benefit of it. He was appointed under a prior administration, and that has been the reason why he did not receive it.

Mr. STAFFORD. He received it for a short time, up to June 30, 1914, when he was ousted on account of politics, I suppose.

Mr. ARENTZ. If the gentleman were placed in the same situation and his office was made a third-class office, what would he do under the circumstances? Just permit the mail to take care of itself? With a town jumping from a few hundred to 6,000 he either had to employ extra clerks or let the mail pile up.

Mr. STAFFORD. Coming from the fast-growing and overpopulated State of Nevada, I am rather surprised that the gentleman has any concept of the conditions referred to in this bill. I will yield to the gentleman who comes from an oil-gushing district, where towns grow up overnight.

Mr. McKEOWN. I will state to the gentleman that this was the first big discovery and the town grew overnight to 6,000 population just like a mining town.

Mr. STAFFORD. I had some difficulty in bringing myself around to the conclusion that this man was giving the attention to the office that it required.

Mr. McKEOWN. Oh, he had to go to work and put in his own money and earn money for the Government and the Government states that the money was earned, but he did not get what was coming to him at all. He paid out $1,000 for clerk hire.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is this the case where a doctor was the postmaster?

Mr. McKEOWN. Oh, he is called a doctor, but he is like a lot of lawyers who are called judges. He was not a doctor at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is he an Indian doctor or a horse doctor?

Mr. McKEOWN. I do not think he is either one, to tell the truth about it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that this doctor was not performing his duty as postmaster, but was running around the country with his pill case.

Mr. McKEOWN. No; he performed all the service he could.

Mr. STAFFORD. Upon the assurance of the gentleman that he did perform all the services required, including his pill practice, I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $900 to A. W. Holland in payment of extra services as postmaster at Drumright, Okla., a post office of the fourth class.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

KENNETH G. GOULD

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the prior bill, H. R. 4885, for the relief of Kenneth G. Gould. I understand from the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATTERSON] that he has received some additional information that would tend to make him withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Speaker, under reservation of objection I wish to make this statement. Of course I knew there was no additional cost to the Government other than that which would have been involved anyway. This bill was introduced and sponsored in the House by our late beloved Speaker, Mr. Longworth. It passed the House last session, and since it does not incur any additional expense to the Government, and perhaps not quite as much, I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $186.17 to Kenneth G. Gould, lieutenant in the Medical Corps Reserve, as reimbursement for cost of shipment of personal property.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

MARY AGNES RODEN

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 5592, to reimburse the estate of Mary Agnes Roden.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee as to the policy of the committee in making recommendations for the payment of amounts of $5,000 to estates by reason of the death of the intestate. Does the committee consider whether there are any children surviving or any immediate heirs, or do they just appropriate the money for the payment of debts or payment to heirs in case there are heirs?

Mr. BLACK. I will say to the gentleman there have been times when we have made provision in the bill to have the bill itself see to it that the heirs or the children are properly taken care of, but, generally, the committee would prefer that the minor children of an intestate be taken care of under the courts of their own State. In this case I have no particular evidence as to the family situation. There is no doubt, as the gentleman sees, that there is liability here and that the estate should have some compensation; but unless it were called to our attention that there was real need of protection for the children, through the congressional act, we would leave it to the State.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman's committee investigate as to whether there are any children or any immediate heirs?

Mr. BLACK. This is one of those cases that was reported by a prior committee so that we had no subcommittee of our own committee on this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Some time ago there was a bill introduced by our deceased Member, Mr. Rutherford, of Georgia, in which he sought to pay $5,000 to the widow of the deceased. The widow had only married the deceased a few months before, and the intestate left a number of children by a prior marriage. I took it upon myself to allot only a small amount to the widow, $1,000, and provided that $4,000 should go to the guardian of the children under a certain age. I do not think we should be overgenerous in paying $5,000 to an estate where there are no dependent children or immediate relatives.

Mr. Speaker, I object for the time being so that the committee may ascertain the facts in the case.

J. O. WINNETT

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 6274, for the relief of J. O. Winnett.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

J. M. PACE

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 8251, for the relief of James M. Pace.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks to reimburse the postmaster for $21,476.99 alleged losses. I can see where the Post Office Department would not contest it, but I doubt whether it ought to be passed by unanimous consent, and I object. A bill that would take $21,476.99 out of the Treasury ought not to be passed in a minute, without reading and

AMY TURNER

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 7308, for the relief of Amy Turner.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent to Amy Turner, formerly Amy Byrnes, for the lands embraced in her stock-raising homestead entry, Billings 028219, upon fulfillment of the usual requirements but without reference to her second marriage or the time of its consummation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILL A. HELMER

The Clerk read the next bill on the Private Calendar, H. R. 1448, for the relief of Will A. Helmer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I had this bill marked for objection. I see the author of the bill is here, and I would like to hear some statement in favor of this claim. As I understand the case from the report, the Government during the war, shortly after taking possession of Camp Custer in Michigan, at Battle Creek, the home of the gentleman from Michigan, entered into an arrangement whereby the Michigan Central Railroad running parallel about a mile distant from the heights on which Camp Custer is located, agreed with the Government to lay a track up to the camp.

I understand that the quartermaster, or whoever the official of the Army was, became rather impatient and entered upon the land for the proposed right of way; that subsequently the railroad company did lay the track. Why did not the claimant pursue his remedy against the railroad company, which had obligated itself to secure this right of way, rather than seeking relief from the Government?

Mr. HOOPER. I shall be glad to answer the gentleman. There was a dispute between the Government and the railroad whether the Government or the railroad was the one to pay to this man damages, which the War Department admits he sustained. Mr. Helmer, by long course of negotiations back and forth between the railroad and the Government, was led by the point where the statute of limitations runs against the claim. He has always claimed that the Government entered on the property without right, when everything was in a turmoil in the newly built Camp Custer, and that the Government acted arbitrarily, and I think the evidence proves it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, under reservation of objection, I want to give further consideration to this claim. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

GOVERNMENT SALARIES, 1893 TO 1931 COMPARED WITH COST OF LIVING

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including some tables that I have had worked out on the expense of living in the city of Washington.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, in the accompanying series of tables, the attempt has been made to show the trend in Government salaries in comparison with changing living costs during the period of almost 40 years, from 1893 to 1931. The year 1893 is used as a starting point simply because this is the earliest year for which the data regarding Government salaries are readily available, but the period is sufficiently long to give a fairly complete picture of the subject. For the earlier years, the information regarding cost of living is incomplete, but the figures used, as computed by Dr. Paul H. Douglas, are believed to be substantially accurate.

Table 1 compares the average salary of Government employees in the District of Columbia with the cost of living in the United States, and also shows the relative purchasing power of such salaries in terms of the year 1893 as a base. It will be noted that from 1893 until the beginning of the World War Government salaries in the District of Columbia remained almost stationary, the average being $1,096 in 1893 and $1,141 in 1915, whereas during this period cost of living in the District of Columbia increased about 40 per cent. After 1915 Government salaries rose steadily, and in 1931 were almost 90 per cent higher than in 1915. Meanwhile, however, the cost of living had increased very sharply up to 1920, and up to 1931 remained at a considerably higher level than salaries. As a result the "real wages"—that is, the purchasing power of salaries—remained below the level of 1893 for practically the whole period. The purchasing power of Government salaries was almost 50 per cent lower during the war period than it had been in 1893, and did not reach the earlier level until 1931, when the decline in living costs in combination with the wage increases of 1929 and 1930 brought the purchasing power of Government salaries back to the 1893 level.

Table 2 compares the trend of Government salaries in the District of Columbia with average annual earnings of salaried employees in manufacturing industries in the United States. The latter figures are as compiled by Doctor Douglas from the reports of the United States Census and other authoritative sources. It will be noted that in 1893 the average Government salary was $1,096, as against $954 in private employment. By 1901, however, private salaries had become greater than Government salaries, and in general this disparity increased steadily up to 1928, the latest year for which data regarding the private salaries are available. In that year it appears that Government salaries were about 70 per cent higher than in 1893, whereas private salaries had increased approximately 168 per cent.

Table 3 (and Chart 3) shows the trend of salaries of Congressmen over the period 1893 to 1931, in comparison with trend of living costs in the United States, and also computes by years the purchasing power of such salaries in terms of 1893 as a base. In 1893 the annual salary of a Congressman was $5,000, having been thus established in 1866. In 1907 it was increased to $7,500, and in 1925 to $10,000. The 1907 increase was roughly in line with increased cost of living, but beginning with the extremely sharp increases in living costs as a result of the war, the purchasing power of the salaries of Congressmen fell to almost one-half of what it had been in 1893, and even the salary increase of 1925 did not restore equilibrium. As in the case of the salaries of Government employees, the purchasing power of the salaries of Congressmen was not restored to its 1893 level until about 1931.

TABLE 1.—Average salary of Government employees in the District of Columbia, and purchasing power of salary in relation to 1893

Year	Average amount [1]	Salary index, 1913=100	Cost of living index, [2] 1893=100	Relative purchasing power of salary, 1893=100
1893	$1,096	100.0	100.0	100.0
1895	1,114	101.6	97.0	104.7
1897	1,073	97.9	100.0	97.9
1899	1,009	92.1	102.0	90.3
1901	1,040	94.9	108.0	87.9
1903	1,067	97.4	116.0	84.0
1905	1,065	97.2	115.0	84.5
1907	1,090	99.5	126.0	79.0
1909	1,105	100.8	121.0	83.3
1911	1,109	101.2	132.0	76.7
1913	1,134	103.5	137.0	75.5
1915	1,141	104.1	140.4	74.1
1917	1,342	122.4	204.7	59.8
1918	1,381	126.0	241.6	52.2
1919	1,494	136.3	249.4	54.7
1920	1,570	143.2	270.5	52.9
1921	1,593	145.3	229.9	63.2
1922	1,625	148.3	219.2	67.7
1923	1,658	151.3	224.2	67.5
1924	1,708	155.8	223.2	69.8
1925	1,776	162.0	230.3	70.3
1926	1,809	165.1	230.5	71.6
1927	1,836	167.5	223.4	75.0
1928	1,866	170.3	222.4	76.6
1929	2,043	186.4	221.8	84.0
1930	2,078	189.6	213.6	88.8
1931	2,147	195.9	196.0	99.9

[1] Sources: 1893 to 1915—Monthly Labor Review, June, 1920 (p. 21). Based on reports to the Commission on Reclassification; 1917 to 1927—Personnel Classification Board. Closing report of wage and personnel survey, Washington, 1931 (p. 221); 1928 to 1931—Report of the Bureau of the Budget.

[2] Cost of living index numbers from 1893 to 1914, by Paul H. Douglas, Real Wages in United States (p. 60). (These figures are for the country as a whole, separate data for Washington not being available); from 1914 to 1931, U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, converted to a 1893 base from Douglas's indexes, and are for the city of Washington.

TABLE 2.—Comparison of annual salaries of Government employees in the District of Columbia and annual earnings of salaried employees in manufacturing in the United States

Year	Annual salary		Annual earnings of salaried employees in manufacturing [1]
	Average	Index, 1893=100	Average	Index, 1893=100
1893	$1,096	100.0	$954	100.0
1895	1,114	101.6	973	102.0
1897	1,073	97.9	1,006	105.5
1899	1,009	92.1	1,046	109.6
1901	1,040	94.9	1,048	109.9
1903	1,067	97.4	1,087	113.9
1905	1,065	97.2	1,121	117.5
1907	1,090	99.5	1,144	119.9
1909	1,105	100.8	1,188	124.5
1911	1,109	101.2	1,277	133.9
1913	1,134	103.5	1,294	135.6
1915	1,141	104.1	1,327	139.1
1917	1,342	122.4	1,552	162.7
1918	1,381	126.0	1,765	185.0
1919	1,494	136.3	1,999	209.5
1920	1,570	143.2	2,243	235.1
1921	1,593	145.3	2,236	234.4
1922	1,625	148.3	2,164	226.8
1923	1,658	151.3	2,223	233.0
1924	1,708	155.8	2,299	241.0
1925	1,776	162.0	2,348	246.1
1926	1,809	165.1	[2] 2,407	252.3
1927	1,836	167.5	[2] 2,482	260.2
1928	1,866	170.3	[2] 2,554	267.7
1929	2,043	186.4	----------	----------
1930	2,078	189.6	----------	----------
1931	2,147	195.9	----------	----------

[1] Douglas, Paul H. Real Wages in the United States, 1890–1926, p. 361.

[2] Douglas, Paul H., and Jennison, Florence Tye. The Movement of Money and Real Earnings in the United States, 1926–1928, p. 22.

TABLE 3.—Salary, and purchasing power of salary, of Congressmen, 1893–1931

Year	Annual salary of Congressmen [1]		Index of cost of living in the United States [2] (1893=100)	Relative purchasing power of salary (1893=100)
	Amount	Index (1893=100)
1893	$5,000	100.0	100.0	100.0
1895	5,000	100.0	97.0	103.1
1897	5,000	100.0	100.0	100.0
1899	5,000	100.0	102.0	98.0
1901	5,000	100.0	108.0	92.6
1903	5,000	100.0	116.0	86.2
1905	5,000	100.0	115.0	87.0
1907	7,500	150.0	126.0	119.0
1909	7,500	150.0	121.0	124.0
1911	7,500	150.0	132.0	113.6
1913	7,500	150.0	137.0	109.5
1915	7,500	150.0	141.8	105.8
1917	7,500	150.0	192.2	78.0
1918	7,500	150.0	235.4	63.7
1919	7,500	150.0	254.1	59.0
1920	7,500	150.0	281.4	53.3
1921	7,500	150.0	239.3	62.7
1922	7,500	150.0	225.8	66.4
1923	7,500	150.0	230.8	65.0
1924	7,500	150.0	230.4	65.1
1925	10,000	200.0	237.1	84.4
1926	10,000	200.0	236.4	84.6
1927	10,000	200.0	233.1	85.8
1928	10,000	200.0	230.4	86.8
1929	10,000	200.0	230.5	86.8
1930	10,000	200.0	220.9	90.5
1931	10,000	200.0	199.9	100.1

[1] Salaries of Members of Congress taken from act of July 28, 1866 (ch. 296); act of Feb. 26, 1907 (ch. 1635); and act of Mar. 4, 1925 (ch. 549).
[2] Cost of living index numbers from 1893 to 1914, by Paul H. Douglas, Real Wages in the United States, p. 60; from 1914 to 1931, U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, converted to a 1893 base from Douglas's indexes.

SUGGESTIONS FOR BUSINESS RECOVERY

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of business recovery.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMNECK. Mr. Speaker, if faith were as constant as hope, we might be able to get somewhere as a nation and as a people in our efforts to stimulate business recovery. I am disappointed that there has not been a more favorable reaction to President Hoover's relief program. I am not seeking to discredit it. I gave it my indorsement and support in the hope and belief that it would stimulate business recovery, start the wheels of industry, benefit agriculture, and put idle millions to work.

I believe still that it will be helpful in the end. However, it has apparently failed in the accomplishment of its chief purpose, at least up to this time—that of restoring confidence. There was a feeling of optimism for a while, but that apparently has died away, leaving a lack of confidence still, which is always a chief requisite to any undertaking that concerns the public welfare.

A balanced Budget, and some definite idea as to the increase of taxes in amount and where the increase is to fall, would help the situation. Investigation of short selling, bonus legislation, extravagance and criminal waste in government, are also important factors in retarding progress.

Barring violations of the obnoxious prohibition law, we are a law-abiding, peace-loving people. We try to be patient and want to be patriotic. Under existing conditions, the patience of the people is sorely tried and their faith severely tested. The average American citizen is in such a muddle at this time that he finds it as difficult to maintain his balance as it is for the Government to balance its Budget.

The people can not be blamed for their lack of faith. They have been fooled many times. In 1928 Mr. Hoover said in his speech of acceptance that the Republican Party victory would mean "a job for every man." William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, protesting a sales tax upon the necessities of life, recently placed the number of unemployed in the country at 8,000,000 people.

In the summer of 1930, about the time the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill was passed, Republican Party leaders assured the country that prosperity was just around the corner. Mr. Hoover was elected President in 1928, the crash came in October, 1929, and now in 1932 Congress is seeking to repair the damage done—a stupendous undertaking that is causing much quaking.

What is our trouble? Faith is gone. Fortunately, hope lingers, and yet, referring again to this relief program, I sometimes wonder whether the people have not reached the conclusion, in the absence of any appreciable results, that it is not just another "delusive hope that points the way to a distant good." The Hoover program does not go far enough. It does not reach. It is only temporary in character, and therefore affords no solid foundation upon which to build.

Our chief trouble, as I see it, is a lack of confidence in ourselves and our ability to do things. Our part in the war to make the world safe for democracy cost billions of dollars, to say nothing of the sacrifice of the very flower of young American manhood. That was a struggle for a principle at the sacrifice of millions of human lives in the allied armies. Now we are fighting depression, which involves the saving of human life and, in addition, improving our economic situation to afford the means of a livelihood for millions who are now feeling the pangs of hunger and asking only for a chance to work.

With a national wealth approaching $400,000,000,000, unlimited resources and unlimited credit, we are in a position where we can relieve this situation and contribute to the immediate peace, happiness, and contentment of all the people. Two accomplishments are necessary. One is to apply credit or currency expansion and, second, to revise certain existing laws which are harmful.

It is argued that expansion of credit or currency will cheapen money. So it would, but it would enhance the price of all commodities and increase the purchasing power of consumers. The Nation's Business and Business Week say that inflation is the cure that should be applied. It has been tried before with success, not only in this country but other countries. It would not endanger the gold standard but encourage business and finally bring us a prosperity that would abide.

If we are to have prosperity, relief legislation, temporary in character, must be supplemented by legislation of a definite, permanent character. It is said the Government is now borrowing $300,000,000 a day. That is not getting anywhere. The debt is only piling up. A final day of reckoning must come and the Government must prepare for that day. There are many sources of revenue available to avert this situation and, in addition, permit the lowering of taxes which are so burdensome upon the people. I will point the way in a moment.

Business recovery is absolutely necessary before we can have prosperity. When they can be brought back multiplied millions will find profitable employment. Until these millions are put to work and wages started there can be no prosperity. Employment of these millions will add to the purchasing power of the people.

The cost of government is staggering. This cost must be met by taxation. Business men all over the country are protesting, and only a few days ago called at the White House in great numbers to protest personally against taxes being piled up, with no reduction in public expenditures. There are at the present time 1,552,000 Federal workers. The annual pay roll is $1,501,000,000 a year. The Nation's Business figures that this means 1 employee to every 50 voters.

American farmers alone are required to dig up $777,000,000 dollars in taxes each year. That required a lot of digging with farm products at low-level prices. Only recently 60,000 farms, embracing a million acres of land, were sold for taxes in Mississippi. Railroads pay $400,000,000 annually. They are but little better off than the farmers. Those who smoke cigarettes and have no other virtue pay on cigarettes, women on cosmetics, and so on down the line. Bootleggers alone escape.

Home owners in American cities are having their troubles, too. Thousands are out of work and unable to pay their taxes and stand to lose their homes. Some one will say: "That is their fault." It is not their fault. They are the victims of a situation over which they have no control. Ill-advised legislation is responsible for our present predicament and intolerable suffering. The way to remedy these conditions is to repeal the laws that have brought about these conditions.

The Hawley-Smoot tariff law not only paralyzed industry and prostrated agriculture, but has cost the Government more than a billion dollars a year in the loss of export business. Enforcement of the prohibition law is costing another billion dollars. Repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the placing of a tax upon intoxicating liquors would add more than a billion dollars to our revenues. An additional $750,000 could be saved to the people in the elimination of useless bureaus, commissions, and boards. These all total $3,750,000,000—a pretty sum.

With this legislation enacted into law, lowering tariff rates, adding the revenues from the liquor business, and the saving of hundreds of millions in the abolishment of useless functions of government, the Government would be in shape to square up all deficits and meet other pressing obligations, with enough left to help the bonus along. More important, perhaps, is the fact that with these revenues acquired taxes could be lowered and the people given a breathing spell.

This action is absolutely necessary to restore confidence. It is essential to business recovery. It is the one guaranty of a "job for every man," with all due apology. It is up to the Government to arouse itself from its lethargy and take the lead as a "go-getter." A word from the White House and cooperation along bipartisan lines, such as we have become accustomed to during this session of Congress, would turn the trick, lift the gloom, and sound the death knell of Old Man Depression. That is the one means by which Congress can do something to benefit the people, by which I mean—the people.

Banks, railroads, building and loan companies, insurance companies, and farmers to a certain extent, have already been provided for. If anyone is getting any benefit from Mr. Hoover's relief program, they are the people. It will take a long while for any good effects from this relief legislation to filter down to the man on the street. What he needs is action on the program I have outlined to give us something substantial upon which to build.

There are other things which this Government could do and should do. It should mix less in European affairs and attend strictly to its own business in our domestic affairs. The Government at this time is competing with American citizens and American taxpayers in 250 lines of private business. This is not fair or just. If the Government can not keep out of private business in any other way, it should enforce the law in restraint of trade against itself, and, while it is doing that, it might give attention also to trusts and other combinations of great capital, which are denying to others all the rights which they claim for themselves, and would limit to themselves.

My comments on conditions and remedies up to this point have been more of a general nature, and I therefore desire to make some specific recommendations, as follows:

First. Provide credit for industry by amending the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, which would extend to business the same privileges that it does to banks. At this writing credit facilities for business through the banks is practically at a standstill.

Second. Guarantee bank deposits, because, in my judgment, it is only by this method that we can absolutely restore confidence in the financial institutions. Bank failures and antihoarding campaigns will be things of the past if this proposal is enacted into law by the passage of the so-called Steagall bill.

Third. Pass the home loan discount bank bill, which would release hundreds of millions of dollars now frozen in the various building and loans throughout the country. This could be accomplished by the passage of the so-called Luce bill recommended by President Hoover in one of his early messages to Congress.

Fourth. Embargo temporarily all basic commodities, such as wheat, corn, cotton, copper, oil, manganese, coal, farm machinery, and all farm products. The embargo should, of course, apply to all by-products of the basic commodities enumerated.

Fifth. Reduce governmental expenses by discontinuing a greater part, at least, of all Federal-aid appropriations to the States, and by the elimination of all unnecessary activities of the Federal Government.

Sixth. Resume trade relations with Russia; protect these relationships with proper restrictions to avoid any dumping of Russian goods in the United States.

Seventh. Cause a moderate inflation of currency, which would result in the increase in commodity prices. This could be done by the issuance of currency against the gold reserve and by the Federal Government stabilizing silver by purchasing bullion at a specified price and issuing currency against the supply of silver held by the Treasury of the United States.

Eighth. Provide means for construction loans for home construction only. This could be done either through the building and loan companies, insurance companies, or by loans from the postal-savings accounts.

Ninth. Legalize and tax beer. The taxes raised from this activity could be applied in reducing the taxes against legitimate business.

These suggestions, if put into operation, together with what the Government has already done to relieve the present deplorable conditions, is in my opinion all that any government could do under the circumstances, and if they will not bring the results that we hope for, the future does not look bright.

FEDERAL AID FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Speaker, the Hon. A. Harry Moore, Governor of New Jersey, in his inaugural address in January, 1932, made the following statements:

> In this period of industrial depression we must turn attention to our agricultural resources, determinedly seek methods and resolutely adopt procedures that will promote the full utilization of these resources. My information is that the agricultural output of New Jersey could easily be doubled, provided needed help is given.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the future of a part of the agricultural development of my district depends upon the help given to the agricultural department of our public schools through the Federal aid for vocational education.

I have received many protests from prominent educators in my district and I beg to call your attention to a few points brought out by one township superintendent of schools. The students in the vocational-education department of his schools are studying the following subjects: Agriculture, horticulture, animal husbandry, and care of estates from the gardener's standpoint. President Hoover in 1923, while a member of the Cabinet, stated:

> There is no better economy than the economy of adequate training for the pursuits of agriculture, commerce, industry, and the home.

The students who receive training in the vocational-educational departments of the public schools in my district find ready employment locally, due to the type of the territory.

There are 1,250,000 students in the public schools in the United States enrolled in the courses in vocational education. These boys and girls are receiving a good practical education and many of them will be unable to pursue their studies further than the courses offered in our public school system. Again quoting Mr. Hoover's remarks in 1923, where he states in regard to the cost of vocational education:

> This cost can not be regarded as constituting a serious financial burden upon the community. It is approximately the cost of a medium-sized battleship.

The storm of protest aroused by the proposal of the Economy Committee to discontinue this appropriation has, I understand, caused the committee to reconsider, and they are proposing an alternative course, which to my mind is simply an attempt to slowly and surely abolish vocational education rather than destroy it by immediate action.

Many communities, relying upon the Federal Government to keep its legislative promises, have erected buildings to provide the necessary equipment to teach these students. In my own district, in one instance, these courses are so popular that the classes are already overcrowded and space and equipment for three times the number of students now enrolled is needed. These students are not children of wealthy parents but in many instances of those who at present are unemployed. These parents derive hope and comfort from the fact that this great Government provides training for their children which they themselves are unable to provide. The destruction of this hope and comfort in the discontinuing of their children's vocational education will further tend to increase the resentment already breeding in the hearts of many of these unemployed. They will say "Our Government has done little for us in this depression, and now proposes to throw out the educational opportunities of our children. What can the future hold for them?"

The American public school is doing more than any other agency to make good citizens for the future, to perpetuate American institutions, and to establish American ideals. Let us not, under the guise of economy, break down the confidence and wholehearted support that the American people have always given our public school system.

A survey covering five years shows that the money spent by the Federal Government is a paying investment. For example, a boy who elects to take vocational agriculture is required to devote six months in some practical work on the farm under the supervision of a teacher. Accurate cost accounts have been kept for the 5-year period to ascertain the labor income from this practical work. The total labor income from this source during a period of five years amounted to $23,637,924.25. The total amount appropriated for this worth-while activity during this 5-year period was $10,418,460. Would it be good economy for the Federal Government to discontinue an activity which not only makes such a valuable contribution to the labor income of the Nation but which at the same time is training these young people for lives of usefulness?

It is my earnest and sincere hope that every Member of the House of Representatives will vote against this attempt to abolish the appropriation for vocational education entirely or to suspend or curtail it in any measure.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, April 27, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Wednesday, April 27, 1932, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

WAYS AND MEANS

(10 a. m.)

Continue hearings on soldiers' bonus.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

(10.30 a. m.)

Tribal and individual affairs of the Osage Indians (S. 3085).

LABOR

(10.30 a. m.)

To amend the act approved March 3, 1931, relating to the rate of wages for laborers and mechanics employed by contractors and subcontractors on public buildings (S. 3847).

NAVAL AFFAIRS

(10.30 a. m.)

To authorize the President to dispense with unnecessary naval shore establishments (H. R. 11333).

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

541. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated April 23, 1932, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on preliminary examination of Steinhatchee River into Deadmans Bay, Fla.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

542. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated April 23, 1932, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on preliminary examination of channel in Horseshoe Cove, Dixie County, Fla., from the mainland to the Gulf of Mexico; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

543. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated April 22, 1932, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on preliminary examination of channel from Beaufort Inlet, N. C., via the Inland Waterway and Neuse River to New Bern; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

544. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report dated April 22, 1932, from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, on preliminary examination of the Hocking River for the distance it flows through Athens County, Ohio; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. KNUTSON: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 8393. A bill providing for payment of $100 to each enrolled Chippewa Indian of the Red Lake Band of Minnesota from the timber funds standing to their credit in the Treasury of the United States; with amendment (Rept. No. 1133). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. RAYBURN: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 11246. A bill authorizing the Boca Chica Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Rio Grande at Boca Chica, Tex.; with amendment (Rept. No. 1134). Referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. MONTET: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 3037. A bill for the relief of James J. Gianaros; without amendment (Rept. No. 1129). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mrs. KAHN: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 8669. A bill for the relief of George W. Edgerly; without amendment (Rept. No. 1130). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MONTET: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 9053. A bill for the relief of Carl C. Baxter; with amendment (Rept. No. 1131). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. BLACK: Committee on Claims. H. R. 10107. A bill for the relief of Weymouth Kirkland and Robert N. Golding; with amendment (Rept. No. 1132). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SHANNON: A bill (H. R. 11615) to establish a holiday to be known as Jefferson's Birthday; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CONDON: A bill (H. R. 11616) declaring November 11 a legal holiday, to be known as Armistice Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HASTINGS: A bill (H. R. 11617) to amend section 15 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Texas: A bill (H. R. 11636) to amend an amendment to the Federal highway act, approved May 21, 1928 (45 Stat. L. 683); to the Committee on Roads.

By Mr. TINKHAM: A bill (H. R. 11637) to provide for the promotion of janitors and cleaners in the Post Office Department; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. GIBSON: A bill (H. R. 11638) to amend section 7 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1902, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CARTER of Wyoming: A bill (H. R. 11639) to authorize extensions of time on oil and gas prospecting permits, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. TINKHAM: A bill (H. R. 11640) to amend section 211 of the Criminal Code, as amended (relating to certain nonmailable matter); to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 11641) to protect national banks; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. MONTAGUE: Resolution (H. Res. 204) providing for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 97, a joint resolution proposing to amend the Constitution of the United States to bar aliens from being counted in congressional apportionments; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. McSWAIN: Resolution (H. Res. 205) for the consideration of H. R. 11051, a bill to provide for the leasing and other utilization of the Muscle Shoal properties, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CULKIN: A bill (H. R. 11618) granting an increase of pension to Caroline E. Schmidling; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FINLEY: A bill (H. R. 11619) granting a pension to Sarah Nantz; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRISWOLD: A bill (H. R. 11620) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth R. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOOPER: A bill (H. R. 11621) granting a pension to Maude Holmes; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 11622) granting an increase of pension to Mary Entsminger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LOZIER: A bill (H. R. 11623) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Perry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MANLOVE: A bill (H. R. 11624) for the relief of Thomas A. Heard; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mrs. OWEN: A bill (H. R. 11625) for the relief of Aurora Booth; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. PARKER of New York: A bill (H. R. 11626) granting an increase of pension to Lovina Whitney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PARSONS: A bill (H. R. 11627) granting a pension to Jessie Carter; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. REED of New York: A bill (H. R. 11628) granting an increase of pension to Emma Pierce; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11629) granting an increase of pension to Selena Luxford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SCHNEIDER: A bill (H. R. 11630) granting an increase of pension to Julia Don Levy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THOMASON: A bill (H. R. 11631) granting a pension to Rosa Wilson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VINSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 11632) granting a pension to Cordie Brandenburg; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GREEN: A bill (H. R. 11633) for the relief of George Preston Thomas; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PEAVEY: A bill (H. R. 11634) granting an increase of pension to Sarah A. Dearborn; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STRONG of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 11635) for the relief of George B. Barrett; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

7067. By Mr. ANDREWS of New York: Petitions from 1,075 employees of the Buffalo post office, urging opposition to the several pay-cut measures being proposed for postal employees and President Hoover's economy (furlough) plan; to the Committee on Economy.

7068. By Mr. BOEHNE: Petition of C. T. Lamb Division, No. 414, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Petersburg, Ind., urging support of the bill known as the Parker bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7069. By Mr. CULKIN: Petition of the Common Council of the City of Oswego, N. Y., urging the repeal of the eighteenth amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7070. Also, petition of Oswego Falls Corporation, Fulton, N. Y., and 20 other paper mills of central and northern New York, opposing any tariff legislation, countervailing, equalizing, or otherwise, on wood pulp or pulpwood; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7071. By Mr. JENKINS: Petition signed by 23 citizens of southern Ohio, protesting against the passage of House bills 8092 and 8759, or any other compulsory Sunday observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

7072. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of the American Agricultural Chemical Co., New York City, Horace Bowker, president, opposing an increase of the Federal transfer tax on stock sales; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7073. Also, petition of National Federation of Federal Employees, opposing the so-called omnibus economy bill for certain reasons; to the Committee on Economy.

7074. By Mr. MEAD: Petition of the Common Council of the City of Buffalo, favoring payment of the soldiers' bonus; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7075. Also, petition of the Disabled Provisional Officers of the World War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

7076. Also, petition of the New York State Department of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States opposing reduction in military appropriations and favoring an appropriation sufficient to provide inactive duty and the training of pilots; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7077. Also, petition of San Antonio Chapter, Disabled Emergency Officers of World War; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

7078. By Mr. PARKER of Georgia: Petition of Dr. Walter E. Simmons, mayor city of Metter, and nine other citizens of the State of Georgia, urging the enactment of legislation regulating busses and trucks engaged in hauling passengers and freight; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7079. Also, petition of William H. Berans and 53 other residents of Savannah, Ga., urging the immediate payment of the remaining 50 per cent of the World War veterans' adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7080. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of Carroll S. Smith, New York City, favoring the passage of House bill 11207; to the Committee on Economy.

7081. Also, petition of Baker, president Local 411, West Point, N. Y., opposing reduction of the Federal employees' salaries and payless furloughs; to the Committee on Economy.

7082. Also, petition of the American Agricultural Chemical Co., New York City, opposing increase of the Federal transfer tax on stock sales; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7083. Also, petition of Cooperative G. L. F. Credit Corporation, Ithaca, N. Y., favoring the passage of the Norbeck-Steagall bill; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

7084. Also, petition of M. J. Strathowe, Maspeth, Long Island, N. Y., opposing the suspension for one year of Federal aid for vocational education; to the Committee on Economy.

7085. Also, petition of American Legion Auxiliary, Queens County, N. Y., opposing reduction of hospitalization and compensation of World War veterans; to the Committee on Economy.

7086. Also, petition of Manahan Chemical Co., New York City, opposing the passage of the Muscle Shoals bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

7087. Also, petition of William J. Olvany (Inc.), New York City, favoring the passage of House bill 9975; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

7088. By Mr. SANDERS of New York: Petition of Tony Ippolito and seven other World War veterans of Avon, N. Y., favoring immediate payment of the balance of the soldiers' bonus; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7089. By Mr. SELVIG: Petition of Cloquet Commercial Club, Cloquet, Minn., favoring enactment of House bill 8688, providing for a compensating duty to be paid on pulpwood shipped into the United States by countries whose currency is depreciated; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7090. Also, petition of Railroad Employees' National Pension Association, urging enactment of railroad pension bill, H. R. 9891; to the Committee on Labor.

7091. Also, petition of C. C. Stetson, St. Paul, Minn., favoring retrenchment of Government expenses wherever possible; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7092. Also, petition of C. W. Bjorness, Helmer Gaustad, and others, of Henning, Minn., and vicinity favoring immediate cash payment of bonus certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7093. Also, petition of Selmar Waldemar, Richard Berg, and others, of Henning, Minn., and vicinity urging immediate cash payment of adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7094. Also, petition of Shipmasters Association of Duluth, Minn., opposing decommissioning of the U. S. S. Paducah and any cancellation of training cruises for Naval Reserve; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7095. Also, petition of Park Region District and County Medical Society of Minnesota, opposing House bill 7525; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7096. Also, petition of George Morck and others, of Skime, Minn., favoring payment of soldiers' bonus; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7097. Also, petition of Minnesota Vocational Agriculture Instructors Association, numbering 75 instructors in Minnesota, urging continued appropriation to maintain valuable agricultural training; to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 27, 1932

(Legislative day of Monday, April 25, 1932)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 3095) for the relief of J. J. Bradshaw and Addie C. Bradshaw.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1770) for the relief of Senelma Wirkkula, also known as Selma Wirkkula; Alice Marie Wirkkula; and Bernice Elaine Wirkkula.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills of the Senate, each with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 194. An act for the relief of Jeff Davis Caperton and Lucy Virginia Caperton; and

S. 3270. An act for the relief of Daniel S. Schaffer Co. (Inc.).

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 804. An act for the relief of Mary L. Marshall, administratrix of the estate of Jerry A. Litchfield;

H. R. 1230. An act for the relief of Chase E. Mulinex;

H. R. 1260. An act for the relief of James E. Fraser;

H. R. 1290. An act for the relief of Jeannette Weir;

H. R. 1322. An act for the relief of Anna Lohbeck;

H. R. 1786. An act for the relief of Arthur H. Teeple;

H. R. 2013. An act for the relief of Pinkie Osborne;

H. R. 2033. An act for the relief of Theresa M. Shea;

H. R. 2042. An act for the relief of Hedwig Grassman Stehn;

H. R. 2189. An act for the relief of Elsie M. Sears;

H. R. 2841. An act for the relief of the owners of the steamship Exmoor;

H. R. 3467. An act for the relief of David C. Jeffcoat;

H. R. 3582. An act for the relief of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co.;

H. R. 3693. An act for the relief of William Knourek;

H. R. 3811. An act for the relief of Lela B. Smith;

H. R. 3812. An act for the relief of the estate of Harry W. Ward, deceased;

H. R. 4071. An act for the relief of W. A. Blankenship;

H. R. 4233. An act for the relief of Enza A. Zeller;

H. R. 4885. An act for the relief of Kenneth G. Gould;

H. R. 5052. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Juneau, Alaska, to use the funds arising from the sale of bonds in pursuance to the act of Congress of February 11, 1925, for the purpose either of improving the sewerage system of said town or of constructing permanent streets in said town;

H. R. 5256. An act for the restitution of employees of the post office at Detroit, Mich.;

H. R. 5265. An act for the relief of A. W. Holland;

H. R. 5940. An act for the relief of Florian Ford;

H. R. 5998. An act for the relief of Mary Murnane;

H. R. 6487. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000 for the purpose of improving and enlarging the capacity of the municipal light and power plant, and the improvement of the water and sewer systems, and for the purpose of retiring or purchasing bonds heretofore issued by the town of Petersburg;

H. R. 6713. An act for estimates necessary for the proper maintenance of the Government wharf at Juneau, Alaska;

H. R. 7308. An act for the relief of Amy Turner;

H. J. Res. 361. Joint resolution to authorize the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service to make a survey as to the existing facilities for the protection of the public health in the care and treatment of leprous persons in the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes; and

H. J. Res. 375. Joint resolution to provide additional appropriations for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Couzens	Johnson	Reed
Austin	Cutting	Jones	Robinson, Ark.
Bailey	Dale	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Bankhead	Dickinson	Kendrick	Schall
Barbour	Dill	Keyes	Sheppard
Barkley	Fess	King	Shipstead
Bingham	Fletcher	La Follette	Shortridge
Black	Frazier	Lewis	Smoot
Blaine	George	Logan	Steiwer
Borah	Glass	McGill	Stephens
Bratton	Glenn	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Broussard	Goldsborough	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Gore	Metcalf	Townsend
Bulow	Hale	Morrison	Trammell
Byrnes	Harrison	Moses	Tydings
Capper	Hastings	Neely	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hatfield	Norbeck	Wagner
Carey	Hawes	Norris	Walcott
Connally	Hayden	Nye	Walsh, Mass.
Coolidge	Hebert	Oddie	Watson
Copeland	Howell	Patterson	White
Costigan	Hull	Pittman

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

SENATOR FROM GEORGIA

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I send forward the credentials of the Senator designate from Georgia, Hon. JOHN S. COHEN, and ask that they be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the certificate of appointment, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the certificate, as follows:

STATE OF GEORGIA,
EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Atlanta.

A proclamation by his Excellency Richard B. Russell, jr., Governor of the State of Georgia

To the Senate of the United States:

Whereas a vacancy now exists in the office of Senator in the Congress of the United States from the State of Georgia by reason of the death of Hon. William J. Harris:

Therefore, I, Richard B. Russell, jr., Governor of the State of Georgia, by authority of the Constitution of the United States and the act of the General Assembly of Georgia, approved August 16, 1913, do hereby designate and appoint Hon. JOHN S. COHEN, of the county of Fulton, this State, to the office of Senator in the Congress of the United States, vice Hon. William J. Harris, deceased, to serve until the people of this State fill the vacancy by election as provided by law, and until his successor is duly qualified.

In witness whereof I hereunto set my hand and cause the great seal of the State of Georgia to be affixed at the capitol, in the city of Atlanta, this State, on the 25th day of April, in the year of our Lord 1932, and of the independence of the United States one hundred and fifty-sixth.

By the governor.

RICHARD B. RUSSELL, JR.,
Governor.

[SEAL.]

JOHN B. WILSON,
Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The credentials will be placed on file.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator designate is present, and I request that he now be given the oath of office.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator designate will present himself at the desk and receive the oath of office.

Mr. COHEN, escorted by Mr. GEORGE, advanced to the Vice President's desk, and, the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

CATTARAUGUS, ALLEGANY, AND OIL SPRINGS INDIAN RESERVATIONS, N. Y. (S. DOC. NO. 87)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, in further response to Senate Resolution No. 248, of the Seventy-first Congress (dated April 16, 1930), a final report on an examination made of the receipts of moneys arising from the leasing of lands and properties of the Indians on the Cattaraugus, Allegany, and Oil Springs Reservations, in the State of New York, referred to in his preliminary report submitted on January 12, 1931 (S. Doc. No. 253, 71st Cong., 3d sess.), which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a list of documents and abstract books on file in the Indian warehouses at Chicago, Ill., St. Louis, Mo., and San Francisco, Calif., which are not needed or useful in the transaction of current business of the department and have no permanent value or historical interest, and asking for action looking to their disposition, which was referred to a Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. NYE and Mr. PITTMAN members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE PUBLIC BUILDINGS COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 88)

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I submit the annual report of the Public Buildings Commission for the calendar year 1931, and ask that it may be printed, with illustrations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the board of aldermen of the city of Chelsea, Mass., protesting against the proposed closing of navy yards on the Atlantic seaboard by the Secretary of the Navy, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented petitions, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of Senate bill 1197, known as the Frazier farm relief bill, and other farm relief measures, especially the so-called Swank bill (H. R. 7797) and the so-called Wheeler bill (S. 2487), which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts presented a memorial, numerously signed, of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, remonstrating against the proposed 10 per cent tax on sporting goods in the pending tax bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TYDINGS presented a petition of a committee of the Young Men's Democratic Club of the eighth ward, of Baltimore, Md., praying for the immediate payment in cash at full face value of adjusted-compensation certificates (bonus) of World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Port Deposit, Md., remonstrating against the imposition of taxes on automobiles, gasoline, and, in general, on the motor industry in the pending tax bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BARBOUR presented a resolution adopted by the Board of Education, Essex County Vocational Schools, of Newark, N. J., protesting against the proposed withdrawal of Federal aid for vocational education to the States, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Board of Directors of the Employers' Association of North Jersey, N. J., protesting against the passage of legislation providing for the payment of adjusted-compensation certificates (bonus) of World War veterans at the present time, and also favoring the prompt enactment of pending tax legislation so that the country may make early adjustment thereto, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ASHURST presented a telegram from Kibbey, Bennett, Gus T. Smith, and Rosenfeld, of Phoenix, Ariz., with reference to pending legislation proposing to restrict or prevent removal to the Federal courts of suits brought in State courts against foreign corporations, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a telegram, in the nature of a memorial, from employees of the post office at Prescott, Ariz., signed by Alva Sims, president, and W. E. Lawson, secretary, remonstrating against proposed changes in working standards and reductions in the compensation of postal employees, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a telegram, in the nature of a memorial, from the Arizona Rural Letter Carriers' Association, signed by W. A. Brown, secretary, Phoenix, Ariz., remonstrating against the proposed 10 per cent cut in appropriations for the Post Office Department, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BETTERMENT OF DENTAL MATERIALS

Mr. HASTINGS presented a letter from the L. D. Caulk Co., of Milford, Del., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[The L. D. Caulk Co., originators and manufacturers of dental filling materials and dental specialities]

MILFORD, DEL., April 13, 1932.

Hon. DANIEL O. HASTINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: There is a small appropriation—approximately $10,000—which has for a number of years been carried in the Budget for the Bureau of Standards, which is the basis of cooperation between the Bureau of Standards and the American Dental Association for scientific investigations for the betterment of professional dental service in the interest of the general health.

The American Dental Association has shared in the expense of this work by an annual appropriation of its own, and is very much interested that the work should be continued for the general good, and as a member of the American Dental Association I ask your support of it.

The provision relates to the investigation of dental materials by the Bureau of Standards.

I will thank you greatly for your personal interest in this matter.

Very truly yours,

THE L. D. CAULK CO.,
G. LAYTON GRIER, President.

PREFERENCE OF VETERANS IN CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. REED. Mr. President, at my request in the last Congress there was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD some comprehensive material on the subject of the preference of veterans in the civil-service employment of the Government. In the present Congress there is pending legislation proposing the consolidation of certain governmental agencies, which proposal has long been advocated by the American Legion. I have had submitted to me through Maj. Paul J. McGahan, former American Legion national executive committeeman from the District of Columbia, who was chairman of the Legion's national committee on veterans' preference last year, a copy of a resolution on these subjects adopted by the Legion at its Detroit convention and the report of this special committee.

I believe it will serve the convenience of the members of the Senate if this material appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, so as to complete the information available from the Legion. I therefore send the letter and the report to the desk and ask unanimous consent that they may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter and report are as follows:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
DEPARTMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, D. C., April 25, 1932.

Hon. DAVID A. REED,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR REED: On two previous occasions you have done me the honor to give consideration to some studies that I have undertaken with regard to the preferential rights of former service men and women under the civil service of the Federal Government. For a number of years I have been actively connected with the local and national considerations by the American Legion of this subject. Under date of November 22, 1929, you caused to be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the first serious brief prepared by the American Legion, and on March 2, 1931, you again caused to be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD another treatise.

At the last national convention of the American Legion, held in Detroit in September, 1931, consideration was again given to the subject of veteran preference in the civil service and the proposed consolidation under the Civil Service Commission of the personnel activities of the Federal Government.

At that convention, as chairman of the legion's national committee on veteran preference, I drafted and introduced—and the convention approved and adopted—the following resolution:

"Whereas the American Legion in its national convention assembled in Omaha, 1925; Paris, 1927; San Antonio, 1928; and Boston, 1930, declared its opinion that the Congress of the United States should abolish the United States Bureau of Efficiency, the United States Personnel Classification Board, and the United States Workmen's Compensation Board and transfer their functions to the United States Civil Service Commission; and

"Whereas it is the conviction of ex-service men and women, particularly those in the employ of the Federal Government, that the preferential rights of veterans as established by basic law and presidential Executive orders have continued to be seriously transgressed and that particular efficiency ratings should be based upon fact and not utilized under the 'general average' clause of congressional appropriation acts as a method of distributing salaries; and

"Whereas during the period since the Boston convention powerful and influential organizations and groups of national scope have renewed and continued the effort to divest the veteran of existing rights; and

"Whereas there are known to be under consideration at the present time plans and programs for the consolidation of the personnel functions of the United States civil service; and

"Whereas a special committee of the American Legion to study these matters and make recommendations to the national legislative committee regarding them was authorized at the Boston convention in Resolution 290, which committee has actively functioned the past year: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the American Legion in its thirteenth annual convention assembled, this 24th day of September, 1931, in Detroit, Mich., That the position heretofore taken by the American Legion with regard to the consolidation heretofore mentioned and the protection of the preferential rights of veterans in the civil service is hereby reiterated and reaffirmed; that the national legislative committee is again instructed to keep the subject of veterans' preference legislation in its major program for the ensuing sessions of Congress until desired remedies as have been previously outlined in detail shall have been obtained; and be it further

"Resolved, That there is hereby established as a permanent committee of the American Legion a committee on veterans' preference, to serve annually and to be of such size as the national commander shall deem necessary, the duty of which shall continue to be to study all the questions involved and submit its recommendations and suggestions to national headquarters and the national legislative committee for the information and guidance of all concerned."

This resolution was prompted by the developments encountered by the special committee of the national organization of which I was the chairman and which were reviewed in the report prepared for the American Legion by that committee, which I am inclosing for your special attention.

Since you were good enough to cause to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD these previous American Legion studies of a situation which is now actively before the Congress in proposed legislation, may I not suggest that this letter and the report on the special committee's activities for last year be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD? I believe they will round out and complete for the ready reference of your colleagues in the Senate and the Members of the House these views of the veterans themselves.

The federally employed veteran is much in the public attention just now, and, appreciating your long-sustained interest, I am venturing to submit this request. I told you a year ago that the veteran was still a long way from that position of preference in Federal employment that is promised him. You will note that the President's commission took pretty much that view, and perhaps if the consolidation of the personnel agencies can be brought about, as we have so long contended, there will be a betterment of things from all angles involved.

Faithfully yours,

PAUL J. MCGAHAN,
Past National Executive Committeeman,
The American Legion.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' PREFERENCE OF THE AMERICAN LEGION

[Paul J. McGahan, Washington, D. C., chairman; Norman L. Marks, New York City; Edward L. Mulrooney, Wilmington, Del.; Al P. Boyle, Chicago, Ill.; Dr. A. D. Houghton, San Fernando, Calif; Arthur D. Healey, Boston, Mass.; Staten Hankins, Austin, Tex.; and Thomas J. Salter, Las Vegas, Nev.]

The Thirteenth National Convention of the American Legion will mark the receipt of the first results of a national committee of the Legion on the question of the preferential rights of veterans under the Federal civil service. The only action that the committee above named will ask is that a permanent national group to study this subject and its ramifications be set up and hereafter be a permanent feature in the national activities.

This report is going to include as integral parts two documents which have heretofore appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the Congress of the United States. By means of these reports a rather comprehensive picture of civil-service preference to ex-service men and the American Legion's last-assumed position in this regard are presented:

The first of these two CONGRESSIONAL RECORD extracts are the remarks of United States Senator DAVID A. REED, of Pennsylvania, in the Senate on Friday, November 22, 1929. On that occasion Senator REED's observations, together with a letter of the chairman of this committee, who was then a member of the national executive committee representing the District of Columbia Department; a memorandum from Harlan Wood, then department commander of the District of Columbia Department; a copy of the important Executive order signed by President Coolidge two days before he went out of office; and a report prepared by a special committee of the District of Columbia Department of the Legion occupied some 10 pages in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

In this collection of data is to be found the most comprehensive and accurate recital of the preference rights under the Federal civil service of veterans. Particular attention is invited to the brief of the special committee of the District of Columbia Department. The committee which drafted this document was composed of comrades whose knowledge of the subject was such that even though more than three years has passed since it was prepared, no one of its statements or premises has been challenged. It might be stated at this point that it was as a consequence of this document that a special commission appointed by former President Coolidge to examine into the question of the application of veterans' preference reached the conclusions which made it possible for Mr. Coolidge to enunciate the Executive order under which very favorable treatment to veterans in the civil service was given.

The second of the extracts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD above referred to is likewise taken from remarks made in the United States Senate by Senator DAVID A. REED, of Pennsylvania, on March 2, 1931. On that occasion Senator REED, at the request of your committee, caused to be inserted a letter which set forth the details of an inquiry from the Hon. Thomas E. Campbell, head of the United States Civil Service Commission, who was chairman of an advisory committee convened by President Hoover to reopen the subject of the preferential rights afforded veterans and make recommendations to the President for revision or termination. It contains the text of Chairman Campbell's letter outlining the scope of the inquiry, which was addressed to National Commander Ralph T. O'Neil, who had in turn directed the chairman of your committee to make the American Legion reply. This reply in full text, which was submitted to Chairman Campbell and the members of his committee on January 1, 1931, likewise is printed in full in Senator REED's remarks as of March 2, 1931.

A careful study of these two documents hereinabove mentioned will give to the interested person a comprehensive view of the whole topic of veterans' preference in the Federal service and the difficulties which currently beset it. In addition, it is confidently believed by this committee that they will be compelling implements in causing the national convention at Detroit to adopt the resolution being submitted by this committee, which calls for the permanent establishment of a national American Legion committee to give continuous study to the problems of the preferential employment of veterans not only under the Federal Government but under State or local government as well.

For a great many years it has been a principal in American Government that the survivor of military or naval service should have a preferential right, subsequent to his or her discharge from the Federal military service to civil employment primarily this preferential right began under the Federal Government, but as the years have passed and the Nation has been involved in international conflict this same veterans' preference has been accorded to civil employees of the various States and respective municipalities and local political units.

The Federal civil service at the present time aggregates approximately 650,000 persons, and it should be of more than passing interest to legionnaires to know that approximately 125,000 of these scattered from one end of the United States to the other are persons male and female who at one time or another were part of the Military or Naval Establishment of the Nation. How many there are who likewise have this same veterans' status and are the beneficiaries of preferential status and treatment under State and municipal civil-service laws and requirements, this year's temporary committee now submitting this report has no data to refer to.

But the position of the legion is that the veteran is entitled to preference in appointment to positions under the Federal, State, and local Governments, because of having served the country in a time of need, and further, that in the event of reduction of personnel the efficiency of the veteran being equal or superior to that of a nonveteran, the veteran shall be retained in service. On this the legion in all its representations has been and will be firm, believing that it is not asking anything that is inequitable or anything that will in any measure impair that efficiency which the taxpayer has a right to demand of the civil government and indeed which must be exacted regardless of any entering conditions.

Preference to veterans under the civil service of the Federal Government is a grant by an act of Congress. It represents an effort to bestow upon those who served the Nation in a time of great distress, to be regarded as an expression of the good will and interest in individual well-being, on the part of the people of the Nation.

Foreign nations have long recognized the principles of rewarding within the civil-employment list of the State the returned veteran. One of the fields which your committee would commend to the permanent committee which it is confident the national convention at Detroit will direct be established, is the assembling of comprehensive data relative to the manner in which the other nations deal with the preferential treatment of their veterans in the matter of civil employment, be it state or local. It is the belief of your committee that Fidac, through its officers and headquarters, would be delighted to furnish the American Legion with comprehensive data in this respect.

The World War tremendously enlarged the number of veterans in the United States. The principle of veterans' preference had been established prior to the World War. So far as the Federal Government is concerned, there were thousands of individuals employed by it when the call to the colors came in 1917, who went forth then into military and naval careers. At this time there came that huge enlargement of the Federal civil service. When the war was over, there followed extensive revamping of the structure and personnel of the Federal civil service. It has in the subsequent years grown in size.

Washington, the seat of the Federal Government, naturally has the greatest concentration of Federal employees. It was not long after the American Legion was organized that the legionnaires of the District of Columbia department, all of them veterans and the majority of them federally employed, discovered to their sorrow that the preference to veterans established and proclaimed by law and buttressed by presidential Executive order, were failing to preserve not only their rights but the rights of every other federally employed veteran—whether he be Civil War, Spanish-American War, or former enlisted or commissioned personnel.

In the administration of the late President Harding the question of a real definition of the preferential rights of veterans was considered, not only as to appointment but also to retention in the service where reductions and consolidations were contemplated.

The District legionnaires started a battle to insure the protection of the veteran in the rights which it was felt the law intended they should have. Because the separation from the service and other incidents that so disturbed the District of Columbia legionnaires were not being felt to the same concentrated degree in other parts of the country, and because the Legion membership in other departments was apathetic to the situation, since their contact with the federally employed veteran was comparatively remote, this situation then appeared to be merely a local one to the city of Washington and not national in its import.

It must be said to the credit of the District of Columbia legionnaire, who, incidentally, is representative of the United States, since the majority have come to Washington from other places, that they then and there sought to make the issue a national one.

Resolutions seeking to remedy the conditions were taken to various national conventions; and finally, in 1925, at Omaha, the national convention of the American Legion, at the behest principally of the District of Columbia department, called upon the Congress to abolish the United States Bureau of Efficiency, the United States Personnel Classification Board, and the United States Workman's Compensation Board, and to transfer their functions to the United States Civil Service Commission, and take such other steps as might be necessary to place entirely within the control of the United States Civil Service Commission all Federal personnel matters, and eliminating the existing "general-average clause" from appropriation bills, establish a system which would not only give the veteran those preferential rights accorded to him or her by law upon entering the Federal service but preserve for him and her those preferential rights decreed by Executive order in connection with normal advancement, salary increases, promotion, and retention in the service when a reduction in personnel was contemplated or a consolidation of agencies was to be undertaken.

This committee can not help but comment at this point that, despite the fact that the seriousness of a situation which had its reflection in the attitude toward veterans under State and municipal and civil-service laws, failed to have its impression upon the Legion as a whole.

In subsequent national conventions, at Philadelphia, Pa., in 1926; Paris, France, in 1927; San Antonio, Tex., in 1928, these views were reaffirmed. At Boston in 1930, being convinced that the subject was one in which the American Legion could have more than an academic interest, the national convention adopted a resolution reaffirming the oft-reiterated attitude of the national body on the subject and directed that a committee to study it and to make recommendations to the national legislature committee and the national organization for the guidance of both be established. The committee which is submitting this report was established as a consequence of that mandate.

In the meanwhile very powerful influences were seeking to bring about the total abolition of any preferential rights for veterans. Leading in this movement was the National Civil Service Reform League, with headquarters in New York. Collateral with this movement was that of certain independent and governmental agencies, among the latter of which was the Personnel Classification Board, which were giving study to a personnel program for the Federal civil service. At the same time the National Federation of Federal Employees was likewise studying the entire subject of the classified Federal service. These were the principal agencies identified with the Federal aspect of the question. Numerous agencies having to do with the State and municipal phases were likewise active. This summary brings us to a report on what has proven to be the major activity of this committee now reporting and which doubtless will be the field to which the permanent committee must of necessity address itself in future considerations of the whole subject of whether or not the veterans shall be preferred and those preferences made permanent.

As an exhibit which this committee feels should be regarded as an integral part of this report, and which is appended hereto, is the report of the President's Advisory Committee on Veterans' Preference, which was submitted to President Hoover on April 21, 1931. This President's advisory committee is the body which most recently has considered the subject of veterans' preference in all of its ramifications. It was headed up as chairman by Gov. Thomas E. Campbell, the president of the Civil Service Commission, and included Gen. Frank T. Hines, Veterans' Administrator;

Congressman Royal C. Johnson, chairman of the House of Representatives Committee on Veterans' Legislation; Attorney General Seth W. Richardson; and John Thomas Taylor, vice chairman of the American Legion's national legislative committee. It was to this commission that the briefs previously referred to as having been inserted into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Senator REED were presented by the chairman of this committee appearing for the national organization.

The President's committee considered the subject at various times from December, 1930, until late in April following. On April 24 President Hoover issued an Executive order amending the civil-service rules relating to veterans' preference.

In the annual report of the Civil Service Commission covering the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, which has been prepared to be submitted to Congress when that body convenes next December, the effects of this new Executive order will be described in the following language:

"The Executive order of April 24, 1931, made the following changes in veterans' preference regulations:

"Under the new order a disabled veteran, to receive the addition of 10 points to his earned rating, must have an existing service-connected disability, whereas the former order allowed the 10-point preference to all disabled veterans. It is not expected that this change will reduce the number of disabled veterans appointed, but under the new provision those whose opportunity for appointment is enhanced by the 10-point addition, and by being placed at the top of the register in competition only with other 10-point preference eligibles, are those who were disabled in service and whose disability remains.

"The order allows the 10-point preference to officers and enlisted men who are retired and who establish the present existence of service-connected disability.

"When an appointing officer passes over a veteran eligible and appoints a nonveteran whose name appears on the same certificate with a rating the same as or lower than that of the veteran eligible, he must file the reasons therefor with the Civil Service Commission, to become a part of the veteran's record. Prior to the new order it was required that the appointing officer record his reasons in the department concerned. It is expected that the change will have the effect of causing appointing officers to exercise more in considering the relative merits of veteran and nonveteran eligibles.

"The 10-point preference is allowed also to widows of veterans, and to wives of veterans with service-connected disability in cases where the veterans themselves are disqualified for examination by reason of their disability.

"The order authorizes the Civil Service Commission to hold quarterly examinations for positions for which eligible registers exist, which examinations shall be open only to men and women entitled to the 10-point preference. The eligibles resulting from the quarterly examinations are to be placed at the head of the appropriate register in competition with other 10-point preference eligibles only.

"Other preferences established by former Executive orders under the general provision of law remain unchanged. These include the addition of 5 points to the earned ratings of veterans not entitled to the 10-point preference and the preferences relating to age limitations, apportionment, physical requirements, training, and experience, and reduction of force."

Your committee invites particular attention to the fact that from the issuance of the Executive order of March 3, 1923, which first provided for a 10-point preference for disabled veterans to June 30, 1931, 11,527 appointments in the Federal service were made of 10-point preference eligibles.

For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, 2,012 disabled veterans were appointed, as compared with 1,892 in the preceding year, and also 153 veterans' wives and widows entitled to the 10-point preference were appointed in the 1931 fiscal year as against 104 in the preceding year.

The great extent to which the American Legion must be committed to being eternally vigilant in protecting the preference rights and interests of veterans can probably be best appreciated when it is realized that during the period from July 1, 1919, to June 30, 1931, there have been 685,062 persons appointed to the classified service of the Government, and of these an aggregate of 169,395 were veterans with preference. Of this latter number 11,527 have been appointed since July 1, 1923, with 10-point preference, indicating that at least that many disabled men and women have been given Federal employment, and it must not be overlooked that there were 157,868 other veterans also appointed.

Some idea of the material benefit that the 5 and 10 point credit allowed to veterans may be had in the fact that figures compiled in 1930, according to official statistics of the United States Civil Service Commission, show that of 7,304 veterans appointed in that year, 904, or 12.4 per cent earned ratings of less than 70 per cent on the occasion of their examinations and became eligible for appointment through the addition to their earned rating allowed under the regulations. A computation made at the same time shows that of 9,362, 10-point preference eligibles appointed in a period of seven years, 1,657 or 17.7 per cent of this particular group had earned examinations ratings of less than 70 per cent, the required passing mark for ordinary competitors.

The Coolidge Executive order and the Hoover Executive order each became effective during the middle of a fiscal year. As a consequence, it is impossible to obtain a set of figures for a given 12-month period showing the operation of veterans' preference as now administered for 12 consecutive months. There exists, however, the probability that the report of the Civil Service Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, will contain such a set of figures, and this committee earnestly recommends the study of that report by the permanent Legion committee which is now being set up.

Through the courtesy of the United States Civil Service Commission your committee is able at this time, however, to furnish the figures for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1931, showing by departments and independent offices the number of preference and nonpreference eligibles in the Federal civil service certified, appointed, and passed over. These figures disclose the personnel activities of 32 Federal departments and offices blanketing the entire United States.

They reveal that in the 12-month period from July 1, 1930, to June 30, 1931, out of the many thousands of persons who had taken civil-service examinations for positions in the Government, 98,994 had been certified as qualified for appointment, and that 33,417 had been appointed. In making this number of appointments out of the entire list of eligibles, 10,362 had been passed over when appointments were being made and persons on the registers below them given the places.

The figures just cited cover the preference and nonpreference group as a whole. In the 12-month period there were 70,046 nonpreference eligibles certified for positions, and of this number 23,742 were given appointments as 7,203 were passed over.

Now come the figures in which the Legion should be particularly interested, and we will treat of the 10-point preference group first. In this field a total of 7,131 were certified for Federal employment, and while the appointing officers were selecting 2,069 of these for appointment, they passed over 1,127.

In the 5-point preference field there was an aggregate of 21,817 veterans certified for appointment, and as 7,606 were being appointed to positions 2,032 were passed over.

Particular attention is invited to these figures because one of the amendments to civil-service regulations made in the Hoover order of April was aimed to prevent unjustified passing over of a veteran high on the eligible list and giving the job to a person beneath him on that list. The conclusion is rather inescapable that appointing officers are still passing over veterans to a larger degree than they are passing over nonpreference eligibles who have been certified to them. This situation is one to which this committee points emphatically and urges the permanent committee to take under close scrutiny.

In passing, this committee desires to make it clear that it does not believe that all of this apparent passing over of veterans can be attributed to a disinclination on the part of appointing officers to appoint nonveterans over veterans. It must be remembered that when a person on an eligible list is passed over in connection with the making of an appointment, that person retains his or her position on the eligible list and not infrequently is subsequently given an appointment. It has been brought to the attention of this committee as an example that appointing officers have found instances where a disabled veteran could not possibly perform the duties incident to the position then vacant because of the very nature of their disabilities. However, this committee is firmly convinced that since the disabled, the widows and wives, and the veterans generally are the special interest of the Legion, this aspect of the situation must be carefully watched in order that injustices may not be done.

The table just referred to and discussed is likewise included in the appendix to this report.

As has been previously noted by your committee, the principal attack on the preference accorded veterans has been to the effect that the number appointed to positions has been disproportioned to the number of nonpreference competitors appointed and that their advent into the Federal service has impaired its efficiency. It will not be until the report of the Civil Service Commission for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1931, is presented to Congress in December that it will be possible to indicate the class of positions and low rate of pay of the positions to which the bulk of veterans entering the Federal service this last fiscal year have been appointed.

It is highly significant in view of the criticisms that have been made, however, that the Hoover Advisory Committee in its report to him on these points upheld the contentions to the contrary advanced by your committee, to wit, the Hoover committee said at one point: "Your committee recognizes, of course, that under the preference statutes of Congress this larger proportion of appointments to veterans is warranted."

"The committee gave especial consideration to the classes of positions in the examinations for which veterans have competed and received appointment. The total number of veterans who received appointment in the executive civil service last fiscal year was 9,269. Of this number, 8,100 were appointed to positions where the maximum salary they could receive on appointment was $1,800 a year, and many of them received much less than $1,800. There were 883 veterans appointed as unskilled laborers. More than 2,500 entered the Postal Service; 1,755 received mechanic appointments in the navy-yard service; 337 in the engineer department at large; more than 500 in the prohibition-enforcement service; 635 in the Immigration and Customs Services; and 488 were appointed as guards. Only 73 veterans were appointed in the group of positions with a salary range from $3,200 to $4,000 a year; 25 in the salary range from $4,000 to $5,200 a year; 1 was appointed as principal agronomist at $5,600; and 1 was appointed as assistant technical director at $8,000.

"This showing, as established from the official records of the Civil Service Commission, in the view of your committee, does not seem to support any claim that veteran preference as at present administered seriously affects the efficiency of the Government service."

Your committee for the moment desires to express the opinion that a survey of the positions to which during the fiscal year of 1931 the Civil Service Commission informs it 10,063 preference appointments were made out of a total number of 38,461 appointments, it will be found again that the vast majority of these were in the smaller salaried positions.

There is another reason why the American Legion should have a permanent committee on veterans' preference, as is being recommended by this committee, and which we believe will be approved by the Detroit convention. The Federal Government for a number of years, through various agencies, has been engaged in a study of the Federal personnel problems. This study has been participated in by the Congress and by agencies of the Government which have to do with personnel matters. The Welch Act of May 28, 1928, called for a survey by the Personnel Classification Board of certain phases of governmental wage policy and wage administration. During the third session of the Seventy-first Congress two voluminous reports were transmitted to Congress by the director of the Personnel Classification Board. One of these is known as House Document No. 773 of the Seventy-first Congress, third session, and the other is designated House Document No. 772 of the Seventy-first Congress, third session. The first mentioned is a printed book of 289 pages, the second embraces some 1,327 pages, and these are likewise included in the appendix to this report, which is being made as extensive and comprehensive as possible in order that the permanent committee may have ready access at national headquarters. Particular attention is invited to House Document No. 773, which is entitled "A Personnel Program for the Federal Civil Service." This is a report prepared by Herman Feldman, Ph. D., professor of industrial relations the Amos Tuck School of Administration and Finance of Dartmouth College, and economic advisor to the Field Service division of the Personnel Classification Board.

Particular reference should be made to Doctor Feldman's discussion beginning on page 135 of Preferences and Apportionment. In considerable detail extending from page 135 to page 138 Doctor Feldman discusses the entrance preference accorded to veterans. While your committee does not see eye for eye with Doctor Feldman in his conclusions, it nevertheless can not refrain from expressing its gratification at his expression and sentiment with regard to preference for disabled veterans, and for purposes of this report it desires to set forth Doctor Feldman's own language on this point, which is as follows:

"In all fairness a distinction must be made between those who were on the military rolls during the World War and those whose service resulted in disabling injury. With regard to the latter, there appears little doubt that the Government is justified in going far, even though at the expense of a certain amount of efficiency, to make it possible for wounded veterans to earn a living. This has been specially necessary because so many private concerns which voiced eternal gratitude when the war was in progress have not shown sufficient alacrity to provide suitable places for these veterans, thus making it difficult for some of them to secure other employment. The preferences given to these disabled men appeal to every human sympathy."

In this same report Doctor Feldman, on page 191, starts a discussion of "retention preferences of veterans," which is concluded on the following page. Your committee making this report is particularly interested in this phase of Doctor Feldman's conclusions. This interest arises out of the fact that unquestionably when the next or an ensuing Congress takes up the problem of legislative remedy of the ills of the Federal personnel situation, the report prepared by Doctor Feldman will be given serious consideration.

It has been the opinion of this committee that the efficiency-rating system now in vogue in the Federal Government, due principally to the effect of the "general-average clause" in appropriation bills, has not resulted in the rating of Federal employees for their actual efficiency, but, on the contrary, has been principally a method of allocating the employees into the various salaried groups for which a lump-sum appropriation is made.

Executive orders have sought to give the veteran a preference for retention in the service in the event of a reduction in the personnel of any part of the Federal service. The effect of these orders has never been entirely satisfactory to the veterans or to veteran organizations. This committee and officials of the Legion, particularly those identified with the national rehabilitation committee and the national legislative committee, have had personal contact with countless cases where the veteran, guaranteed a preference in Federal employment, has, when reductions in force have become necessary, been the victim of this juggling with efficiency rating and found himself dropped from the rolls.

The criticism of Doctor Feldman on this point is that the veteran organizations intimidate administrative officers into retaining inefficient men and women by protesting against their being dropped.

This committee feels impelled to observe at this time that the American Legion position has always been that the civil service of the Federal Government should be maintained on the most efficient basis, and that in advocating the cause of the federally employed veteran it at no time has insisted that an incompetent be retained. This committee believes that it would be advantageous, just as Doctor Feldman suggests, if it were readily possible for a conference with a high executive authority or a central personnel agency, and would point out that it is precisely for that purpose that it is recommended that there be a permanent committee within the Legion to deal with the problems involved. This committee would go even further than this by observing that it is rather doubtful that the ideal for the Government, as outlined by Doctor Feldman, can ever be attained. In any event there can be no doubt in anyone's mind that such a permanent Legion committee would do other than cooperate to the end of a complete mutual understanding with any public official willing to consult with it.

This committee realizes and appreciates that Doctor Feldman has made a painstaking and conscientious study of the personnel problem. It also appreciates that he, perhaps, did not have the facilities for particularizing on the problem of the veteran in Federal employment that was enjoyed by the two special committees that examined into the veterans question for Presidents Coolidge and Hoover.

When the Congress begins its consideration of this subject, it is the recommendation of this committee that the national legislative committee pay particular attention to seeing to it that the data assembled by the Coolidge and Hoover committees relative to veterans' preference be given consideration. This same recommendation for active observation and action on behalf of the federally employed veteran is also made as a charge to the permanent Legion committee on veterans' preference which this committee believes will be established.

In concluding this report the members and chairman of this committee desire to thank the national commander for the honor paid them in their appointment to serve the American Legion and the veterans generally during the past year.

The committee desires especially to express its appreciation of the courtesies extended to it by Gov. Thomas E. Campbell, of the Civil Service Commission, the chairman of President Hoover's advisory committee on veterans' preference, and the members of that committee.

In compiling this somewhat lengthy report and assembling the numerous exhibits attached herewith the committee has been actuated with a desire to place in the permanent files at national headquarters of the American Legion in Indianapolis, Ind., and available to the proposed permanent committee which it feels sure will be created, the most comprehensive collection of data on the subject of veterans' preference that it was possible for it to assemble.

Respectfully submitted.

For the committee: PAUL J. MCGAHAN, Chairman
National Committee on Veteran Preference.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 25, 1931.

ENLARGED PUBLIC-WORKS PROGRAM—EMERGENCY CONSTRUCTION BONDS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, several days ago I communicated with Prof. Edwin R. A. Seligman, of Columbia University, New York City, who is probably one of the leading economists of the world, and I asked for his opinion as to the proposal incorporated in the bill which I have introduced providing a loan for an enlarged public-works program at this time to help solve the unemployment situation. I have in my hand his response, which I ask may be read for the benefit of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FESS in the chair). Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY,
New York, April 23, 1932.

Senator ROBERT WAGNER,
Committee on Foreign Relations, United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I beg to acknowledge your letter of April 20. The situation is, indeed, a difficult one, and the trouble is that none of us can be absolutely sure that we are right in either our diagnosis or our suggested remedy. In the main, however, I think that you are on the right track. I have always felt that we should treat this emergency of peace very much as we treat the emergency of war, and that we should be perfectly justified in issuing a large emergency peace loan, as we did a Liberty war loan.

There are, of course, certain differences. When we issued the Liberty loan the banks were in good condition, everybody was optimistic and enthusiastic. To-day the situation in those respects is just the reverse. It would not be so easy to place the loan, and the issue of so large a loan would undoubtedly still further depress the market value of existing loans, thus increasing rather than decreasing our difficulties.

On the other hand, I believe that that is about the only way in which we can make a start for the better. All the efforts, and they have been well-considered ones, that are being made by the Government now are good so far as they go, but easy money is not adequate. I doubt whether even if capital were made entirely costless—that is, if the discount rate were reduced to zero—the wheels of industry would be set in motion again at once. The industrialist to-day is more anxious about a possible market for his goods than the cost of producing those goods.

What we need, therefore, is not simply more available credit, although that is good so far as it goes, but the actual setting of the wheels of industry into motion. I do not see how there is any other recourse at present, except a program of Government outlay on a large scale.

We must, of course, distinguish between the balancing of the ordinary Budget, which is imperative, and the creation of an extraordinary or emergency Budget, and I concede that there are always strong arguments to be advanced against Government in business or Government outlays of the kind contemplated because of the inevitable waste and red tape which inhere with us in Government activity. If it were possible to have private industry initiate the movement, it would be far preferable; but under the circumstances it seems to me that the program you sketch out is on the whole the lesser of the evils.

If we are not very careful, we shall see in this country an almost irresistible movement toward real inflation through fiat money. That must be prevented at all costs, and a project like yours is one of the surest antidotes to that deplorable eventuality.

As I have said at the outset, the responsibility is great, and one can not be too sure of his diagnosis, but the time has come, in my opinion, for some constructive efforts on a really large scale. What has thus far been done at Washington is in the nature of a palliative. I think that we are ready now for something positive, and we must not forget the great dangers of inaction and further drifting.

You can make whatever use you want to of these lines. I have refrained hitherto from any public expression of my views because I did not want to appear to be a pessimist, and I am not a pessimist as to the final outcome, but we do need at Washington a great deal more constructive and forward-looking thinking than has yet been manifest.

Faithfully yours,

EDWIN R. A. SELIGMAN.

GOVERNMENT PAY CUTS OR FURLOUGHS

Mr. COSTIGAN presented a communication from the Chemical Society of Washington, D. C., relative to proposed pay cuts or furloughs in the Government service, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHEMICAL SOCIETY OF WASHINGTON,
Washington, D. C.

To the United States Senate:

The Chemical Society of Washington (local section of the American Chemical Society), incorporated for the advancement of chemistry and the promotion of chemical research, whose membership comprises both Government and non-Government chemists, desires to bring to the attention of Congress certain facts which have not been given due weight in the consideration of Government economies by means of proposed pay cuts or furloughs in the Government service.

The Chemical Society feels that it can authoritatively speak for the scientific group of Government employees because of its intimate and first-hand knowledge of the scientific service. It is not the society's desire to speak primarily of the effect which the proposed reductions would have on the individual employee, a matter which has already been adequately presented, but to call attention to the effect which such reductions would have on the efficient conduct of the Government service, and consequently on the interest of the American people.

The society believes that most scientific employees have remained in the Government service because of the stability of employment which has heretofore existed and because of the opportunity to contribute to the health, welfare, and progress of the American people through scientific disoovery. A feeling of security and freedom from financial worry is necessary to permit creative mental effort, without which problems can not be effectively attacked. Every bureau includes numerous scientific employees who have remained in the service at considerable financial sacrifice. The differential in salaries between Government service and private employment, especially in the higher grades of the service, was clearly shown by the "wage and personnel" survey conducted by the Personnel Classification Board and reported to Congress in 1931 (71st Cong., 3d sess., H. Doc. 771).

Any of the various proposals for reductions directly affect the elements of security and stability, and as such can not help but work to the serious and lasting detriment of the scientific work of the Government. The building up of competent scientific staffs at the various bureaus has been a process of years of growth and effort. The destruction of confidence which would now occur would undoubtedly result in the disruption of these highly efficient organizations, when the return of industrial prosperity inevitably brings with it the attraction of much more remunerative private employment. In a recent address Dr. L. V. Redman, president of the American Chemical Society, an organization comprising 18,000 chemists distributed throughout the country, and director of research in an important industry, stated that industrial concerns generally repented the great economic loss which resulted from the disorganization of their scientific staffs during the depression of 1921, by dismissals and pay reductions, and are strongly opposing the repetition of that mistake at the present time. The advocates of pay reductions in the Government service propose that the Government shall now make the same mistake.

In addition to the vital importance of preserving the confidence of the scientists already employed, nothing should be done which will increase the widespread feeling now existing that the Government service does not offer a desirable career for the young chemist.

The Chemical Society believes that the proposed reductions would result in no economies but ultimately in an actual increase in expenditures. They would result in an increase in unemployment, decrease in purchasing power, and set an example for further wage reduction in all fields of employment throughout the country. The society is furthermore opposed to the principle of effecting national economies by placing an undue portion of the burden on all Government employees.

The Chemical Society is not convinced that any form of pay reduction is necessary or desirable. However, if one of the plans must be adopted temporarily, the furlough plan would be the least detrimental.

In conclusion, the Chemical Society of Washington believes that in this present time of stress it should not be hastily concluded that the many projects of scientific control and research which have been undertaken by the executive departments at the direction of Congress are unimportant, unnecessary, or unwise. By and large these projects are of the utmost importance to the health, the safety, the security, and the economic welfare of the American people, and they are prosecuted by men and women who are no less capable, industrious, and purposeful than their fellow scientists in any other branch of activity, and who have a profound consciousness of public service and an abiding loyalty to the Nation.

THE CHEMICAL SOCIETY OF WASHINGTON,
By EDWARD WICHERS, President.
JAMES H. HIBBEN, Secretary.
J. F. COUCH.

APRIL 18, 1932.

APPROPRIATION FOR ERADICATION OF GRASSHOPPER PLAGUE

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I am not unmindful of the opposition there is to appropriation bills and the determined effort to reduce same, even the agricultural appropriation bill, but this bill contains an item of $1,450,000 to aid in the extermination of grasshoppers, a pest that threatens the well-being of half a dozen States. The grasshopper eggs are hatching while we are quibbling.

I ask, Mr. President, that there may be printed in the RECORD a letter from Hon. C. W. Pugsley, president of South Dakota State College, which is self-explanatory.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOUTH DAKOTA STATE COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE AND MECHANIC ARTS,
Brookings, April 21, 1932.

Hon. PETER NORBECK,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR NORBECK: We are becoming more concerned every day about the grasshopper situation in this and adjoining States. We know that you feel the same way, but that you are having difficulty persuading your fellow Members of Congress that the situation is serious. It occurred to me that your position might be strengthened if you had an exhibit of grasshopper eggs. We are sending such an exhibit under separate cover by special-delivery parcel post, and trust that it will arrive in good condition.

These eggs came from Britton, S. Dak., in the northeastern part of the State. Professor Severin, of the entomology department, is receiving many samples of eggs from there and elsewhere now. That section of the State, as you probably know, was not severely damaged last year, but if conditions are ripe for grasshoppers this year the indications are that the damage will be severe. I think that it is safe to say that the potential grasshopper damage in South Dakota is much greater at this time than it was last year because of the greatly increased number of fertile eggs covering a much larger area.

When the package arrives you will find that it consists of a large glass jar, inside which you will find a bottle or mailing tube containing the eggs and soil. Empty the packing material out of the larger jar, open the smaller container, and empty its contents into the larger jar. Sprinkle very slightly with water, just enough to have the soil slightly damp but not enough to make it in any sense sticky or muddy. Screw the lid of the large jar on and set the jar on the top of your desk.

If the eggs have not been damaged in transit by too much heat or lack of humidity you should have plenty of grasshoppers within five days to show your friends. Nothing will be needed in the way of artificial heat; the room temperature with the jar on your desk is all that is needed.

In this connection it may interest you to know that the entomologists of the department of agriculture and of State College last year took about a square foot of surface sod from one-half to 2 inches deep from a fence row near Hamill, in Tripp County, on the farm of Mr. Fenenga. They found that fully 50 per cent of the eggs in this square foot of soil had already hatched. They put the soil in a 2-quart jar and threw it in the car, where it was left for three or four days. When they reached the laboratory with the jar they counted 6,403 live grasshoppers. They made no effort to count the eggs unhatched or the dead hoppers. Professor Severin tells me that it is not unusual at all to find 10,000 grasshopper eggs in a square foot of soil, and that they can be found in many parts of the State to-day in that quantity.

We sincerely hope that the appropriation for grasshopper control may be made very soon. Every day's delay now is likely to mean the inability to destroy thousands of hoppers. It will be some time after the appropriation passes before contracts can be let for the poison, the mixture made, the poison shipped to the counties, and the counties organized for the distribution of the bait.

Our extension service is doing everything possible to make the preliminary organizations, but, of course, they can not proceed beyond a certain point. If the Federal money is to be spent at all, it will accomplish much more if it is available early in the season. As a matter of fact, a delay may mean that the grasshoppers will get such a start in some areas that poison will be completely wasted.

You know, of course, that these hoppers do not hatch out all at once. It is necessary for whoever is supervising the work to instruct the farmers to watch their fields and poison the hoppers as they appear and as they start intensive feeding in the fields of grain. That means constant vigilance, thorough instruction, and well-organized communities. It also means a tremendous amount of poison since the grasshoppers can not all be destroyed at once. The time of hatching is likely to extend over a period of a month and a half or more, depending on conditions.

May I add that three things are possible in connection with the outbreak this summer. One is that weather and other conditions may be ideal for the development of fungus diseases and parasites sufficient to prevent serious damage. If that condition occurs, it will mean that we will have to have lots of rain at the right time, especially during the months of May and June.

The second possibility is that weather conditions and other conditions may be so ideal for hatching of billions of eggs and the development of the hoppers that several times the amount of money suggested in the bill for poisons would not be ample.

It is quite possible, however, that an ample appropriation made in time will so curtail the outbreak that crops can be saved amounting to thousands of times the value of the bait.

I have heard rumors from some of my acquaintances in Washington that you have been opposed in your efforts in connection with this grasshopper-control appropriation by some of your fellow Congressmen, who say that the appropriation should not be made until it is known that the eggs were going to hatch. That is one of the reasons that we are sending you this shipment of eggs. They are beginning to hatch now, and the tests made during the entire winter convince our entomologists that fully 90 per cent of the eggs went through the winter in a fertile condition.

It seems to me that in a case of this kind where there is a chance to save so many millions of dollars that the appropriation should be made early in order to accomplish the most. Much of it will not need to be spent if the eggs do not hatch or if the season is adverse to a grasshopper outbreak. It also seems to me that it is rather shortsighted of the Government to loan hundreds of thousands of dollars to farmers in this area for seed and then to leave the farmer at the mercy of a menace which it is impossible for him to control without Government aid.

I am having this letter and a package of the eggs sent to each Member of the South Dakota congressional delegation, but to nobody else.

Sincerely yours,

C. W. PUGSLEY, President.

REGULATION OF INTERSTATE TRUCKS AND BUSSES—ARTICLE BY WILLIAM HIRTH

Mr. HAWES. Mr. President, I trust there will shortly be reported to the Senate a comprehensive bill giving jurisdiction to the Interstate Commerce Committee to control and regulate interstate traffic of trucks and bus carriers.

William Hirth, publisher of the Missouri Farmer, an authority on the subject of farm problems and an expert in the matter of roads, has addressed an open communication to me, and I ask unanimous consent to have it inserted in the body of the RECORD, and that it may be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce for its consideration. I believe it will be a valuable contribution to the discussion which will soon follow.

There being no objection, the communication was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Hon. HARRY B. HAWES,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: As per my promise to you when I recently appeared before the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, I herewith submit my views on the necessity of giving the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to fix the rates of interstate truck and bus carriers, and to surround the latter with other regulations in the interest of sound public policy. When witnesses appear before a congressional committee the frequent questions asked by the members make it difficult to follow a consecutive line of thought, and I therefore welcome this opportunity to restate what I intended to say in a more coherent manner.

In this connection I am glad to note that the Interstate Commerce Commission has asked Congress for the above authority, and if it is granted I hope the commission will not proceed upon the theory that it must go through a long process of experimentation, for the need for this character of regulation is immediate and acute. Also, I am not in accord with the suggestion of the commission that the railroads and water lines be encouraged to make a greater use of our public highways. As I will endeavor to show later, the congestion on the highways is already such that there is little room left for the motorist.

There is an old and oft-repeated saying that "competition is the life of trade," and thus it is not surprising that many Members of Congress, as well as laymen, have welcomed the new competition which trucks and busses have offered to the railroads during the last few years. But there is another old saying that "all is not gold that glitters," and I think this applies most forcibly in the present instance. That, generally speaking, competition should be preserved in all the great fields of industry goes without saying, but we should always have a care lest such competition leads to demoralization and thus becomes a vice rather than a virtue, and I think this is inevitable in the realm of transportation unless Congress takes a hand and formulates a definite nation-wide policy with reference to interstate truck and bus carriers which are expanding their operations by leaps and bounds, and which under existing conditions are a law unto themselves.

A MENACE TO FARM ORGANIZATIONS

It happens that I am the president of the Missouri Farmers' Association, which besides its larger centralized marketing agencies operates elevators and exchanges in nearly 400 Missouri towns, and when I tell you that our yearly volume of business in grain, livestock, poultry and dairy products, feed, flour, fertilizer, etc., is in excess of $100,000,000 you will appreciate that in these times of depressed farm prices not only is our association overwhelmingly the largest farm organization in any State in the Union but it is a question whether there is a larger one in the country; and, therefore, the problem of transportation is one of tremendous importance to us. That our nearly 400 elevators and exchanges, in which our thousands of farmer members have an investment of approximately $5,000,000, have saved the farmers of Missouri millions of dollars during the last 15 years in an increased price for farm commodities and in a lowered price of feed, flour, fertilizer, etc., is true beyond question, and in proof at the end of the year the profits earned by these elevators and exchanges are divided among our members in proportion to the business each has done, and thus these agencies are operated on a purely cost basis, and more than this a cooperative can not hope to achieve.

In addition to the above elevators and exchanges as late as three years ago we were also operating approximately 350 livestock shipping associations, which gather up the local hogs, cattle, calves, and sheep when they are ready for market, and then they are shipped by rail to the big stockyard centers to our cooperative livestock commission companies, through which they are sold to the packers, order buyers, butchers, etc., and through these terminal marketing agencies we have returned several million dollars in saved commission charges to our members in Missouri and to the members of allied farm organizations in the adjoining States. However, when three years or more ago the trucks appeared upon the scene we suddenly found ourselves confronted by an entirely new situation, and as time has gone on this situation has become increasingly menacing to the very existence of our association; during the early stages of truck expansion the trucker said to the farmer, "Why should you go to the trouble of hauling your livestock to town when I am glad to come to your farm and get it and when I am willing to haul it to market for only a little more than you would have to pay to ship it by rail?" This argument appealed to so many farmers that in a little while we found it impossible to gather up a weekly carload shipment at many points, and as a result many of our livestock shipping associations have gone out of existence, and at this time the strongest of them are seriously menaced.

FARMER HASN'T THOUGHT IT THROUGH

Perhaps at first thought you will say, "If the trucker can offer a more convenient service to the farmer than the railroads, why should not the farmer avail himself of it?" And everything else being equal, this should decide the matter; but the facts are that the "shrink" of livestock by truck is much greater than by rail, and this is true because as the trucks whirl around the innumerable curves on the average highway at a speed of 40 or 50 miles per hour and go up and down hill the livestock is constantly lunging from side to side or from end to end, with the result that it often reaches the stockyards in such a nervous condition that it will neither drink nor eat, and thus a good "fill" is impossible; also many truckers deliver the farmers' livestock to packers who buy direct (not through a public stockyard) on the theory that this will save the farmer the usual selling commissions, feed, yardage charges, etc., and many farmers "fall" for this argument without considering the fact that this policy undermines the great competitive livestock markets where packers and other buyers are compelled to bid against each other, and which situation the livestock producers of the country should maintain at all hazards. When livestock is shipped by rail the movement is much less violent than by truck, and hence when it arrives at the stockyards it is not only ready for a good fill but with fewer bruises, and also the railroads are interested in preserving the great central livestock markets, and thus it can be seen that the average farmer could well afford to ship by rail even if he is compelled to haul his livestock to the nearest shipping point and even though the rail rates were somewhat higher, and I cite these facts merely to show that shipping by truck is not in fact in the interest of the farmer, and if it were the big farm organizations would be the first to give their hearty approval.

It is true that the farmer is not compelled to pay selling commissions, yardage, etc., when his livestock is delivered to a direct packer buyer, but since such a packer is a mere "camp follower" of the big public stockyards in point of price, and since he names without competition the price he is willing to pay, and from which there is no appeal, is it not safe to assume that in the end the farmer loses more than the commissions, yardage, etc., he would pay at a big terminal market? Certainly the direct packer buyer has a reason for wanting to do business in this way, and certainly this reason is not in the interest of the livestock producer, except that trucking has expanded so rapidly that the farmer as yet has not seen both sides of the picture.

A few years ago the marketing of livestock by the big cooperatives seemed one of the finest fields that beckoned to us, and this not only because our big terminal market commission companies were returning hundreds of thousands of dollars in saved commission charges to our members annually but by controlling livestock from the country shipping point to the stockyards we were getting in a fair way to stabilize terminal market prices. But with thousands of unregulated trucks breaking down our livestock shipping associations and delivering livestock to direct packer buyers, and thus weakening the big central competitive markets, and by ignoring our terminal market agencies at other times, this means that one of the greatest opportunities of the cooperative movement has been largely shot into a cocked hat, and as a result the big Corn Belt cooperatives have been greatly enfeebled.

In the meantime, during the last two years the trucker has begun to say to our farmers, "If you will allow me to haul your livestock, and happen to need feed, such as bran, shorts, tankage, poultry feed, fertilizer, etc., I have made arrangements to buy these commodities at the wholesale price, and I will gladly deliver them to your door on this basis in order to get a back haul"; and then the truckers get as much out of the farmer as they can, figuring that they are killing two birds with one stone—first, that in this way they secure a pledge of the farmer's livestock and, second, that even though the back-haul charge is largely nominal, it is that much "velvet" in any case. First, the trucks broke up many of our livestock shipping associations, and now they menace the existence of our nearly 400 elevators and exchanges, in which, as I have said, our members have an investment of $5,000,000, and this because when the truckers offer to deliver feed, fertilizer, etc., to the farmer's door at the wholesale price plus a nominal back-haul charge, neither a cooperative agency nor an independent dealer can long hope to hold their own against such competition. And if somebody asks, "Does not this mean cheaper service to the farmer?" I ask the counterquestion, "Suppose it does on the commodities I have mentioned, but suppose that this practice destroys the big cooperatives, which we have spent years in building up and which market the farmers' grain, livestock, poultry, and dairy products direct to the big consuming centers, and which offer the only hope of the farmer ever having anything to say about what he shall receive for the fruits of his toil?" In this case will not the farmer in the end have traded his birthright for a mess of pottage? We can not pay the operating expense of our elevators and exchanges throughout the year without making a modest profit on feed, flour, fertilizer, etc., and this is why I say that the trucks have begun to menace the existence of these agencies.

OUR ENTIRE DISTRIBUTIVE MACHINERY THREATENED

In their zeal to get a back haul of some kind the livestock truckers and other truckers have almost completely captured the less-than-carload hauling of local merchants, and yet, in my opinion, the latter are penny-wise and pound-foolish, for already certain truckers are peddling merchandise direct to the townspeople just as they are peddling feed to the farmer, and therefore does not this practice threaten to destroy those of our independent merchants who have thus far survived the deadly competition of the chain stores? Certain truckers are also buying up the choice eggs and chickens of the farmer, while the inferior grades are left for our elevators and exchanges and the local merchants to handle as best they can, and thus the demoralization grows apace and threatens the distributive machinery of the whole Nation in which hundreds of millions of dollars are invested.

So serious had these conditions become that in the winter of 1930 the executive committee of our association sponsored certain truck and bus bills in the Legislature of Missouri, and as a result these measures were passed by comfortable majorities. These bills regulate the size of trucks and busses, and give our State public-service commission the right to fix the intrastate rates of such carriers, and yet with St. Louis and Kansas City (which are our principal markets) located on the State lines of Illinois and Kansas, the latter provision is very largely meaningless. The National Stockyards, which are our leading livestock market, are located in East St. Louis, on the Illinois side, while by driving a few blocks farther upon one pretext or another the truckers who haul to the Kansas City Stockyards can likewise qualify as interstate carriers, and thus they are in position to snap their fingers in the face of our public-service commission, and the only remedy in sight is for Congress to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to fix the rates of interstate truck and bus carriers; then and not until then will order come out of chaos, as it did years ago when the Interstate Commerce Commission and our various State public-service commissions put an end to a similar demoralization with reference to the railroads.

LONG HAULS IMPORTANT FACTOR

In order to defend ourselves as best we can, some months ago we began to operate local trucks in certain communities, gathering up the livestock that was ready for market, and then shipping it by rail; at one point where the truckers were charging 50 cents per hundredweight for hauling livestock to East St. Louis, our trucks charged 12 cents per hundredweight to bring the livestock into the local shipping point, and after adding the rail charge, the total charge to the farmer amounted to 35 cents per hundredweight, thus effecting a saving for the farmer of 15 cents per hundredweight; thereupon one of the leading truckers reduced his charge to 35 cents, while another cut to 25 cents, and this merely goes to show that under existing conditions we are powerless to combat the situation, for faced with the loss of their business, the truckers will reduce their rates almost to the vanishing point—and the mere fact that they can not long exist on such a basis offers no comfort, for when one trucker is forced out, there are always two new and inexperienced ones to take his place. And until the interstate trucks are brought under control the enforcement of a fair intrastate rate is greatly handicapped—first, because, as I have said, our livestock movement (which is the backbone of the trucking business) is very largely interstate, and because the enforcement of intrastate rates substantially higher than the interstate rates would soon bring on a public outcry, and hence early action by Congress is the only solution.

And here is another practical certainty that stares us in the face: In the course of the average year, our association ships in several thousand carloads of corn, oats, etc., from the outside States, and we also ship hundreds of carloads of eggs, poultry, sweet cream, and butter to the distant eastern markets, and all of these hauls are long ones in which the railroads are indispensable; therefore, if the trucks and busses are permitted to pick off the cream of the short-haul traffic, in the end will not the Interstate Commerce Commission be compelled to greatly increase the rail rates on the long hauls, a character of traffic for which the trucks are not practical? Already the existing rail rates on grain and cattle out of the distant Northwest, West, and Southwest are a burden which, under the present low price of grain and livestock is almost unbearable, while if there is any material increase in these long-haul rates, they will become utterly confiscatory, and this is likewise true of long merchandise hauls, which, in the end, must come out of the consumer's hide. And, therefore, should not this long-haul problem have the serious thought of Congress? If in this character of traffic the railroads are indispensable, then can not anybody see the direction into which we are drifting? If the long-haul rail rates are materially increased, it will place tens of thousands of farmers who live long distances from the central markets in an almost impossible position, and I, therefore, have little patience with those who are constantly looking for a chance to "pound" the railroads without rhyme or reason, and who are too short-sighted to see what it is leading up to.

POUNDING HIGHWAYS TO PIECES

And now I desire to mention a phase of this matter which, in my opinion, is the most incongruous of all. During recent years our Government and the several States have invested approximately $12,000,000,000 in hard-surfaced highways which cover the country from end to end. Ostensibly these highways were built in the interest of the motorist, and yet no sooner were they ready for service when they were appropriated for private gain by the owners of trucks and busses, and this without compelling these carriers to contribute anything to the original construction cost of these highways, or even to contribute substantially to their maintenance—for such contribution as they make in the latter respect through license fees and a gasoline tax amount to a mere bagatelle, claims to the contrary notwithstanding.

No. 40, the main highway between St. Louis and Kansas City, cost approximately $10,000,000. It has been in use only about four years, and already I think I am safe in saying that 5 per cent of it has been resurfaced, and during the last year its deterioration has been rapidly increasing, and all because of the incessant pounding of the giant trucks and busses which cease neither day nor night. I understand that recently the ex-chairman of our State highway commission made the statement that this great highway will have to be completely rebuilt during the next three years, and in this case the bonds for its original construction will not have run half their maturity period; and if he is right, as I am sure he is, then where are we to get the millions of dollars that will be needed to replace it? In the meantime, as the trucks and busses increase, deadly accidents are likewise increasing, and this not only because of increasing congestion but because the motorist can not see past these huge trucks and busses, and thus he must be content to frequently trail them for a considerable distance, or take chances of a collision with an on-coming car, truck, or bus if he passes them. As a matter of fact, if this character of traffic keeps on increasing, the time is not far distant when the motorist will be driven off our leading highways entirely; and yet it was presumably in his interest that the Government and the States invested the gigantic sum of $12,000,000,000 in our great highway system; and, in my opinion, this situation constitutes the most idiotic and indefensible performance of its kind in the history of our country, and the only way in which we can hope to somewhat make amends is to compel trucks and busses to henceforth contribute their full share toward highway maintenance, and to fix their rates sufficiently high to enable them to do so.

Confined to the motorist, our highways would have lasted almost indefinitely, but, as things stand, the damage done by trucks and busses to our nation-wide highway system already mounts into hundreds of millions of dollars, and how much longer will our Government and the States continue a policy so unsound? Nearly all our leading highways parallel the railroads which are compelled to adhere to published rates, while the trucks and busses are free to prey upon their most desirable patronage as they please, and to make whatever rates they please, and in all decency is this fair?

In saying these things I certainly do not do so as a special pleader for the railroads, for as president of the Missouri Farmers' Association, and chairman of the Corn Belt Committee, which speaks for the big farm organizations of the Central States, I not only vigorously opposed the railroads in the Western Rate case some years ago, but I did likewise with reference to the 15 per cent freight increase for which they asked in 1931, and the records of the Interstate Commerce Commission will bear out this statement. But I can see what a menace the unregulated trucks have become to the continued existence of great cooperatives like the Missouri Farmers' Association, and likewise I see the menace they are with reference to the long-haul rates in which, as the picture looks now, the railroads will be indispensable for a long while to come. All in all, the situation is a good deal like it was years ago when the railroads were a law unto themselves, and when Congress was finally compelled to give the Interstate Commerce Commission authority over interstate rates, leaving it to the public-service commissions of the State to adjust intrastate rates accordingly, and in my opinion it is imperative that Congress adopt a similar policy with reference to trucks and busses, and no time should be lost in doing so—and I repeat that trucks and busses should be compelled to contribute their full share toward the maintenance of our highways, and that their rates should be fixed with this end in view.

A MISGUIDED TRANSPORTATION POLICY

And here I can not refrain from saying that in my opinion the general attitude of Congress during recent years toward our nation-wide transportation problem has been neither constructive nor in the interest of sound public policy. If it is really true that the railroads are the "backbone" of our transportation system, then why should not Congress have long since thrown a protecting arm around them, not in the interest of Wall Street, but to the end that rail rates might have been forced down to a minimum in the interest of all the people?

Is it consistent, on the one hand, to say through the Esch-Cummins Act that the railroads are entitled to a net return of 5¾ per cent and then, on the other hand, to appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars for highways and deep waterways and permit private individuals and corporations to use these subsidized agencies for private gain practically free of charge and thus make it impossible for the railroads to earn the net which the Esch-Cummins Act vouchsafes to them? Is such a policy fair to the railroads, or is it sound from a public standpoint? Should not Congress determine what agency or agencies can best serve the transportation needs of most of our people and then protect such agency or agencies in order that the rates may be kept as low as possible? If it is wise to have only one telephone and one light and power company in the same city in order to give the people the benefit of the lowered operating costs, should not the same general principle apply to transportation as near as possible? In other words, when we encourage as many different modes of transportation as Joseph's coat had colors do we not increase the general burden on the public?

For a good many years we have had a certain type of so-called statesmen who have posed as "friends of the people" by everlastingly jumping onto the railroads, and usually these gentlemen dwell long and loud upon the sins of Wall Street, and in this latter connection I would like to see Congress surround railroad financing with sufficient safeguards so that racketeering bankers will be compelled to choose between jail and decency, for it is perfectly true that there have been many conscienceless and indefensible performances in these premises. But granting that stringent safeguards of this kind are needed, we should realize that the railroads are a tremendous factor in the Nation's prosperity, and this is true because 50 cents or more out of every dollar they collect for service immediately finds its way into the pockets of the approximately 2,000,000 men and women they employ in normal times, yet this is only half the story, for in normal times the railroads consume 25 per cent of the output of our steel mills, 25 per cent of the output of our coal mines, and 20 per cent of the output of our lumber and cement mills, and thus indirectly they supply employment to perhaps a million or more additional workers. Also in practically every State the railroads are our heaviest taxpayers, and therefore they make a heavy contribution to the support of our public schools and higher institutions of learning, and in paying the costs of State, county, and municipal government; and finally, billions of dollars of railroad securities are owned by our great life-insurance companies and savings banks, and have we any funds in our Nation that are more sacred or more entitled to the solicitude of our Government?

EXISTENCE OF RAILROADS AT STAKE

For the above reasons it seems to me that Congress should lose no time in putting an end to the demoralization which has been created by the rapidly expanding truck and bus traffic, a situation which at this hour threatens to drive every railroad in the country upon the rocks; next, I think it should stop using the money of our taxpayers in creating new agencies of transportation which are appropriated for private gain—certainly the least the taxpayer can ask in these premises is that these new agencies shall reimburse the Government and the States dollar for dollar. In my opinion, unless a policy of this kind is adopted, not a railroad in the country will escape a receivership, and in the ensuing chaos the people will, as usual, be compelled to "pay the fiddler." As matters now stand, the railroads personify a giant bull who has a ring in his nose and who is tethered to a tree, and thus completely at the mercy of competing trucks, busses, pipe lines, deep waterways, and airplanes, which are free to assault him as they will, while the Government and the States look on unconcerned; yea, more than unconcerned, for the service of the trucks, busses, deep waterways, and airplanes is being subsidized at tremendous public expense, and that this policy, if continued, means the early destruction of the railroads, lock, stock, and barrel, is as certain as the rising and setting of the sun. Already many branch lines have been abandoned, and thus the doors are locked on hundreds of small-town stations in which only yesterday an obliging station agent was known by his first name to every man, woman, and child. And when the deep snows and blizzards of winter come these towns will be without service, for the trucks and busses are fair-weather birds which come and go when and as they please. If the railroads have outlived their usefulness, then perhaps the impending tragedy is inevitable, but should not Congress and the States make sure that this is really true? No one will deny that these competing agencies of transportation have a rightful place in the picture, but they should be so regulated that they will not undermine and demoralize our entire transportation structure.

WILLIAM HIRTH.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 3191. An act for the relief of Anne B. Slocum (Rept. No. 601);

H. R. 7119. An act to authorize the modification of the boundary line between the Panama Canal Zone and the Republic of Panama, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 602); and

H. R. 9393. An act to increase passport fees, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 603).

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2352) amending the act entitled "An act authorizing the Court of Claims to hear, determine, and render judgment in the civilization fund claim of the Osage Nation of Indians against the United States," approved February 6, 1921 (41 Stat. 1097), reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 605) thereon.

INVESTIGATION OF CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES IN 1932

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the resolution (S. Res. 174) for an investigation of campaign expenditures of presidential, vice presidential, and senatorial candidates in 1932, reported it with an additional amendment.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mr. VANDENBERG (for Mr. WATERMAN), from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on the 26th instant that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 3570) to amend the act entitled "An act confirming in States and Territories title to land granted by the United States in the aid of common or public schools," approved January 25, 1927.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF THE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nomination of Oscar S. Heizer, of Iowa, now a Foreign Service officer of class 4, and a consul, to be a consul general of the United States of America; and also sundry nominations of officers in the Diplomatic and Foreign Service.

He also, from the same committee, reported favorably the following treaties:

Executive B, Seventy-second Congress, first session, a treaty of arbitration and conciliation between the United States and Switzerland, signed at Washington on February 16, 1931; and Executive F, Seventy-second Congress, first session, a treaty of establishment and sojourn, signed by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and the Republic of Turkey at Ankara on October 28, 1931.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NORRIS:

A bill (S. 4496) to amend the Federal water power act, as amended; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. BORAH:

A bill (S. 4497) to add certain lands to the Boise National Forest; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. SCHALL:

A bill (S. 4498) relating to per diem pay for bailiffs of the district courts of the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4499) to amend an act entitled "An act to legalize the incorporation of National Trade Unions"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 4500) to amend the act of June 19, 1912, by providing for a 35-hour week on all Government works, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

A bill (S. 4501) granting a pension to Laura M. Brewer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts:

A bill (S. 4502) granting a pension to Josephine E. Tanner; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 4503) for the relief of Julia M. Holland; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LOGAN:

A bill (S. 4504) for the relief of James Lowe; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mrs. CARAWAY:

A bill (S. 4505) to correct the military record of Jess Hooten; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma:

A bill (S. 4506) for the relief of Fred Childress; and

A bill (S. 4507) for the relief of W. A. Peters (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GLENN:

A bill (S. 4508) granting a pension to Gus Colboth (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CUTTING:

A bill (S. 4509) to amend the act approved February 25, 1920, entitled "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain"; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. FRAZIER (by request):

A bill (S. 4510) to authorize exchange of small tribal acreage on the Fort Hall Indian School Reserve in Idaho for adjoining land; and

A bill (S. 4511) to amend sections 328 and 329 of the United States Criminal Code of 1910 and sections 548 and 549 of the United States Code of 1926; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, on January 25 I introduced a bill dealing with the powers of the Federal Trade Commission, which is known as Senate bill 3256, entitled "A bill to protect and foster trade and commerce, to supplement the powers of the Federal Trade Commission, and for other purposes." The bill was referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee. Similar bills dealing with the same subject are under consideration before the Committee on the Judiciary. I therefore ask that the Committee on Interstate Commerce may be discharged from the further consideration of this measure and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

AMENDMENT TO SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. COHEN submitted an amendment proposing a payment to Mrs. Julia Wheeler Harris, widow of Hon. William J. Harris, late a Senator from the State of Georgia, intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1932, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO REVENUE AND TAXATION BILL

TARIFF ON COPPER

Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. VANDENBERG jointly submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to House bill 10236, the revenue and taxation bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

TAX ON BOATS

Mr. WHITE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10236, the revenue and taxation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 804. An act for the relief of Mary L. Marshall, administratrix of the estate of Jerry A. Litchfield;

H. R. 1230. An act for the relief of Chase E. Mulinex;

H. R. 1260. An act for the relief of James E. Fraser;

H. R. 1290. An act for the relief of Jeannette Weir;

H. R. 1322. An act for the relief of Anna Lohbeck;

H. R. 1786. An act for the relief of Arthur H. Teeple;

H. R. 2013. An act for the relief of Pinkie Osborne;

H. R. 2033. An act for the relief of Theresa M. Shea;

H. R. 2042. An act for the relief of Hedwig Grassman Stehn;

H. R. 2189. An act for the relief of Elsie M. Sears;

H. R. 2841. An act for the relief of the owners of the steamship Exmoor;

H. R. 3467. An act for the relief of David C. Jeffcoat;

H. R. 3582. An act for the relief of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway Co.;

H. R. 3693. An act for the relief of William Knourek;

H. R. 3811. An act for the relief of Lela B. Smith;

H. R. 3812. An act for the relief of the estate of Harry W. Ward, deceased;

H. R. 4071. An act for the relief of W. A. Blankenship;

H. R. 4233. An act for the relief of Enza A. Zeller;

H. R. 4885. An act for the relief of Kenneth G. Gould;

H. R. 5256. An act for the restitution of employees of the post office at Detroit, Mich.;

H. R. 5265. An act for the relief of A. W. Holland; and

H. R. 5998. An act for the relief of Mary Murnane; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 5940. An act for the relief of Florian Ford; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 7308. An act for the relief of Amy Turner; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

H. R. 5052. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Juneau, Alaska, to use the funds arising from the sale of bonds in pursuance to the act of Congress of February 11, 1925, for the purpose either of improving the sewerage system of said town or of constructing permanent streets in said town;

H. R. 6487. An act to authorize the incorporated town of Petersburg, Alaska, to issue bonds in any sum not exceeding $100,000 for the purpose of improving and enlarging the capacity of the municipal light and power plant, and the improvement of the water and sewer systems, and for the purpose of retiring or purchasing bonds heretofore issued by the town of Petersburg;

H. R. 6713. An act for estimates necessary for the proper maintenance of the Government wharf at Juneau, Alaska; and

H. J. Res. 361. Joint resolution to authorize the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service to make a survey as to the existing facilities for the protection of the public health in the care and treatment of leprous persons in the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

H. J. Res. 375. Joint resolution to provide additional appropriations for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932; to the Committee on Appropriations.

VOLUNTARY ASSESSMENT OF CAPITAL—ARTICLE BY A. LEO WEIL

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Voluntary assessment of capital is urged by lawyer to cure depression and sustain tottering social structure." The article appeared in the Pittsburgh Press, and was written by A. Leo. Weil, of the law firm of Weil, Christy & Weil, of Pittsburgh, Pa.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

VOLUNTARY ASSESSMENT OF CAPITAL IS URGED BY LAWYER TO CURE DEPRESSION AND SUSTAIN TOTTERING SOCIAL STRUCTURE—DEMANDS FOR CHANGES IN ECONOMIC FINANCIAL GOVERNMENTAL STRUCTURE GROWS—DISCONTENT SERIOUS, PITTSBURGH ATTORNEY SAYS; CHALLENGES WEALTH AND POWER

By A. Leo. Weil

There is nothing so blind as power and capital, except more power and more capital, and capital is one form of power.

The depression has affected capital more than labor. Capital, however, can stand it longer than labor. Capital losses, until they reach the stage of capital dissipation, produce hardship but not despair. Unemployment produces despair. Despair has no conscience. It follows any "will-o'-the-wisp" that promises relief, just or unjust, reasonable or unreasonable, transient or permanent.

The unemployed have neither the means, the mood, nor the men to provide remedies. Suggestions of economists, such as insurance against unemployment, old-age pensions, pensions for those by accidents incapacitated, and the like, are only for the employed. When normalcy has been restored they can be adopted and operated. Meanwhile they do not help. The billions voted and to be voted by Congress and by State and municipal governments are only for relief, and must be expended under constitutional and governmental restraints and regulations, and are not designed to make the wheels of industry revolve.

Seven to ten millions of unemployed, counting five to the family (a reasonable estimate considering the group) means 35,000,000 to 50,000,000 of the population of this country, nearly 30 per cent, and over 40 per cent of the whole population. As the pinch becomes more painful, this group will become more and more discontented and insistent upon changes in our economic, financial, social, and governmental structures to afford them relief.

History shows that no social structure can long endure with such a large percentage of its inhabitants driven to desperation, and this particularly in a democracy. What has capital proposed as a remedy? Nothing. Capital, in its blindness, remains inactive, oblivious to the escaping steam and smoke of the smouldering volcano which it sits beside with its robes of purple tightly drawn, and which at the first molten flow will be consumed.

But what can capital do to cure the depression? It can start the wheels of industry, give employment to the unemployed, put into circulation the wages of labor, and make this era of depression but a nightmare that came across the sleep of a prosperous Nation, whose granaries and warehouses were full, and which had capital and capacity in men and machines to supply the world.

Obviously the next question is, How can capital do this? The answer is simple; the wonder is that it has not been long ago suggested.

Let capital make a voluntary assessment upon itself of say 5 per cent. The capital of the United States in 1930, as compiled by the National Industrial Conference Board, was stated to be $329,700,000,000, with an income of $71,000,000,000 per annum. This would yield, if every interest paid its share, nearly $16,500,000,000. If only 50 per cent paid up it would yield nearly $8,250,000,000. These figures are given merely as illustrations.

This assessment could be made, in the judgment of those in charge, upon corporations as well as individuals and be limited, if thought advisable, to those exceeding a certain minimum of income or capital. This fund, through committees appointed by contributors, could be allotted to respective communities. By local committees under the supervision and control of the general committee or State committees, as desired (all appointed by those who contributed the fund), this money, without any restraints such as apply to funds voted by the Government, could be used, to illustrate, to tear down and rebuild the slum districts; to open, widen, and improve streets; to open and improve parks, playgrounds, and the like; to build bridges, subways, and the like; to improve waterfronts; and to countless other improvements that would permanently benefit and enrich the city.

These direct activities would employ large numbers of the unemployed, and the structural material—iron, steel, lumber, brick, plumbing, concrete, etc.—would create a demand that would reopen the shutdown industries and give employment to those who had been thrown out of employment by these industries for the want of demand. The wages paid would go into circulation, affecting the department stores and other commercial establishments of every kind, and the demand for supplies of all these would in turn create a market for manufactured goods of every variety, and thus put into operation all of those industries now closed down, the resumption whereof would offer employment. If these improvements were inaugurated in every city in the United States, the imagination would be staggered by the demand for products thereby created.

It will be objected that this is a "counsel of perfection" and presupposes a magnanimity, altruism, and unselfishness not reasonably to be expected of capital. I am unwilling so to estimate capital. In these later generations capital has given evidence of these traits and this trusteeship of wealth in the foundations aggregating hundreds of millions and philanthropic and charitable donations and bequests aggregating other hundreds of millions. But however this may be, based upon the most selfish considerations, capital could well afford to make this voluntary assessment and reap therefrom benefits largely in excess of its appropriation. Examine some of these returns to capital:

With these National, State, and city bond issues for relief aggregating many billions, who will be taxed to pay interest upon the bonds and ultimately the principal thereof? Chiefly the property holders, those who enjoy large incomes, the owners of securities, stocks, bonds, mortgages, and the like. In other words, capital. And how much of this vast sum thus repaid will have been wasted in inefficiency if not direct dishonesty? And yet these enormous sums will have been expended only for relief, not to remedy the evil of unemployment. The amount of these taxes imposed by the Government will possibly aggregate the amount of this proposed voluntary payment.

Capital will be benefited by the revival of industry and the removal of this depression to an amount almost inconceivable except to the trained actuary. Stocks and bonds and mortgages and real estate will regain their market values, dividend and interest payments will be resumed, which combined with these market values will aggregate manyfold the amount contributed to cure and remove the depression. Based solely on the cold-blooded calculation of a profitable investment, the return to the investors would be many hundred per cent.

As an insurance, a guaranty of the permanency and stability of capital, and to ward off and guard against attacks and assults upon capital, the amount of this contribution would be none too great. Revolutions are not always by armed force. They may arise by legislation and law as well. This is especially true of a democracy. An aroused people can not be denied. In their desperation they do not always demand that which is best. Much depends upon leadership, and leaders are not always wise and tolerant, farseeing and patriotic. The times are pregnant with murmurings of resentment. The longer present conditions continue, the louder those now suppressed murmurings will become until they may find voice in fierce cries and peremptory demands.

Capital in this country could be largely redistributed in perhaps a single generation by confiscatory taxes and taxes upon income and inheritance. It behooves all thoughtful men, and especially capital, to heed our present social conditions and the signs, which history tells us, have had their parallels in other countries preliminary to upheavals of society and of government. No revolution has ever occurred when times were good, people were prosperous, and workers were employed. An investment to-day in insurance and guaranty of permanence and stability of capital in the future is indeed well worth while.

This assessment upon capital to cure our present-day ills must be voluntary; it must come from within, not from without, not by government or by force. The reward will be great. Let capital overwhelm its own greed, selfishness, and love of possession, and make the heart throb and the soul soar with the gladness, the happiness of a great deed gloriously done, evidencing the acknowledgment by capital of its trusteeship of wealth and demonstrating its identity with humanity. If such happiness could be bought, whatever the price, it could not be too high.

Will capital exercise its power to cure the depression?

ALABAMA SENATORIAL CONTEST

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 199), reported by Mr. GEORGE and Mr. BRATTON from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

Resolved, That JOHN H. BANKHEAD is hereby declared to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Alabama for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1931, and is entitled to a seat as such.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I want to preface my remarks by reading a statement formerly made by the Senator from Delaware:

The Constitution, however, did give to the legislative branch of the Government judicial powers in one particular when it provided that each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

This authority is perfectly plain. In exercising this power it becomes the duty of the House of Representatives and of the Senate to act solely in a judicial capacity, separate and distinct from their capacity as legislators. There is no legal appeal. The only appeal from the decision so made is public opinion; but if public opinion overrules the decision, it does not get rid of the precedent established. It becomes the duty of every Member of the legislative body at such times to render a decision undisturbed by the clamor of the multitude.

Mr. President, with that statement I am in full accord. It had not been my purpose to discuss this case until the developments on yesterday. I am sure that every Member of this body on both sides of the Chamber will agree that since I came here I have engaged in no buttonholing of Senators; I have engaged in no electioneering with them; I have not in any way pressed my claims in this case. I have felt that, as the Senator from Delaware stated, in the decision of a contested-election case each Member of the Senate, under the Constitution and under his oath of office, is acting as a judge, or, at least, in a semijudicial position, and, from that standpoint, Mr. President, I have been content for the Members of this body to pass upon the law and the facts of this case as they may be directed and controlled by their judgments and consciences.

I have made no appeal to friends upon this side of the Chamber, as every man here will testify. I have not wanted to inject any political controversy into the decision of a judicial question. I have said nothing to any Member upon this floor that a litigant could not with propriety state to a judge trying his case. It is upon that principle that I ask for a final decision in this contested-election case.

I have felt, since so many statements were made yesterday which are not supported by any facts in this record and which can not be supported by any truthful testimony, that if I quietly acquiesced there might be drawn, from some sources at least, an inference that I did not care to meet them. It is my purpose, however, Mr. President, in this discussion to refrain from personalities and, so far as possible, to stay within the record, and to address myself to the deliberate judgment and to the consciences of Members of this body. Of necessity it may be necessary here and there to make some references that are not entirely in the record, but wherever that may be done they will be responsive to statements made upon the floor of the Senate and carried into the permanent CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as statements by the speaker who spoke here yesterday.

A good deal has been said about the primary election in Alabama and the part that I took in it. I think it has been made perfectly clear here that the action taken in 1928 was not directed against the contestant in this case. The record shows—and the resolutions were put into the record by the contestant himself—that in 1922 the same resolutions were adopted requiring an oath of loyalty by a candidate and different qualifications for the candidate than for the voter. In 1926 the same resolutions were put into the record imposing these same qualifications upon candidates and different qualifications for candidates than those for voters. In 1924 there was not put into the record a resolution which was passed by the Democratic State executive committee, but as it is a matter of official record and as it was used throughout the campaign in Alabama I feel free to read into the record that resolution adopted subsequent to the primary. The primary was conducted by a subcommittee on arrangements. On August 28, 1924, the committee passed the following resolution:

> That no elector who in the general election to be held in November, 1924, supports the candidates for presidential elector of any party other than the Democratic Party shall be entitled to vote or to be a candidate in any primary election held by the Democratic Party in Alabama, except a primary election held after any subsequent general election in which such elector did support the nominees of the Democratic Party.

In other words, a permanent rule was established by the committee after the primary in that year to give notice that that was the law of the party, of course always with the right to change it; and it is only necessary to call to the memory of Senators here the fact that in the year 1924, when that resolution was adopted the contestant in this case was the standard bearer of the Democratic Party for the highest office in the gift of the people of that State. Under that resolution, of necessity, acting under the organization of his party, he went before the people of Alabama in that election and held his credentials under that action.

Mr. President, the contestant made a speech here in 1928 on the subject of party loyalty. I am merely pointing this out to show that the action of the Democratic Party in 1930 was in line with all former attitudes and actions and beliefs of the contestant in this case.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 13, 1928, we find the following:

> Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, some weeks ago the Irish World, a Roman Catholic newspaper, threatened the Democratic Party with dire disaster if it should fail to nominate Governor Smith, of New York, for the high office of President of the United States. That newspaper served notice upon the Democratic Party that if it failed to nominate Governor Smith the Catholics would bolt the ticket; that they would not support the Democratic ticket to be nominated at Houston. This is an unbecoming threat and an un-American act. It violates every principle of American tolerance. It is in keeping, however, with the record of the Roman Catholic political machine regarding the National Democratic ticket. They bolted the Democratic ticket in 1916 because President Wilson refused to go to war with Mexico on behalf of the Catholic Church; they bolted the Democratic ticket in 1920, and in 1924 they bolted the Democratic ticket again. They have bolted the last three National Democratic tickets. They are really not entitled to participate in a Democratic primary or convention or to have one of their number run as a candidate on the regular Democratic ticket.

That is the doctrine for which the contestant stood throughout his political career until the year 1930.

Mr. President, by innuendo, by suggestions if not by direct charge, it has been asserted here that I had a part in preventing the contestant from being a candidate in the Democratic primary in 1930. There is nothing upon which such a statement can be based. Everybody in Alabama, I think, knows that I stood for leniency at that time, not because I thought it was due the contestant, but because I thought under all the conditions it would be best to change the fixed rule and policy of the party and let the contestant become a candidate in that primary.

Here is a statement published by me in the newspapers of Alabama. I want to read briefly from it. This was before the primary:

> I have believed since the last election that all Democrats who declined to vote for Governor Smith as the Democratic nominee should be invited to return to the party, and that any person qualified to vote in the primary should be allowed to run as a candidate. * * * I have believed and still believe that it is dangerous to the party welfare in Alabama to take any course that will continue discord and strife among the rank and file of the party. I have believed and still believe that if all the leaders of those who refused to support the straight Democratic ticket in the last election are excluded from being candidates that many voters in resentment will go out of the party to support such leaders in an independent movement.
>
> * * * * * * *
>
> A report is in circulation throughout the State that some members of the party personally desire to exclude all from being candidates who did not support all the Democratic nominees in the last election but will not vote to do so on account of a promise to me to vote otherwise. If there are such members—

And I say there were none—

> I certainly appreciate their personal loyalty to me. I take this occasion to say that in view of the serious consequences that may follow whatever action the committee takes, I am quite content for each member of the committee to vote on his own responsibility and according to his own judgment for what he believes is best for the party under all the circumstances. The responsibility is not mine, and, even if I could, I do not care to assume it.
>
> If there are any members of the committee who want to vote to put the bars up on candidates, but who feel constrained not to do so on account of any statement made to me, I wish to say that if they construe any such statement as a commitment or promise made to me, they are hereby relieved from any assurance they may have given me as to how they will vote on any subject coming before the committee.
>
> I have not changed my views, and this statement is made for the purpose of letting the committeemen and the public know that I am asking no consideration personal to me by any member of the committee in reaching his own conclusion about the wisest thing to do when the committee takes action.
>
> I recognize that the usual caution practiced by candidates would have kept me silent on this highly controversial subject. I have always openly and frankly expressed my views on public questions of importance to my party and to the people of our State. I recognize the right of others to do the same, and I admire a respectful exercise of it by others.

If being silent and colorless on issues of general public interest is a necessary qualification for a candidate or an officeholder, then I am out of place in public life.

That is the statement that you heard so much about here yesterday, carrying the implication that I had not acted in good faith; that I had released certain delegates pledged to me; and, Mr. President, the matter went far enough to mention the names of the members from my congressional district, Mr. Ogden and Mr. Cobb, who live at Vernon, and three members who live in my own little home town.

I call your attention to the fact that it was admitted here that the three men in my own little town, two of whom were my warm personal and political friends, and the other professing to be, all voted to let Mr. Heflin or any other candidate run in that primary election.

Oh, but they say that Mr. Ogden had some agreement or that I requested him to vote differently. But Mr. Ogden was put upon the stand in Birmingham and testified as a witness in the oral hearings there. He is a man of high standing, a banker, a cottonseed-mill owner, with large farming interests, a member of the State legislature, nominated and elected without opposition in the last primary and election to the legislature—the first office he ever held—after this primary was ordered. Let us see what Mr. Ogden said when the contestant's attorney was examining him as a witness.

He first says—page 2838:

I will ask you to refresh your recollection, if this didn't occur in substance between you and Mr. Childers—

Before the committee met—

if you didn't ask Mr. Childers to join you in voting to put up the bars and if Mr. Childers didn't tell you that he had talked with Mr. Arthur Fite and promised that he wouldn't vote to put up the bars?

Mr. OGDEN. I have no recollection whatever of that conversation.

And with Mr. Gibson, also?

I don't remember such a conversation.

And wasn't your reply to that, "John," meaning Mr. John H. Bankhead, "wants it done"?

No, sir; I never did make that remark.

You heard it here yesterday.

No, sir; I never made that remark that John Bankhead wanted it done.

Then he was asked about talking with me on this subject:

Did you have a conversation with Mr. Bankhead with reference to putting up the bars or the action of the committee?

Yes, sir.

How long was that before the committee met?

I went down to Montgomery. I went through Birmingham here going to the committee meeting.

And met Mr. Bankhead here?

Yes, sir; I went to his office.

I will ask you if Mr. Bankhead didn't tell you that if the bars were not put up and let Heflin and Locke in the primary they would be nominated?

No, sir.

What did he say about that?

I asked Mr. Bankhead what he thought we should do. I had made up my mind that I thought the bars ought to be put up, and I told Mr. Bankhead that I wanted his opinion as to whether he thought I was right or not, and he told me, he said, "I am not going to advise you what to do about it.

Not going to advise you one way or the other?

No, sir.

So there the Senate can well see the basis for the imputations that I was acting with connivance, or not in good faith.

Possibly for prejudicial purposes the subject of the Alabama Power Co. was brought into this discussion yesterday, and the statement was made that Mr. E. W. Pettus, the chairman of the Democratic executive committee, was an attorney for the Alabama Power Co., and that Mr. Jerome Fuller, the chairman of the Democratic campaign committee during that campaign, was an attorney for the Alabama Power Co. I say that neither of those gentlemen was an attorney for that company either in 1930 or since that time.

It is stated that all of the attorneys for the Alabama Power Co. were supporting me. As a matter of fact, I do not know who the local attorneys for the Alabama Power Co. here and there may be in Alabama, but I assume the statement was correct, because practically every lawyer in Alabama, both Democrats and Republicans, supported me in that election, with two outstanding exceptions—men who were and are attorneys for the Alabama Power Co. One of them was Mr. Arthur Fite, with whom I had correspondence that has been referred to here, and who lives in my home town, an attorney, and for years an attorney for the Alabama Power Co. On the ticket of the "independents," led by Senator Heflin, with only three nominees for State offices, Senator, governor, and lieutenant governor, one of those nominees, Mr. Powell, is an attorney for the Alabama Power Co.

I have had no connection with the Alabama Power Co. in any way for the last 8 or 10 years. I am stating what has been stated on every stump in Alabama and through the newspapers in Alabama throughout the campaign. Eight or ten years ago I had a small retainer from that company. When the agitation over Muscle Shoals came up, I was not in accord with the Alabama Power Co. having Muscle Shoals, and on that account, so that I could have complete liberty of action without embarrassment either to myself or to my client, I tendered my resignation as local attorney for that company, and since that time I have had no sort of connection, direct or indirect, with the Alabama Power Co.

It was stated here that Mr. Aarhus had a lead that some officer of the Alabama Power Co. was in conference when I was agreed upon as a candidate for the Senate. No conference was ever held on my candidacy. No such thing ever happened. I will not embarrass others by making a statement upon the subject, but it is well known that some of the representatives of the Alabama Power Co. in Alabama did not originally favor my candidacy in the Democratic primary. They preferred getting another candidate in the race.

A great deal has been said here about a Democratic machine in Alabama. The contestant has frequently stated upon this floor that for years he had been the leader of the Democratic Party in Alabama, so if any machine has ever been built up, of course, he was the head of it. But I want to say, as a matter of justice to the people of Alabama, I feel impelled as their representative here, at least for the present, to assert here, so that it may go into the RECORD, that there has been no political machine in Alabama, and, in accordance with the political philosophy, with the independence of thought, and the independence of action, of the voters in that State, it would be absolutely impossible for anyone to build up a political machine in that State.

If Mr. Pettus—and I say this upon my responsibility—the chairman of the Democratic executive committee, ever did a single thing to promote my nomination in that primary, I never heard of it. I have reason to believe he voted for me, but beyond that, Mr. Pettus, the chairman of the Democratic executive committee, took no part, because it is the policy in our State for our party officials, instead of trying to control and manipulate a machine and nominate a ticket, to be neutral, to be impartial between all of the candidates. Mr. Pettus has faithfully pursued that course from the time of his election as chairman.

Mr. President, the Senate heard a good deal said about absentee ballots, that a certain number of questionnaires had been sent out, and that about 2,000 had been returned undelivered. Senators know how natural that is. A man away from home, on business, gets a ballot sent to him, and a year later a questionnaire is sent to him at that address, and, of course, he is not there, because he got the ballot at that address on account of his being temporarily there. Senators heard the statement about 5,000 questionnaires not being answered. Everybody knows there is no obligation to answer a questionnaire of that sort, calling upon a voter to state how he voted.

Mr. President, many of those absentee ballots which were sent out were not voted, and I want to give the Senate from the record some reason why they were not voted. If Senators will examine page 57 of the majority report, and bear in mind that the lists of applications for absentee ballots were obtained from the probate judges, who were required to keep a record of them, they will find that there were sent out to applicants for absentee ballots these two letters, which were put in evidence at the oral hearing at Birmingham:

NATIONAL SECRET SERVICE,
HEADQUARTERS SOUTHERN DIVISION,
October 31, 1930.

DEAR SIR: Investigation shows that you have applied to the probate judge for an absentee ballot for delivery to the election officials on November 4, or that some one using your name has done so.

Every absentee ballot in this section is under close surveillance. In order to legally cast an absentee ballot you must actually reside in the precinct in the county in which you propose to vote. You are required to make an affidavit that you are a bone fide resident of the precinct in which you propose to vote, and that you will be absent from the county on that day by reason of your regular business and in the performance of your regular duties.

You can not actually live in one county and claim to reside in another and claim to vote in the county were you claim to live instead of the county where you actually reside.

You must also apply for an absentee ballot yourself. A ballot brought to you by some one else is an illegal ballot.

Any illegal ballot sent through the United States mail may subject you to a charge of using the mails to defraud.

If you have been misled, or misinformed, or induced to send an illegal ballot to the probate judge, or some one else has used your name without your consent, you have a right to demand that the ballot you sent or the one sent in under your name be returned to you and destroy it.

All illegal absentee ballots not properly withdrawn will be investigated further.

All illegal ballots sent through the mails will be called to the attention of the United States district attorney for action by the

J. H. GRAY,
Chief of Special Agents, Southern Division.

The next letter is short and reads:

NATIONAL SECRET SERVICE,
HEADQUARTERS SOUTHERN DIVISION,
October 31, 1930.

DEAR SIR: You are under surveillance. Any conduct on your part constituting a violation of State or Federal election laws will be promptly handled by the proper authorities.

J. H. GRAY,
Chief of Special Agents.

Mr. President, the evidence developed that there was no such organization as the National Secret Service in Birmingham, or in that section; that there was no such man as J. H. Gray, who signed himself as chief of special agents; and, more important than that, the evidence developed that those letters were delivered for distribution to the campaign mentor, the most active man for the contestant, the man who has been appearing here as his chief counsel—Judge Horace Wilkinson—at his office in Birmingham. Judge Wilkinson was present when the witness testified to taking these documents and delivering them to him, and he did not even cross-examine him.

Can not Senators well understand, with threats like that, why a large number who had applied for absentee ballots did not return them? Still we hear the criticism indulged in here that a large number were sent out and not returned.

Mr. President, it was said that of the ballots which were returned, 4,500, four-fifths were for me. The figures presented to both parties to this contest by the supervisor working under the Senator from Delaware show that I got 61.58 per cent and that the contestant got 38.42 per cent, instead of my receiving four-fifths, as has been asserted here.

There are so many things that are injected in this case which are not in the record that it would be impossible for me, within reasonable limitations, to deal with all of them. A great charge was made here about the ballot boxes in De Kalb County. It was stated that the contestant had been defrauded of 500 votes in that county and they had to go to court to get the ballot boxes. But, Mr. President, information was not brought to you that there was no evidence to sustain such a claim, although the Republican probate judge of that county, a Republican and a supporter of the contestant, was put upon the stand as a witness for the contestant. The ballot boxes were kept because there was a contest over local offices, the Democrats contesting the Republicans.

It has been stated all through the record that De Kalb County was under the control and had been for years under the control of the Republican Party; that those in control were friendly to the contestant, all the county officials were for him, the election machinery favorable to him; and any reasonable man knows that even if the Democrats wanted to practice fraud, if they had no opportunity to put their hands upon the ballot box, there could be no fraud practiced by them. Any reasonable man would know further that if they had the opportunity to perpetrate a fraud for me they could have done the same thing for their county ticket and had it declared elected instead of defeated.

Mr. President, if any Member of this body desires any information from me or any statement from me about any matter which has been injected into the case—or any of the numerous unsupported statements, I will say in addition that have been injected into the case—I shall be glad to answer such inquiries.

I want to speak in a very general way, and to submit especially to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that he may, as courts sometimes do, grant a rehearing upon the question of the validity of the primary. The subject, of course, has been well discussed. There is, however, one aspect that I want to submit. Section 601 defines what is a political party. Section 624 provides:

Any qualified elector who is also a member of a political party as herein defined, participating in a primary election, shall be entitled to vote at such primary election and shall receive the official primary ballot of the political party and no other.

The point I have in mind for consideration is that section 612 as presented by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] does not purport to deal and does not deal with the qualifications of voters in any respect. It deals solely with the qualifications of candidates. Section 612 must be construed in connection with sections 624 and 672, which authorize the State committee to fix the qualifications of candidates.

Mr. President, there is a word in section 612 which to my mind has not yet had proper consideration in reaching a proper construction of the section. Section 612 does not say shall have the right "to vote." It says, "shall have the right to participate in such primary election." What does the word "participate" mean? Is it confined merely to voting? I submit not. Let me read from a section of the constitution of Alabama which sheds direct light upon the construction of that word. Section 183 reads:

No person shall be qualified to vote or participate—

To vote or participate!—

in any primary election, party convention, mass meeting, or other method of party action of any political party or faction who shall not possess the qualifications prescribed in this article for an elector or who shall be disqualified from voting under the provisions of this article.

So the constitution of our State recognizes that the word "participate" covers more ground than the mere word "vote"—"qualified to vote or participate in any primary election." How may one participate except by voting? He may participate by being an election officer not qualified to vote in a party primary being conducted by him, but in which he can not vote. We have the same officers for both the Democratic and Republican primaries. In De Kalb County two Republican officers and one Democratic officer serve to hold the Democratic primary as well as the Republican primary. Those Republican managers are qualified electors, but they are not qualified to vote in a Democratic primary because they do not possess the qualifications fixed by the party, but they are designated by law to participate in the Democratic primary, to conduct and manage it, to give out the ballots, to count the returns and certify the results—"participating," Mr. President, in another way than as voters and themselves not even voting in the Democratic primary. It includes voters, election officers, election watchers, and candidates.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I invite the attention of the Senator to the heading of section 612, as follows:

Who may vote in primary elections.

That is the heading. Has the Senator any explanation of what that means?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is simply an expression by the codifier. No such title is ever written into a law in the State of Alabama. When the codifier got ready to incorporate in the code the amendment or the full act he of his own accord probably thought, as some Senators here think, that that is what it meant. But the codifier's view upon that subject certainly does not control any court or anyone acting as a lawyer or a judge in deciding what is really covered and intended by the language of the statute itself.

Let us follow that a step further. There is another expression in section 612 which has not received any consideration here in the discussion of the proper construction of that section. I refer to the words "subject to" the qualifications fixed by the State executive committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Before the Senator leaves the subject of absentee ballots, as I recall it, he said he received about 61 per cent of those cast.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; I read the figures.

Mr. TYDINGS. How did the proportion of absentee ballots compare with the total of all the ballots?

Mr. BANKHEAD. About 2 per cent more were cast for me than the percentage of the total number of ballots of the State showed.

Mr. TYDINGS. In other words, eliminating the absentee ballots, the percentage of votes cast for the Senator from Alabama as against Heflin was about 60 per cent?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Substantially the same proportion.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to his colleague?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. It might be pertinent to state that the figures my colleague has, as I understand it, are based on the actual reports made by the voters as to how they voted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; and compiled by the supervisor working under the direction of the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS].

"Subject to." What does that mean? Does it mean the same qualifications? I submit that it does not. I submit that it means acquiescing in, subordinate to, the qualifications fixed for the candidate. It will be recalled that the law as reenacted in the code under section 601 gives the right to qualified voters to vote in that primary who are "members of any political party."

Does anyone take the position that the amendment of section 612 repeals section 624? That position is not tenable because since the amendment of section 612, section 624 has been reincorporated in the code of 1927. If the construction is accepted, that same argument as to section 612 necessarily results in the emasculation if not the repeal of section 624 carried along with section 612 in the code. It also destroys the effect of section 672 which authorizes the State committee to fix the qualifications for its candidates, at the same time leaving in the code, to work harmoniously with it, the provision that white electors who are members of the party have the right to vote in the primary.

Now, let us reread section 612 in view of that:

All persons who are qualified electors under the general election laws of this State—

And now I will incorporate the provisions of section 624 here—and who are members of any political party which has registered the percentage of vote required by section 602—

Because that is what constitutes a political party—shall have the right to participate in such primary.

Now let us read it in this way.

All persons who are qualified electors under the general election laws of this State, and who are members of any political party which has registered the necessary percentage, shall have the right—

Now, let us substitute proper words for "participate"—

Shall have the right to vote or become a candidate—

Because "participate" includes both—in such primary elections, subject to such political or other qualifications as may be prescribed by the State executive committee or governing body of such political party for its candidates.

The candidate may participate by accepting the qualifications fixed for him; the voter may participate by accepting the qualifications fixed for the candidate.

If a member chooses to come in, Mr. President, he enters, whether as a voter or as a candidate, subject to the action of the committee in respect to qualifications, political or otherwise, prescribed for its candidates. He must respect and acquiesce in this action as a voter and as a candidate.

So, Mr. President, when we give section 612 a construction, which is consistent with the other sections in the code, which is consistent with a reasonable construction, and which does not lead to absolutely absurd results, and when we take into consideration what "participate" includes and what "subject" means, it is perfectly apparent, as the able and fearless Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] pointed out, though not elaborating the argument as I have done, that section 612 simply requires those who participate in the primary to consent to and acquiesce in the qualifications fixed for the candidate.

However, Mr. President, why should we strain at the construction of that statute when the decisions are practically unanimous to the effect that, when there is no action preceding the election to invoke the power of the court but where the parties go to the people speculating upon the result, it is then too late to raise such a question. I want to read into the RECORD the names of the different States that have directly and specifically passed upon that question. They are Massachusetts, Illinois, Missouri, Nebraska, Idaho, Texas, Montana, Wisconsin, Kansas, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Colorado, Iowa, Mississippi, Minnesota, Washington, and South Dakota—18 States. The same rule is laid down in Ruling Case Law and in Corpus Juris.

Mr. President, I am not going to take the time to go into a discussion of the various facts involved in this case. I should be pleased to do so, because every line of investigation in this case leads to the conclusion that there has been no fraud in the Alabama election. It was stated before the subcommittee by the attorney for the contestant in this case that they did not dispute the truthfulness of the certificate of returns, so far as the fact of their execution by election officers is concerned. They took the broad position, Mr. President, that all of the election officers participating in that election signed those certificates, but that they were merely arbitrarily made up. That direct explicit confession is contained in the printed arguments in this case; that they were arbitrarily made up in 2,043 election boxes in Alabama, with more than a third of the election officers who signed those returns not voting for me, as shown by the ballots over here as recounted by the subcommittee. Only 62 per cent of the election officers voted for me, and still we hear the charge made here that 38 per cent of election officers, not favorable to my candidacy, signed and swore to false certificates of returns, which did not truly state the result of the vote in the ballot boxes.

We hear the suggestion later that ballot boxes may have been substituted on the day of election. How absurd that is to a thoughtful mind! The elections were held in country schoolhouses—and 72 per cent of the population of Alabama is rural as distinguished from urban—the elections were held in the broad, open light of the courthouses, in public places, everywhere attended, Mr. President, by election officers selected by the organization representing the independent party of which the contestant here was a candidate. The law gives each party the right to submit a list of names of persons to serve as election officers, and, although that independent party was not a legal party as defined by the law of Alabama, by unanimous consent it was recognized as such, and it is shown by the actual ballots as well as by statements made at the very beginning of this contest and all through the record that officers were selected, one inspector at least and one clerk in each voting box, where the contestant had known supporters, with one or two exceptions. The ballots themselves show that to be true. And yet thoughtful men who are engaged in analyzing facts and making up a judicial decision are asked to accept a mere suggestion that under those conditions while the election was proceeding there may have been a substitution of ballot boxes during the day.

Oh, they say, if ink had been used in numbering the ballots, it would have been more difficult to make erasures. There is no evidence, Mr. President, in the whole 250,000 ballots here, of any erasures of the numbers. If one was going to substitute ballots, every man knows that he could substitute them numbered in ink just as well as he could if they were numbered in pencil.

Now they come forward and say, "But the change was made at the courthouse." That statement was made here yesterday—that ballots were substituted at the courthouse. Is any thoughtful man prepared to accept that suggestion as a proven fact in the case? Does not any thoughtful person know that if substitution of ballots throughout all the courthouses in Alabama in the quietude of the night was proceeding, they would have been substituted in such a way as to comply with the requirements of the law? Could not a ballot numbered in ink be substituted in the quietude of the courthouse, where the contestant said it all took place, just as well as one numbered in pencil could be substituted or one not numbered at all? And if the substitution was being carried on by experts, it would have been done doubtless in a more precise and correct way in conformity with the directory provisions of our statute than could have been done by average men and women serving as election officers possibly for the first time in their lives and without legal training sufficient to pass a civil-service examination upon all the directory provisions of our splendid law.

Mr. President, there are one or two things further to which I desire to call attention before I conclude. Beyond the mere presumption which the law affords as to the correctness of the sworn returns of officials of an election—and an election officer is entitled to the same presumption of truthful and correct returns as is any other official under the law—there is no question, in fact, it is admitted, that the certificates upon which my certificate of election is based were signed in all the boxes in Alabama by Bankhead supporters and Heflin supporters and by Republicans who did not vote for either one of us. In every box in the State of Alabama at the closing of the polls the certificates were posted, and they are here now reposing in the committee room, with not a word of testimony to impeach a single one of them. Instead of impeaching them by testimony, Mr. President, the oral testimony at Birmingham, where the contestant placed upon the witness stand a large number of election officers, shows that every one of them on cross-examination said that the count in his box was honest and that the certificate of the result truly represented the ballots cast in that particular box. Their complaint was about other trivial matters—no impeachment of the returns; no impeachment of the truthful counting of the ballots.

Then would any fair-minded man, acting judicially, say that because of certain irregularities which it is claimed afford an opportunity for fraud, you must presume that fraud did occur?

That, to my mind, Mr. President, is a dangerous doctrine for this great court to establish in this country. That is a standard of moral conduct on the part of the average man or woman serving as election officials and representing both parties that I should greatly regret to see established as a rule and guide to judge the conduct of others. To say that because one had a chance to steal it should be presumed that he did steal, is a strange doctrine to be asserted here upon the floor of the Senate in an effort to secure a decision that you can not tell who was really elected in Alabama.

That was not the only test. The questionnaire was a test, the answers coming from 1,005 boxes in Alabama, nearly half, a complete cross-section of the State, and the answers of those voters being in correspondence with their ballots here. Would any judge weighing the facts, even in a police court, say that you could go into 1,005 boxes, nearly half of them, out of 61 counties in Alabama, and substitute 50,000 to 75,000 votes, as has been alleged here by the contestant, without that fact showing up in the 4,500 answers to the questionnaires sent to the absentee voters?

Any fair, judicially minded investigator of the facts must, I say, recognize that that many ballots could not be substituted in that many boxes without its showing up in the answers of the absentee voters.

Were any other tests made? I am trying to address myself to men who want to get the truth about this transaction, who want to record their votes under the duty, as I conceive it and as the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] has stated that he conceived it, to cast a judicial vote and not a legislative vote.

Were any other tests made that ought to convince any fair-minded man?

Certain suspicious ballots were brought to the attention of the committee. I promptly secured the names from the supervisor of the voters in that list of tightly folded ballots with other suspicious circumstances and sent them to three counties with the request that some notary public be sent to get their affidavits about how they voted. The answers came back, Mr. President. Out of the most suspicious lot of ballots in their appearance that the supervisor could find—because he was requested to do that—the answer came back showing 100 per cent of correctness from every voter in those ballots, whose ballot showed that he voted for me; and then, Mr. President, with a full conviction of honesty and fairness, based upon my knowledge of the spirit which governed the Alabama election, I did not hesitate or halt. I wrote a letter to the chairman of the subcommittee—and you will find it in the hearings—in which I said: "If there are any other suspicious ballots in any box in Alabama that you want to have investigated, I will undertake to investigate them"; and I went further. I said, "If the committee will pay the expense, I will investigate and get the evidence about how everybody in Alabama voted"; and I have not had any reply from the chairman of the subcommittee. Yet Senators gravely stand here and talk about a "presumption of fraud," which leaves them in doubt about whether to brand all of the election officials in Alabama as perjurers, whether they voted for me or voted for the contestant or did not vote at all.

You can not reach any conclusion other than that I received 50,000 majority in Alabama except by branding as corrupt, as conspirators, as perjurers all of the election officers in Alabama. I challenge any man to deny that statement. It is admitted that they signed these certificates, and signed them on the night of the election, and posted them as the law requires; and there they are, under their certificate and oath of office as election managers.

Then I called upon the subcommittee—I am going to conclude in a minute—to check, in those ballot boxes, the tally sheets, one tally sheet kept by a Democratic clerk and one tally sheet kept by an independent or Republican clerk, and mark down the votes, tallying them as the vote was called from the ballot by the election officers. They had two tally sheets. I boldly called upon them to do that, because I had been willing from the beginning to accept any challenge or any test which would show either that I received 50,000 majority or that the election was fraudulent and stolen. I have those tally sheets here, county by county. Anybody who wants to may examine them. I asked them not only to check the tally sheets against the certificate of the results for United States Senator but to check them from United States Senator clear down the State, district, and county ticket. That was done, and here they are, nearly 50 per cent of them made by clerks who did not vote for me, showing a complete correspondence of the tally sheets in every box in Alabama, not only in the vote for United States Senator but in the vote for every officer upon that ticket.

Will some man in search of truth, will some man who is trying to make a judicial finding upon the facts, point out how there could be a substitution of ballots? No erasure of Heflin's name on votes tallied for him shows over there. It could not be changed on those tally sheets without taking large numbers of tallies off his list. So you would be obliged to conclude that there was a complete substitution of every tally sheet in the State in order to find that the tally sheets that are there now did not originally correspond with the number of votes certified by the election officers.

Is any man going to try to reach that conclusion, acting judicially and in a search for the truth? I think not.

One more test and I am not going to detain you longer. The contestant called upon the subcommittee to furnish him a list showing how every voter in Alabama whose ballot was numbered voted in that senatorial race. His attorney said, and it is in the record, that he regarded that information as the most important matter involved in this case, because it would afford them the information under which they could go back to Alabama and check up with the voters to see whether or not their ballots had been cast as they appear over here in the countingroom. I knew that a compliance with that request would result in the exposure of the secrecy of the ballots. I believed that if the point was brought to the attention of the subcommittee, and they considered the legal question involved, which is the law everywhere, of preserving the secrecy of the ballot, that request might have been denied. But no, Mr. President, I made no objection of any sort to the committee furnishing that information. I was delighted when they furnished it, because I believed, in view of the purpose for which counsel for the contestant stated they wanted the information, that if they would go and check up, that would end entirely this crusade, these tirades against the honor and good name of the election officials and county officials and the men and women of my State.

What happened? That list was furnished, a separate poll list. Some of you Senators have probably noted a sample copy of those poll lists. A separate poll list was printed for every county, 64 counties, by precincts, giving the names of the election officers under the list of names, showing there the number of the ballot they cast. They got that list, as I got a copy of it, some eight months ago. They started to make those lists early in August, not later than the 1st of September, and they were submitted to the parties county by county as they were completed.

Mr. President, what has developed from it? The contestant has asserted time and again that his supporters were so numerous in Alabama that he believed he got a majority of more than 100,000 votes. He has asserted with every appearance of pride what a great interest his supporters took in his campaign, how they fought by the thousands to hear his speeches. He had a complete county organization in every county in Alabama. He got those lists showing how the voters voted for the purpose of sending them down through his precinct organizations and securing the information about the large number of substituted ballots. The committee spent several thousand dollars making up those lists.

What is the situation now? We went down to Birmingham by agreement. I agreed to it, believing that if I did not the witnesses, according to practice, would be brought to Washington. But, accepting any test that anybody wanted to have made, I agree to go down to Birmingham, while Congress was in session, and there, before a commissioner agreed upon between us, give the contestant full opportunity right there, where the witnesses were available, to prove his charges of fraud. Did he do it? No; he did not. Out of 117,000 voters upon those poll lists marked as having voted for me, not counting the unnumbered ballots, he produced evidence of only one, except as to some absentee voters, whose ballots appeared to have been changed, and even that was disputed by one of his neighbors, who said he saw him vote a straight Democratic ticket—one, I say, was the only one traced to the election box out of 117,000 marked ballots.

Who is going to leap to a conclusion, because a pencil was used or because some other irregularity occurred, that we can not tell who was elected in that election? Is every test of the honesty of the count, whose honesty and truthfulness is shown, to be swept aside? Are all the ballots to be swept aside simply to worship at the shrine of legal technicality, a literal compliance with many directory provisions of the election law, practically every one of which involved in this case has specifically been before the supreme court of our State, and in each instance complained of here, the Supreme Court of Alabama has ruled that those provisions were and are directory and do not affect the validity of the count?

I have decisions from 35 States in the brief, holding that in the wisdom of the courts an election will not be set aside because of the ignorance of election officers, because of their omissions and neglects, even of their fraud, unless it is shown that those irregularities affected and changed the result; the will of the people is the great thing to be ascertained.

If the position of the chairman of the subcommittee is correct, wherever a majority of the voters are of one party and the election machinery is in the hands of the other party, what would be the only thing necessary to have a ballot box eliminated from the count? Under the ideas presented here all that would be necessary would be for the election officers of the minority party in a particular precinct to fail to number the ballots, to use a pencil, or fail to fold the ballots, then go to court and say, "Oh, here was an opportunity for fraud. Throw them out."

I submit that that is not consistent with fundamental legal principles. It does not conform to the decisions in 35 States in America, and there are no decisions to the contrary about which I know.

It has been pointed out here that in the same statute upon which my credentials are based, and which is so vigorously commented upon in the minority report because of irregularities, the legislature of Alabama, as a part of the same law, setting up the requirements for numbering and using ink, says those things are directory, and shall not affect the result of the election—not in those words, but it says that nothing but fraud which changed the result of the election shall be ground for setting it aside.

Mr. President, I do not know how many more speeches are to be made on this contest. There are, of course, a great many other questions involved in the case. I stand here holding credentials from a sovereign State of this Union. I am here with as clean credentials, so far as my personal conduct is concerned, as those of any Member of the Senate, and that fact is recognized everywhere. The Nye committee had agents in Alabama for months, and so far as my conduct was concerned, either in securing the nomination or the election, I did nothing which is subject to any kind of criticism. So that the question of the qualifications of the candidate from the standpoint of the manner in which he secured his election is eliminated from this case.

There is one group of Senators here who believe that because of a strained and literal construction of one section of the code, the fixed policy of both parties in Alabama should be stricken down; that Representatives over in the House of Representatives who came here with their names upon the ballot under the same primary under which I came here are not legally there, because their names were not legally upon the ticket, a holding which, if it had extraterritorial effect, would result in disqualifying every officer in Alabama elected upon the Democratic ticket, from governor to constable.

The construction which is sought to be put upon section 612 has not been the policy of our parties. They have acted otherwise over a long period of years in absolutely good faith. It is shown here that the Republicans in Alabama recognized that doctrine. The supreme court of my State held, when a mandamus under the statute was in question, that a political party had the absolute power to fix any reasonable qualifications for candidates, and stated in the Lett case that the decisions were practically unanimous that party loyalty was a reasonable qualification and within the power of the committee.

The construction of these statutes, the operation of them by the political parties in Alabama, he Supreme Court of Alabama, must be overturned before the Senate can reach the conclusion that my name was not legally upon the ballot.

Mr. President, I know that no one, after looking into the facts in this case, can say that I was not honestly elected, even if the burden were upon me to show that I was.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Costigan	Hull	Pittman
Austin	Couzens	Johnson	Reed
Bailey	Cutting	Jones	Robinson, Ark.
Bankhead	Dale	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Barbour	Dickinson	Kendrick	Schall
Barkley	Dill	Keyes	Sheppard
Bingham	Fess	King	Shipstead
Black	Fletcher	La Follette	Shortridge
Blaine	Frazier	Lewis	Smoot
Borah	George	Logan	Steiwer
Bratton	Glass	McGill	Stephens
Broussard	Glenn	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Bulkley	Goldsborough	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Gore	Metcalf	Townsend
Byrnes	Hale	Morrison	Trammell
Capper	Harrison	Moses	Tydings
Caraway	Hastings	Neely	Vandenberg
Carey	Hatfield	Norbeck	Wagner
Cohen	Hawes	Norris	Walcott
Connally	Hayden	Nye	Walsh, Mass.
Coolidge	Hebert	Oddie	Watson
Copeland	Howell	Patterson	White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT OMAHA, NEBR.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 4401) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr., and I submit a report (No. 604) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, in line 7, after the figures "1930" and the comma, to insert "heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved February 20, 1931," and in line 8, after the word "hereby," to insert the word "further," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Farnam Street, Omaha, Nebr., authorized to be built by the Omaha-Council Bluffs Missouri River Bridge Board of Trustees by act of Congress approved June 10, 1930, heretofore extended by an act of Congress approved February 20, 1931, are hereby further extended one and three years, respectively, from June 10, 1932.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, less than two months from now the great political parties will select their standard bearers to present the party records and party promises to the people for another decision at the polls.

If that accounting were made now instead of next November, what would be the record? To answer that question, as the voters will demand that it be answered, we must recall what promises were made to the voters four years ago, and determine whether those promises have been fulfilled.

Four years ago the Republican Party and the Democratic Party made solemn promises to the American farmers. Have these promises been fulfilled? Let us see.

The Republican platform promised agriculture equality with industry. I read from its 1928 platform:

The Republican Party pledges itself to the development and enactment of measures which will place the agricultural interests of America on a basis of economic equality with other industries to insure its prosperity and success.

Now, I read the following extracts from the platform of the Democratic Party:

Producers of crops whose total volume exceeds the needs of the domestic market must continue at a disadvantage until the Government shall intervene as seriously and as effectively in behalf of the farmer as it has intervened in behalf of labor and industry. There is a need of supplemental legislation for the control and orderly handling of agricultural surpluses in order that the price of the surplus may not determine the price of the whole crop. Labor has benefited by collective bargaining and some industries by the tariff; agriculture must be as effectively aided.

The Democratic Party in its 1924 platform pledged its support to such legislation. It now reaffirms that stand and pledges the united efforts of the legislative and executive branches of government, as far as may be controlled by the party, to the immediate enactment of such legislation, and to such other steps as are necessary to place and maintain the purchasing power of farm products and the complete economic equality of agriculture.

Mr. President, as one method to give this equality to agriculture, the Democratic platform pledged the party to an enactment as follows:

We pledge the party to an earnest endeavor to solve this problem of the distribution of the cost of dealing with crop surpluses over the marketed units of the crop whose producers are benefited by such assistance.

This means the equalization-fee plan.

I continue the quotation:

The solution of this problem would avoid Government subsidy to which the Democratic Party has always been opposed. The solution of this problem will be a prime and immediate concern of a Democratic administration.

Mr. President, can anyone seriously contend that these promises have been fulfilled? As a matter of fact, no one will contend that agriculture has been placed on a basis of equality with other industries. I have at hand the April 1 issue of "The Agricultural Situation," published by the United States Department of Agriculture, which shows that the level of farm prices is approximately 60 per cent of the pre-war level, while the level of prices of products purchased by farmers is approximately 120 per cent of the pre-war level, thus giving agriculture a purchasing power of only 50 per cent. The farmer's dollar therefore is worth only 50 cents in exchange for the industrial commodities which he purchases. Is there any equality in this situation?

I call attention further to the fact that this inequality is much worse now than it was in 1928 when these promises of equality were made. This same bulletin of the Department of Agriculture shows that the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar in 1928 was 90 compared with 50 now. In other words, the inequality of agriculture with industry as expressed by the ratio between the two price levels has widened 40 points. It has reached a state that is well-nigh intolerable.

Yet what has Congress done about it? What steps have been taken by this Congress to remedy this situation? Congress has been here nearly five months, with power to ameliorate the situation and remove at least to a degree this inequality, and yet nothing has been done except to hear the pleas of the spokesmen for the farmers beseeching Congress to come to agriculture's relief. Is anything to be done? If so, there is no time to lose. Little more than a month remains of this session. Moreover, if Congress does not act it can not avoid the definite charge that it has not had the will to act. We must not go before the country subject to such an indictment. Something must be done—and done at once.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PATTERSON in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Costigan	Hull	Pittman
Austin	Couzens	Johnson	Reed
Bailey	Cutting	Jones	Robinson, Ark.
Bankhead	Dale	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Barbour	Dickinson	Kendrick	Schall
Barkley	Dill	Keyes	Sheppard
Bingham	Fess	King	Shipstead
Black	Fletcher	La Follette	Shortridge
Blaine	Frazier	Lewis	Smoot
Borah	George	Logan	Steiwer
Bratton	Glass	McGill	Stephens
Broussard	Glenn	McKellar	Thomas, Idaho
Bulkley	Goldsborough	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Bulow	Gore	Metcalf	Townsend
Byrnes	Hale	Morrison	Trammell
Capper	Harrison	Moses	Tydings
Caraway	Hastings	Neely	Vandenberg
Carey	Hatfield	Norbeck	Wagner
Cohen	Hawes	Norris	Walcott
Connally	Hayden	Nye	Walsh, Mass.
Coolidge	Hebert	Oddie	Watson
Copeland	Howell	Patterson	White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

ALABAMA SENATORIAL CONTEST

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 199) reported by Mr. GEORGE and Mr. BRATTON from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

Resolved, That JOHN H. BANKHEAD is hereby declared to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Alabama for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1931, and is entitled to a seat as such.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HASTINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, does the Senator from Delaware particularly desire to speak now?

Mr. HASTINGS. No; I am perfectly willing that the Senator from Nebraska shall proceed, if he desires to do so.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it is always an unpleasant task that confronts the Members of the Senate when they are compelled to vote on a question like that which is now presented to us. As I look at it, however, such a question goes away beyond any personality. I agree most heartily with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] when he said, in substance, that we ought to pass upon a question of this kind as a judge would pass on it in a court of justice. Personal friendship and personal feeling must be cast aside. I think the question ought to be considered in an absolutely nonpartisan manner. It is one time when consideration of partisanship—even agreeing, for the sake of the argument, that such questions have their places—ought to be eliminated.

The Senate acts in a judicial capacity when it is passing on the right of some one to a seat in the body, if it ever acts in such a capacity. As I look at it, we are sitting as a court—as a supreme court—rendering a judgment that is final, a judgment from which there is no appeal. We must act upon our several responsibilities as members of that court. We are only human and, of course, being human, are liable to err. We know that we will disagree often upon questions of the most vital importance.

As I look at the question, it is similar to the question which the Senate passed upon in the so-called Vare case, from Pennsylvania, and in the Smith case, from Illinois. In those cases it was conceded that Mr. Vare and Mr. Smith had been elected at the general election. We rejected them, however, on account of irregularities occurring in the primaries. The legal question was then raised whether we had any right to consider the primaries. It was claimed, on the one hand, that the election was final unless there was fraud in the election itself. It was said that, even conceding the irregularities in the primaries and the use of immense sums of money, all those things were exposed before the election; that the electorate knew all about them; and that, in face of the facts, they elected Mr. Smith and Mr. Vare.

I am not disputing but that there is some reason in that argument; and if we can not go back to the primary, that argument must prevail; but some of us believed that the primary, regardless of what may have been said by courts, was an integral part of the election, and we took judicial notice of the fact that in Pennsylvania and in Illinois the primary was the real deciding contest, more important than the election itself. So, as we looked at it, at least, it was no argument to say that Mr. Vare was elected in Pennsylvania, because we said, "If you control the primary in Pennsylvania, you have thereby controlled the election; and it will take a political revolution in a State like Pennsylvania to overthrow the result of the primary." We relied upon section 5, article 1 of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

That provision of the Constitution of the United States means that the Senate is the judge—the sole judge, the final judge—of the qualifications of every man who seeks admittance into this Chamber as a Member. So we claimed not only have we the right but we are confronted with the responsibility to act. If we want to keep the Senate above suspicion, if we want a Senate that is untrammeled and uncoerced by outside influences, if we want the Senate to be composed of Members who are under no obligations outside of the Senate so far as their duties here are concerned, then it is up to us to face that responsibility and to act accordingly.

I believed then and I believe now that our position was perfectly logical; and not only that, but that we would have been derelict in our duty had we not faced the responsibility. We must not forget, Mr. President, that a government such as ours is supposed to be founded upon the consent of the governed, and that if we coerce the electorate, if we wrongfully influence the voter, no matter what the means or the methods may be, we are striking at the very foundation of free government. It was no answer to say that Mr. Vare and Mr. Smith were honest, upright, patriotic men. Even if we should concede, for the sake of the argument, that if they had been seated their official duties and work would have been untainted and unquestioned, we were, nevertheless, as we looked at it, establishing a precedent under which, if carried to its logical conclusion, the highest legislative body in the Government would have gradually drifted to anarchy; and if the theory were carried to its logical conclusion, our Government would necessarily have to fail.

So we are confronted here with a fundamental principle of free government. It is not my intention to cast any aspersions upon any of the candidates in this contest, or even to suggest that the committee that has had charge of the contest has been improperly influenced. I want to concede, to begin with, that so far as I know everybody has been acting in good faith.

Being a supreme court in matters of this kind, we can not escape the responsibility of our decision. We ought, I think, to pay due respect to the decisions of our State courts and our Federal courts. We ought particularly to follow, if we can, the courts of Alabama so far as the election machinery of that State is concerned. Nevertheless, not one of those decisions is conclusive upon our action or is binding upon us.

They ought to be persuasive; we ought to follow them, if we can; we ought to place ourselves in the same position as though we were members of the Supreme Court of the United States or of a State court, where presented in the argument perhaps there would be conflicting decisions, and all of them could not be followed; or if there were only one line of decisions, if we thought it were violative of the fundamental principles of our Government, if it were not applicable to the present day and present civilization, we ought not to hesitate to overrule it, because all judges, as well as all men, are human; and if no decision had ever been modified, if no decision of any court had ever been overruled, we should be a century behind where we are now in our position in the civilized world.

If there were no legislatures, and the law were made only by decisions of the courts, yet as human progress goes onward, as civilization increases, as intelligence and education of men and women become better and more universal, we will find that the decisions of one age will not apply to the civilization of another. That is the history of our common law as it has grown up through many years of decisions; but the decision of 100 years ago may not apply to the civilization of to-day. The law that would rule in a country that was unorganized, uneducated, uncivilized, would not be sufficient if applied to a high state of civilization.

With these preliminary remarks, Mr. President, I desire to consider as nearly as I can, and as well as I am able, what to me is the vital legal proposition involved in this contest; and it is not without difficulty. I concede, to begin with, that there is room for difference of belief and of judgment and of decision. Nevertheless, I believe that as I proceed I shall be able to convince those who will follow me that the weight of authority, and the reason for the judgment that I am going to reach, come from a proper construction in the light of the present day and age of the decisions that have been rendered even in Alabama.

Section 612 of the Code of Alabama reads as follows. It is headed:

612. (521) Who may vote in the primary election: All persons who are qualified electors under the general election laws of this State shall have the right to participate in such primary elections, subject to such political or other qualifications as may be prescribed by the State executive committee or governing body of such political party for its candidate.

Remember, "for its candidate."

Reading again from the same section:

The State executive committee may delegate to the several county executive committees the power to prescribe the qualifications of voters in any primary election for the nomination of candidates for offices to be filled by the vote of a single county.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that those words, "for its candidate," were written into the law in the year 1919, so as to make certain that the primary could be held at public expense.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I thank the Senator for his suggestion.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware what difference that makes as to the construction of the statute.

Mr. HASTINGS. The words "for its candidate" must have been put in there for some purpose, and that is the reason why I called attention to the matter.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. DILL. Was not that purpose so that the primary expenses would be paid at public expense?

Mr. NORRIS. Section 672 of the Alabama Code reads as follows:

672. Assessments and qualifications of candidates; how fixed: Any executive committee of a party may fix assessments or other qualifications as it may deem necessary for persons desiring to become candidates for nomination to office at a primary election; but no assessment shall be made by a committee for any county having by the last or a future census a population of less than 45,000, and in larger counties such assessment shall not exceed 2 per cent of one year's emolument of the office sought, and for unremunerative or party office it shall not exceed $10 for one filled by the vote of a single county, and if filled by the vote of a subdivision greater than one county not over $20, and if filled by the vote of the whole State it shall not exceed $50.

I have read the entire section, but, of course, only a small part of it applies to this particular case. I want to read that part again:

Any executive committee of a party may fix assessments or other qualifications as it may deem necessary for persons desiring to become candidates—

This applies to candidates. Remember, the section I read before refers to persons who can vote, and that section says:

All persons who are qualified electors under the general election laws of this State shall have the right to participate in such primary elections, subject to such political or other qualifications as may be prescribed by the State executive committee or governing body of such political party for its candidate.

In pursuance of that law the Democratic executive committee adopted the following regulation:

Be it resolved—

1. That a primary election be, and the same is hereby, called to be held at the several polling places in this State, at the hours fixed by law, on the second Tuesday in August, 1930, for the nomination of Democratic candidates for offices to be filled in the general election next succeeding and that the candidates of the Democratic Party for all State, district, circuit, Federal, and county offices to be filled in the general election to be held in November, 1930, be nominated in the primary election to be held on the second Tuesday in August, 1930, under the provisions of the statutes of Alabama governing primary elections.

2. That the following persons shall be entitled to vote in said election and none other, namely:

Qualified white electors of this State who believe in the principles of the Democratic Party and who agree and bind themselves by participating in said primary to abide by the results of said primary election, and to support the nominees of the Democratic Party therein.

3. The following persons, and none other, shall be eligible to be candidates for nomination in this primary, namely:

Qualified white electors who possess the qualifications fixed by law by the respective offices for which they are candidates for nomination: Provided, however, That no person shall become a candidate for any State, district, Federal, or circuit office or have his or her name printed upon the Democratic ballot in the primary election to be held on the 12th day of August, 1930, if such person either voted a Republican presidential ticket in November, 1928, or openly or publicly opposed the election of the nominees, or either of them, of the Democratic convention held at Houston, Tex., in 1928, or who opposed the election of Democratic electors for President or Vice President in November, 1928. Such proposed candidates shall also be required to pay the assessment fixed by this committee on or before the date limited for paying such assessment and for the filing of declaration of their candidacy.

4. That candidates for nomination for all of said offices, except as herein provided for, shall within such time as may be specified by this committee file with the chairman of the State Democratic executive committee a declaration of candidacy as follows:

I hereby declare myself to be a candidate for the Democratic nomination in the primary election to be held on the second Tuesday of August, 1930, for the office of ———.

I hereby certify that I did not vote a Republican presidential ticket in November, 1928, or openly and publicly oppose the election of the nominees of the Democratic Party or either of them, and that I did not oppose the election of the Democratic electors for President or Vice President in November, 1928.

I further agree to abide by the result of the primary election in which I am a candidate and to support the nominee of the Democratic Party in such election. I further certify that I am a qualified white elector of the State of Alabama and possess qualifications fixed by law for the office for which I am a candidate.

It will be observed that this committee, by these rules and regulations, fixed a different qualification for a candidate at that primary from that which they fixed for an elector at that primary. There can be no dispute about that. In other words, the elector, the person who wanted to vote, had to have certain qualifications; but the candidate had to have certain other qualifications, different from those of the elector.

It was contended that under the law which I have quoted the committee had no authority to fix one qualification for the voter in the primary and a different qualification for the candidate. That was the question at issue; and an attempt was made to take it into court and get a judicial construction of it. I do not care now to reread these sections; but Senators, I think, will have no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that there are two sets of qualifications in the regulations.

I do not believe that a fair construction of the statute will lead to any other conclusion than that the committee was by the law deprived of the right of prescribing different qualifications for candidates and for electors.

An action was commenced by Mr. Wilkinson, who was Senator Heflin's attorney. That action was an application for an injunction restraining the officials of a county from paying the expenses of the primary of 1930, alleging that the primary was illegal and void. It was commenced against the proper officials of the county. The circuit court before which the action was commenced denied the plantiff's application by sustaining a demurrer and dismissing the case, on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction.

The case went to the supreme court, was argued there, and the supreme court affirmed the decision of the lower court, entirely and solely on the ground that the court below had no jurisdiction. Even though the attorneys for both sides asked the court to consider the merits, the majority of the court refused to do so, saying that if they had no jurisdiction, they had no right to consider the case, and that they would examine that question first.

They went at length into a discussion of the law and the precedents to determine whether they had jurisdiction to issue an injunction in this kind of a case, and they decided that, under the law of Alabama, they had no such right. Hence they never touched the merits of the question. They did not refer to them anywhere, in any way, except to say they had been asked by both sides to pass upon the merits, but that they declined to do so because they thought they had no jurisdiction, and that it would be useless for them to go into the merits. So that, as far as the majority of the court was concerned, they never considered any of the questions which are involved here before us. They never considered the question as to whether this was a lawful primary or an illegal primary, that being the only question involved, as far as the merits of the case were concerned.

One member of the court, Judge Thomas, dissented, did not agree with a majority of the court; but found, upon an examination, that the court did have jurisdiction, and hence, finding that the court did have jurisdiction, he went into the merits of the case. So that while the discussion of the merits took place entirely in this so-called dissenting opinion, there is nothing in the dissenting opinion, so far as this case before us is concerned, that was questioned in any degree by any other member of the court in that case.

Judge Thomas, after finding that the court had jurisdiction, delivered quite an elaborate opinion. A good deal of it is taken up with the question of jurisdiction. He discusses the jurisdictional question at greater length than the majority of the court does and reaches a different conclusion, as I have said.

Right at the beginning Judge Thomas said:

> The importance of the question presented for decision justifies a further expression of opinion to that which has been said. The matter would have been simple had the State executive committee only followed the clearly expressed mandate of sections 612 and 672 of the code, and prescribed like qualifications for electors and candidates. The duty of this court in the premises is merely to follow the law and declare its application upon the resolutions as to the rights of qualified electors and candidates.

After discussing the jurisdictional question, and coming to the merits of the case, Judge Thomas said, after reviewing the facts as I have, quoting the law:

> Certain corollaries may be deduced from the statutes and decisions as: (1) That primary elections held in this State at public expense must be called and held in substantial compliance with organic and statutory law. (2) That executive committees of political parties have the right to declare political or other qualifications and tests of loyalty and affiliation for electors and candidates alike, and not different or double qualifications.

Further on the judge said:

> (4) It is the legislative intent that, as to affiliation and party loyalty, all electors may become candidates, and all candidates may be electors. (5) That it is the purpose and reasonable interpretation of sections 612, 672 of the code—

The ones I have read—

> as a part of that important system, when construed together, not to authorize a test or qualification by the committee that was inapt, unreasonable, and arbitrary to party loyalty and affiliation as to a candidate that is not likewise applied to an elector, or vice versa.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, that was a dissenting opinion, was it not?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. It is the only opinion, however, in this case passing upon the merits presented to us. All the other judges held that they had no jurisdiction, without considering the merits. I pause longer to say that in this case no judge, by intimation or express terms or otherwise, has found any fault with the judgment of Judge Thomas in his dissenting opinion. So that at least we must reach the conclusion that, as far as the Supreme Court of Alabama is concerned, but one judge has expressed an opinion upon the merits or the legality of the primary, and that was the judge from whose opinion I am now reading.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BLAINE. Does the statement the Senator just made apply only to the Wilkinson case, or does it apply also to the Lett against Dennis case?

Mr. NORRIS. The Lett case, I think, does not controvert the opinion rendered by the judge in this case, although there is a difference of opinion as to that. I have not yet come to the Lett case.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator expects to discuss that case?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; somewhat.

Mr. BLAINE. Judge Thomas concurred with the majority opinion in the Lett case.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BLAINE. In which the court held, in effect, that the executive committee of a party could fix the qualifications of a candidate.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I prefer not to go into that until I get to it.

Mr. BLAINE. I am not asking the Senator to go into it now.

Mr. NORRIS. I contend that there is nothing in the Lett case which conflicts with the dissenting opinion in the Wilkinson case. Let me read further:

> The Constitution leaves the matter of domestic regulation and control to the legislature, with the power of reasonable regulation, and the legislature left it to the governing body of the party, after expressly declaring that electors and candidates be subject to and may participate in the primary under the same and like political or other qualifications. (7) The only interpretation of sections 612, 672, code, that is reasonable is that contained in its plain and simple language—that the same tests of party loyalty and affiliation be prescribed for party electors and for party candidates. This uniformity the resolution in question failed to provide as it should have done. (8) The legislature required this discharge of duty of the party's committee, if it decides, and is to hold a party primary at public expense. (9) The law exacts of this court the construction of the law as duly enacted, and I conceive it my duty to do so as to these statutes and the resolution in question.

Further on he said:

> It follows from this material departure in the resolution from the requirements of law that the primary election called is not the kind of a primary that may be held under the law and at public expense in the State of Alabama. The right of payment therefor from public funds is a matter of public concern that may be duly challenged by the taxpayer's bill on the ground of failure in material respects to comply with the statute in the primary called.

Mr. President, up to that time, as far as any judicial opinion has been expressed by the Supreme Court of Alabama, or any other court in Alabama, so far as I know, we have only the opinion of this judge, who, in so many words, says that the primary was null and void under the law of Alabama.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. BLAINE] refers to what is known as the Lett case, and it has been referred to by other Senators. I concede, to begin with, that there is some difficulty in harmonizing the Lett case with the case from which I have been reading, although it in no respect refers to this decision, and the opinion in the Lett case was concurred in by the judge who wrote the opinion from which I have just been reading, and who said, in the little note at the end, that he concurred in the result. He said in so many words that he concurred in the result, and then referred to the case from which I have been reading as a place where the reader could find his opinion upon the law expressed at length.

The Lett case was a quarrel which went up from the Republican Party. Not many of us knew there was a Republican Party down in Alabama, but it seems there was one. I suppose there are two or three officers down there holding Federal jobs, anyway. I read a statement of the case:

The Chilton County Republican executive committee called a primary election to be held "with the State primary election on August 12, 1930." In the call resolution all qualified voters, regardless of past party affiliations and who believe in the principles of the Republican Party and pledge themselves to support the nominees of such party in the primary, were invited to participate. But as to one desiring to become a candidate, there was an additional requirement that he state "under oath how he or she voted in the last general election of 1928—that is, whether said proposed candidate supported the Republican ticket or the Democratic ticket or voted a split ticket." This oath was required to be filed with the chairman and kept on file open to inspection, as well as published in a newspaper published in said county.

I wish Senators would remember that because of one construction put upon the action of the court in this case and of the Republican committee, as already alluded to by the Senator from Delaware. Senators will notice that there is nothing in this requirement to the effect that one who did not support the ticket could not become a candidate, but in order to become a candidate he must take an oath, and that oath must be filed and published in the newspapers. So it is fair to say, I think, that if the candidate who refused to take the oath had taken the oath, he would have had no further difficulty. In other words, the object of this was to acquaint the voter with the partisan activities of the candidate to show whether he had always been loyal, always supported the ticket, or whether he had not, so as to let the partisan Republican who wanted to vote against any man who had not always during his lifetime supported the straight ticket, yellow dog and all, have the information upon which he could act. But this man refused to file the oath and then commenced a mandamus action. The court said:

M. F. Lett desired to become a candidate in said primary for the office of member of the board of education of Chilton County, and complied with all requirements of said executive committee as to such candidacy save one. He declined to make the oath above outlined. For his declination to conform with this requirement the chairman refused to certify his name as a candidate for said office, and this mandamus proceeding was resorted to for the purpose of compelling such certification.

This man was a candidate. The court denied the mandamus action. I want to invite attention to what the judge said who wrote the opinion. The opinion was written by Judge Gardner, of the Alabama Supreme Court:

We have concluded the standard of qualification for the candidate is properly and legally fixed by the resolution, and petitioner's argument would but result in an enlargement by operation of law of the qualification of those not candidates. With this he is not concerned, and is therefore in no position to question, as it would not affect the requirements of the resolution as to himself. His rights are to be determined by the fixed standard as to candidates, and the only statutory provision applicable thereto is section 672 of the code.

In other words, the court declined to take up the other section of the code which requires the committee to fix the same qualifications for candidates that it does for electors, and said to this man who applied for a mandamus writ, "You are in court as a candidate claiming a writ as a candidate. You are claiming under this very statute. It is nothing to you as to what the other section referred to in the other case says."

Judge Thomas, the judge who wrote the first opinion from which I have quoted, added this to the opinion:

I concur in much that Judge Gardner has said, yet I prefer to limit my concurrence to the result. I have heretofore adverted to the construction that should be given or the meaning of sections 612, 672 of the code, and find no necessity to repeat the same.

Then he refers to the case from which I first read. So the judge who wrote the first dissenting opinion evidently, at least, reached the conclusion that there was no conflict between his opinion and the opinion of the court in the Lett case, the last one from which I have read.

Now, Mr. President and Senators, if there be, as I concede there is, among lawyers here who are just as conscientious about it as I am, some disagreement as to whether the cases are at all in conflict, then it is up to us, it seems to me, as the supreme and final court, to follow, if we want to follow, as we ought to follow as nearly as we can, the decisions of the Alabama court, the course that seems to us under all the circumstances reasonable and proper. When we come to that, what kind of authority is given by the Alabama statute to the executive committee of a political party? To my mind the statute gives to the party committee, the executive committee of a political party, not holding any office, not acting under any oath of office, being responsible not to the State, but responsible only to a political party, the absolute right, when we follow it down to its logical conclusion, and the absolute power to say to the voters of Alabama who their candidate shall be, and to deprive the electorate, if they so wish, of the right to act and to vote freely and openly for candidates of their choice.

We will recognize here, I take it, that the Democratic nomination in Alabama is equivalent to election, the same as we recognized in the Vare case that the Republican nomination in Pennsylvania was equivalent to election. So when we have three men selected not by any official and not by anyone who holds an office or who is responsible to the people or the State or the county and who themselves are likewise not responsible to any official or organization or State or district or county, and when we give to that kind of a committee the absolute authority to say who can be a candidate and who can not, we have made a thrust at the very cornerstone of representative government. Carried to its logical conclusion, if spread over the country and this authority exercised, it would mean that our Republic would disappear from the earth and upon its ruins would stand a monarchy, a government not responsible to the people, a government absolutely contrary to the one which we cherish and which we claim is one that exists by virtue of the consent and approval of the people; because by that action we would have taken away from the people the right to select their own rulers. There is no doubt about that. There can be no doubt about it.

That same committee of three men, if they wanted to keep anyone off the ballot, no matter who he might be, under that authority could find some reason to do it. They could compel the man to make affidavit, and refuse him the right to run for office if he had declined to vote for a road supervisor. They could put any other qualification of that kind upon him. Their power would be practically unlimited in that respect, and they could absolutely deprive the people of an opportunity to vote in a Democratic primary for anyone that the committee desired to keep out of the primary. I do not believe anybody can dispute that.

It is conceded, I think, that a party has the right to regulate its affairs within reasonable limits. I have an idea that the line of reason in Alabama would be extended much further than it is in some of the States. But when we say to a committee in a free Republic, an unauthorized committee—I mean a committee holding no office, holding no authority from the people—when we confer upon that kind of a committee the right to say who can be candidates and who can not, we are upon the verge of the destruction of our democratic form of government.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me remind the Senator that the committee is elected by the people in the same primary election, and the committee, until the next primary is held, of course, is comprised of the actual officers in charge of party affairs; but this committee is elected by the people voting in the primary at each election.

Mr. NORRIS. And that same committee, I take it, though they have not done it here, would have authority to fix the qualifications of anybody who ran as successors of the members of the committee. If they wanted to perpetuate themselves or their kind, they could prescribe qualifications that would shut out of the primary anybody who was competing for the position of committeeman, I take it, under this statute.

Mr. GEORGE. I want to make this suggestion to the Senator. If he can imagine any reasonable qualification which could be prescribed that would admit only the present committeemen to run to succeed themselves, I would be very glad to have the Senator do it.

Mr. NORRIS. I think I can easily imagine it. I remember in one of our great cities where a Republican committee was organized about 10 or 15 or 20 years prior to the time of which I speak, and there never had been anybody taken off the committee, nobody ever added to it except by the committee itself. It was finally discovered that they were selecting delegates to the State convention regularly without the intervention of the county convention or a primary. This committee, if they wanted to do what the Senator thinks never would happen, if they wanted to perpetuate themselves in office, could see that the candidates whom they would admit as candidates were men for whom nobody would vote. They could go to the jails and the prisons and get men there to become candidates and prescribe rules that would keep out all decent men.

Mr. GEORGE. I want to say to the Senator that I do not conceive that under the Alabama statute or any other statute any committee could prescribe other than a reasonable regulation, and therefore I wanted the Senator to understand my position on this point.

Mr. NORRIS. I am glad to get it. I recognize that some of the Senator's colleagues on the committee take the same attitude; in other words, that under this law the rule would have to be reasonable. Let us concede that for the sake of argument and see where it leads us. I propounded to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON] this proposition when he was arguing the question. I said, "Suppose the committee established a rule that would prohibit anybody from being a candidate who has not voted for every Democratic candidate in the preceding election, including road overseer, and a man would say, 'I voted for everybody from President down, but when I got down to road overseer I did not vote for him.' Suppose they fixed a qualification that would prevent that kind of a man from becoming a candidate in the primary, would that be reasonable?"

The Senator from New Mexico said he thought it would, but some other people would think it would be unreasonable probably. So we are approaching the field of no limitation. We would come to the proposition of what is reasonable and what is unreasonable. To my mind the whole thing is unreasonable.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I want to ask the Senator whether he bases his contention that the primary is illegal, and therefore that Mr. Bankhead could not be seated, upon the law of Alabama or upon the action of the committee under the law?

Mr. NORRIS. The action of the committee under the law I take it would of course be a part of the law. I think the action of the committee, as the judge in Alabama said, was null and void and hence the primary was illegal.

Mr. DILL. The Senator has been arguing against the law.

Mr. NORRIS. I know I have.

Mr. DILL. And I wanted to get the Senator's view, whether he thought that law made the primary illegal?

Mr. NORRIS. No; I am not trying to convey that idea. This is the conclusion I want to draw, that the law is such an unreasonable one that we ought, as judges here, to construe it strictly; in other words, we ought not to be lenient and engraft on it, by construction, additional powers that are not in it, because I think the law is already unreasonable.

Mr. DILL. Does not the Senator think that is stretching the right of Senators in determining the qualifications of candidates a long way, especially when taken in the light of the other provisions of the Constitution which give each State the right to select its Senators and to have them here as its representatives?

Mr. NORRIS. That same argument was made in the Vare case; it has been made in every contested-election case where a man has been put out of the Senate. It was said that the Constitution provides that each State is entitled to two Senators. That is true; but the courts have held that if by their own acts or by their own laws States disqualify themselves it is up to them and it is not the fault of the Senate.

Mr. DILL. But does not the Senator see the difference between the action of a committee as the result of a law, which he thinks is bad, and the moral taint that attaches to the use of sums of money so great as to constitute an act in itself corrupt?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in the Vare case there was no evidence that anybody had been personally bribed to vote for Mr. Vare; there was no evidence in the Smith case that anybody had actually sold his vote to Smith; but the Senate assumed that the expenditure of the vast sums of money involved was corrupt in itself, and disqualified the candidate who was the beneficiary of such expenditure. That was our judgment, as I understand. There was no direct proof of the bribing of individuals or anything of that kind. We assumed, as I think we ought to and as I think we had to, that the expenditure of such vast sums of money was in itself a corruption of the electorate and disqualified the man for whom the money was spent; hence we held he could not be seated.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, on that point——

Mr. NORRIS. Allow me to finish answering the question, and then I shall yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I merely wanted to ask the Senator then if in both cases we did not have in mind moral corruption, not legal corruption.

Mr. NORRIS. Nobody that I know of said there was legal corruption, because in order to convict John Doe of selling his vote or John Smith of buying a vote there would have to be concrete evidence of that concrete fact.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator from Nebraska is a very able and a very fair Senator, and I want to ask him the direct question if we did not proceed in the Smith and Vare cases on the distinct premise that there was moral corruption involved and necessarily inferable from the use of money?

Mr. NORRIS. I think that would be a proper conclusion; I do not doubt that at all.

Mr. GEORGE. I merely wanted to suggest that to the Senator in order to see if we were in agreement on it.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not any doubt whatever about it.

I want to answer, if I have not forgotten it, the question propounded by the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], whether I can see any difference between this kind of a primary and the kind of primary that nominated Mr. Vare. I want to say that, in my judgment, the kind of primary which the Alabama law provides the State committee could hold—whether it was done in this case or not I am not saying—would lead to the condition where the corruption made possible would be worse than that arising from the spending of money.

What would happen? The tyrant who gets upon the throne may, even during his life, be the best man on earth. His successor, however, will grasp a little more power, and a little more will be grasped by the next man, until tyranny follows. It is a principle recognized by all students of government that a democracy sometimes is expensive and inefficient because it makes mistakes, and that, perhaps, the most efficient government in the world is an absolute monarchy. History shows, however, and our knowledge of human nature convinces us, that in time an absolute monarchy becomes corrupt. I am talking now about what would happen if there were continued to be carried on the kind of primary which may be held in Alabama under the laws of that State. The first three men selected might be perfectly pure. I do not know about the Alabama State committee; so far as I know they were all right; I am not making any personal charge against them. The next man would be a little worse, and the next would take advantage to keep somebody out. Eventually we should have an autocracy that would be worse than a government such as would be the result of the buying of votes and the expenditure of millions of dollars, as was done in the primaries in Pennsylvania and in Illinois. We would reach the same point. It would be reached by the use of money in the one case, and in the other, while the money would probably be there it would be money that would control a committee, almost invisible in its power, almost unlimited in its influence.

So I feel, when we have to consider that kind of a law and that kind of a primary, that we are justified in being technical, if we have an opportunity to do so, and saying that by no construction will we reach out and give this kind of a committee more power, because eventually it will mean destruction, just as surely as the sun rises in the East.

Mr. President, there is a great difference of opinion about party loyalty. I am not criticizing the man who does not agree with me; it will be considered probably by most people that I am extreme on one side of that question, and perhaps I am. For argument's sake, let us admit it. I do concede that a party has the right, within reasonable limitations, to regulate itself; but I do not believe any party ought to have the power to do what the Alabama law gives the committee the right there to do. In other words, that is a State where a Democratic nomination means the election; it is the election; it is the real test as to who is going to be Senator or governor or Member of the House of Representatives, and so on down through the list. It is the primary that settles the question; and if one controls the primary he thereby, through that instrumentality, controls the election.

Take this case. It was generally stated in the newspapers, although it is claimed in defense now that similar action was taken previously as affecting other candidates as well as Heflin, it was spread all over the country at the time this happened that the committee in Alabama had read Senator Heflin out of the Democratic Party in Alabama; that they were not going to let him run; and that is what they did by this regulation. To my mind, it is no defense to say that they did the same thing with some other candidate in 1922 or in 1926. It shows that they are traveling along. The next regulation they make will probably require a man to swear that he not only supported the Democratic ticket from President to road overseer at the last presidential election but that he did so four years before that time, and then four years prior to that time; and the next one will provide that in order to be a candidate one's father must have belonged to the Democratic Party. There is not any limit to it. And such a regulation would be more reasonable than one providing that a person could not run if he had not voted for road overseer on the Democratic ticket. To my mind, it is perfectly foolish to say that a man ought to be kept out of any particular party because he did not vote for road overseer or assessor or tax collector or candidate for any other office on a certain ticket. That is carrying it to the extreme.

Is there any Senator who has been here during the last six years who doubts for a moment that Senator Heflin is a Democrat? There is not a Senator here who doubts it. Most of us on this side did not agree with him at all; he was a bitter partisan Democrat; but from a party standpoint he was as good a Democrat as there was in the United States. He has fought Democratic battles all over the United States, and the Democrats were glad to get him to assist them; but, for some reason, the machine did not want him to stay in the Senate, and so they had the committee in Alabama adopt a resolution providing that nobody could be a candidate in the Democratic primary in Alabama unless he supported the Democratic candidate for President at the last election.

Mr. President, speaking now in rather general terms, I think it is appropriate to say here that according to my notion—and I believe the country will come to it some day—there is only one way to settle the party affiliation of an individual, and that is to take his own statement. Why should any man who has been a Republican all his life not be able, if he wants to, to go over into the Democratic Party to-morrow? What happens in the elections? Both parties go out and plead with the independent voters to vote their ticket, to vote for their candidate. If they are practicing what they preach, if they want to be consistent, they ought to say down in Alabama that no man who can not show that he has been a Democrat and his father before him a Democrat, and that he is going to be a Democrat as long as he lives, shall vote for Democratic candidates.

It is to the independent voter of this country that we owe every step of progress which we have ever made. What would the contention of the other side lead us to? What would be the use of having candidates and primaries? None whatever. All we would have to do would be to hold an election and have on the official ballot the designation "Democratic ticket," "Republican ticket," and any other ticket that might want to get on the ballot, the citizen to vote one or the other; and when all was over, if a majority of people had voted for the Democratic ticket, then let the Democratic committee select the Democratic officers. Why is not that just the same? Why is not that logical? Why is not that what we are coming to if no man dare scratch his ticket without being deprived of one of the sacred rights of citizenship?

I want to say to you, Mr. President, that the doctrine that a man ought to be punished because he will not vote a "straight" ticket is undemocratic; it is monarchial; it means, in the end, the destruction of human liberty, and you can not get away from it.

We have in the White House a man who, while holding an office under a Democratic President, and campaigning for the election of Democratic officials all over the country, almost overnight went over into the Republican Party. Did he not have a right to do that? Has anybody questioned it? Would you deprive him of his right to vote because he did it? If the election laws were in the hands of a partisan committee, he would not have been allowed to vote. He would not have been allowed to become a candidate. As one of my colleagues says, he could not have become the great leader that he has become. He could not have led us into the bright field and fortunate condition of universal happiness and prosperity as he has. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the evils of this party spirit are not imaginary. They are real. Great men before our time have been impressed with them. I want to read you what George Washington said, not when he was running for office but in the maturity of his age, after our country had been founded, after the Constitution had been adopted, after he had served for eight years as President of the United States, in the maturity of his experience. I want to read you what he said in that memorable Farewell Address to the American people about the spirit of party. He said:

> I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the State, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.
>
> This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.

He is speaking of the party spirit.

> The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.
>
> Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.
>
> It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foments occasional riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passion. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government, and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true; and in governments of a monarchical cast patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose; and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be by force of public opinion to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest, instead of warming, it should consume.

Mr. President, I believe that if our Government is to be perpetuated and continued, the words of George Washington, the Father of Our Country, must be heeded, not only in one section of the country but in all sections of the country.

When any State undertakes to delegate the powers of government to an unofficial committee, moved by party considerations, controlled by all the influences that we know control parties, we ought to hesitate; we ought to stop, to look, and to listen, and see if there is not danger just ahead of us. We ought to see if this kind of government, perpetuated and continued, will not ultimately mean just what Washington said would happen unless we took heed.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question.

First, I desire to state that I agree with everything the Senator has said about this law of Alabama. I think it is repugnant to every principle of the American system of government. The Senator is entitled to the thanks of the American people for his pillory of the party spirit. However, I find in the Constitution this provision:

The times, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations.

I should like to ask the Senator, since he believes that this law is repugnant to American institutions, as I also believe it is, whether he thinks that the State has the right by itself to enact legislation providing for primary elections in this manner.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in my judgment, the question asked me by the Senator is not involved. I am saying that under the law of Alabama itself, taking it for granted, taking the law as it exists—or, rather, as it existed at the time the primary was held, because I understand it has been changed since—taking the law as it existed then, and the best judgment of the Alabama courts, that primary was null and void. So we are not compelled even to say that we would set aside the law.

I submitted my argument on the general proposition for the purpose of convincing the Senate—and I hope all those who may hear or read what I have said—that we are justified, because of that law being unreasonable, in weighing any doubt against the legality of this primary. I think under the decisions of the Alabama courts we can properly say that it was null and void; and our authority comes from the section of the Constitution which I read, which says that we are the sole judges of the qualifications of men who come here to become Members of the Senate. We can say, "If you have obtained your election"—and that is what it means in Alabama—"by virtue of a primary so unreasonable, so unjust as to have been declared null and void by your own court, we will not admit you. We claim the right to pass on those qualifications." And when the Senator refers to the provision of the Constitution which says that the States shall hold elections, and so forth, I should like to cite him also to the provision of the Constitution which says that the Federal Government shall guarantee to every State a republican form of government.

We are not confronted now with the necessity of nullifying the Alabama law. It has been nullified by the Democratic Party in Alabama already.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have been very much interested in the statement of the able Senator from Nebraska; and in a great many respects there is no material difference between the Senator and myself upon this important question.

The evils of the party system and excess party spirit I am free to concede. The advisability of the resolution calling the primary, if authorized by law, I am free to question. I do not assume, however, that I have authority to suggest or to attempt to regulate the primary elections of a sister State. The question is not whether we are here considering a wise party policy, but whether the candidate who comes here out of the primary, through the election, ought, for any infirmity in the law itself, or anything done by a political committee in virtue of the law, to be held by the Senate not entitled to his seat.

All that the Senator from Nebraska said about the Vare case and about the Smith case meets with my entire approval. The Senator participated in those cases. So did I, in a very humble way. In the Smith case I took the position that it made no difference whether the primary law was a part of the general election law of the State, whether it had been integrated into the election law, the fact being that Mr. Smith had passed through the primary, obtained through the primary the right to go on the ballot in the general election, and had subsequently been elected to this body.

There was not anything wrong with the primary in the Smith case. There was not anything wrong with the election in the Smith case, so far as the Senate knew. There was not anything wrong with the primary election in Pennsylvania in the Vare case. My meaning is that there was no infirmity in the primary law of the State of Illinois, nor in the manner of calling or holding the primary election, so far as shown. What was the wrong? It was the moral wrong of Mr. Smith, who, as chairman of the Utilities Commission of the State of Illinois, with power to fix the rates of public utilities, accepted large sums of money from those utilities, and used that money to defray his expenses in the primary. We thought that the amount of money used and the source from whence it came justified the exclusion of Mr. Smith.

Nothing that occurred in the primary could cure the moral defect found in Mr. Smith; nothing that occurred in the election could restore him to moral health, because Smith was affected with an incurable disease. There was not anything wrong with the primary in Illinois, let me repeat, but there was something wrong with Mr. Smith.

I think I may say that there is a vast difference between a Senator elect who appears at the bar of the Senate and seeks admission against whom charges involving moral fitness are made and one who, because of some law of the State, with which we do not agree, is challenged on that account. The fair-minded Senator from Nebraska, of course, concedes that the law referred to has been the law through a period of years, and that the same rule, in substance, has been applied in other elections. Presumably the contestant in this case had the advantage of it in a preceding election, because there could have been little use of having a similar rule unless the rule should operate to exclude some one from the primary. The point I make is that the law had existed for many years, and the executive committee of the party had exercised exactly the same power in previous primary elections.

I believe that it would have been unwise for the executive committee of my party in my State to attempt to exercise any such power as was exercised in Alabama in 1930. Publicly I declared that no such regulation as that should be adopted, and the basis upon which I put my declaration was substantially the same broad ground of sound public policy upon which the distinguished Senator from Nebraska puts his objection in this case.

The point is, however, that as between a candidate who is morally unfit, which no election, even an election unopposed, and no primary nomination can cure or remedy, and a candidate who comes here affected only by the infirmity of a law of his own State, conceding the infirmity to exist, a law which stands upon the statute book, which the courts of the land have not stricken down, either because not invited to do so, or because they could find no grounds upon which they could legally strike it down, the cases are vastly different, it seems to me, as different as the day from the night.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course the Senator will do me the justice of saying that while I argued the injustice of the law itself, I did not say that the contestee should be denied a seat because I opposed that law. I claim that the law was violated by the committee, and that on account of that violation the primary was null and void.

Mr. GEORGE. I am glad we get to that point. There is no Member of this body, and I have known no Member of the Senate during my service, who universally views every great question and every moral question with a higher degree of fairness than the distinguished Senator from Nebraska.

Now I come to the question which the Senator raises, and I invite his attention, while I may repeat what he has said. In the first place, Alabama has a system somewhat peculiar. The law of the State defines a political party, and it defines it mechanically, in a sense. A political party in Alabama is an assemblage or association of voters who agreed in the last preceding general election in that State upon candidates, and who cast 25 per cent or more of the votes cast in the last general election.

Mr. President, that leads me to this observation: Section 612 is as the Senator from Nebraska has read it; but, before again reading section 612, permit me to read section 624 of the Code of Alabama:

> Any qualified elector who is also a member of a political party as herein defined—

How defined? Simply as those voters who associated themselves in the last preceding election held in the State of Alabama, if their vote amounted to 25 per cent or more of the total vote cast in the State in that election. That is a political party, and the Code of Alabama is regulating that kind of a political party, and none other.

To come back to section 624:

> Any qualified elector who is also a member of a political party as herein defined, participating in a primary election, shall be entitled to vote at such primary election and shall receive the official primary election ballot of the political party and no other.

That provision applies not only to Democrats; it applies to Republicans, it applies to Socialists, if in the preceding general election they were able to cast, for particular candidates or particular measures, 25 per cent of the votes cast in the election.

Now I come to section 612. That section, properly construed, in the light of the provision I have just read, simply means this, that all persons who are qualified electors and who are also members of a political party are entitled to vote in the primary election of that party.

The language to which the Senator called attention, that is, "subject to the same political qualifications prescribed by the party authorities for their candidates," may be subject to the interpretation and construction which the Senator has placed upon it. Indeed, that may be the natural interpretation of the words and language. But I do not think that is the true construction of the act. I do not wish to get into that field of argument, because it seems to me that in law and in morals the case should be decided without raising hair-splitting distinctions in an attempt to construe this particular statute.

Bear in mind that the law of Alabama is dealing with political parties as defined by the code; and, as defined by the code, a political party is simply a group of men who voted for the same candidates in the last general election, if the group represented 25 per cent of the total vote cast in the State.

Bear in mind that the form of the ballot is prescribed; and it is declared that all qualified electors who are members of a political party may obtain the ballot of that party and may obtain the ballot of no other party.

The primary purpose of section 612 is not to declare who is entitled to vote. That is not the purpose of the section. The primary purpose, as I think, when we consider all applicable sections together, is a rule of construction which lawyers know quite well.

This section intended another thing. The black-letter type says "Who may vote in a primary election," it is true, but in every code State, as far as I know, there are opinions of the courts holding that the black-letter type is not a part of the section. The weight of authority is to that effect, at least. The black-letter type expresses the idea of the one who makes the index.

One purpose of section 612 was to emphasize the fact that the governing authorities of a political party have the right to lay down qualifications for its candidates.

It is true that in another section of the code it is expressly said that "Any executive committee of a political party may fix assessments or other qualifications as it may deem necessary for persons desiring to become candidates for nomination to office," and so forth. But section 612, in my opinion, although I do not desire to overemphasize the point, because I do not think this matter ought to be decided upon it, was intended to make clear beyond all peradventure that the executive committee or governing authorities of a political party in Alabama could fix the qualifications of candidates for office.

Mr. President, whether they should be allowed to do that is a different question, but the fact that they are permitted to do it, so long as they are restricted to reasonable qualifications of candidates, can not result in the harm which the Senator from Nebraska contemplates. In other words, it can not result in the destruction of republican government. If it is a reasonable qualification, it is one which a voluntary association of men for political purposes ought to have the right to prescribe. Whether they do prescribe it and do insist upon the right to prescribe it, is of course a question of policy.

The Senate is sitting as a court in this matter, and no court can say, or ought to say, that a voluntary association of men for political purposes may not prescribe reasonable qualifications for the candidates of the group. Indeed, I undertake to say that no court can rightly say that under the Constitution of the United States or the constitution of any State in the Union, because when any court undertakes to say such a thing it seems to me that it violates the primary and fundamental right of association between citizens for moral, religious, educational, or political purposes. The political group can be regulated and the State may say that it must not prescribe an unreasonable qualification.

I have no hesitancy in saying to the Senator that a rule that a candidate for public office in Alabama should be barred because he voted for all the ticket down to road commissioner and refused to vote for the candidate for road commissioner, or other candidate on the ticket, would be an unreasonable rule which, in my opinion, should be stricken down.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I preface my interruption by saying that I fully agree with the Senator's last statement; but I want to call attention to the fact that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], a man whose judgment upon a legal proposition I would respect as much as the opinion of any other man in this body, or outside of it for that matter—and I know the Senator from Georgia has the same respect for his opinion—does not agree with the Senator from Georgia. He thinks that would be reasonable. That only calls to mind—and that is the purpose of my interruption—the great difficulty that would arise.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is quite right, but I think the able Senator from New Mexico may not have fully considered his answer or he may not have fully appreciated the question propounded by the Senator from Nebraska. If the Senator should believe that some one candidate on the party ticket was corrupt and the Senator should strike his name, as he would, a rule that would exclude the Senator from participating in the next primary following would seem to me to be unreasonable. The rule would seem to be clearly unreasonable. But if the Senator did not stop at that, the situation would be different. It would be different if he should oppose the ticket, the head and front of the ticket—that is, the candidates who represented the policies and principles of the party itself and because of those policies and principles. I agree with the Senator that no one but the individual voter can ordinarily determine what he is—that is, whether he is a Democrat or Republican. Particularly is this true at this time in the history of the country. It is one thing for the party to lay down a reasonable rule, and what is a reasonable rule, of course, depends upon all the facts and circumstances of the case.

Mr. President, I want to come to the two cases considered by the Alabama courts. In the first instance the case of Wilkinson was an equitable proceeding in a court of chancery. All that court decided was that the court of equity had no jurisdiction of the case. One justice of the supreme court, on appeal, thought differently, and proceeded to state what he believed to be the true view of the law. Aside from the value of his opinion, he believed that the court had jurisdiction and he therefore should have said what he believed the law to be. But the other judges held that the court did not have jurisdiction, and being of that opinion, the majority of the court properly withheld judgment on the merits.

The Lett case——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to be understood as finding fault with the court in that case, because they did not go into the merits.

Mr. GEORGE. I so understood the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. They reached the conclusion that they had no jurisdiction, and having reached that conclusion they did not write an opinion.

Mr. GEORGE. I think, under the Alabama statute, they were compelled to reach that decision, because they have a statute dealing directly with the power of a chancery court in election cases, which seems to restrict the courts of that State in election cases.

The rule promulgated by the Republican county committee in the Lett case is different from the rule promulgated by the Democratic executive committee in the case at bar. The rule in the Chilton County case promulgated by the Republican committee did require more of the candidate than it did of the voter. The candidate refused to comply with the rule; and the committee, construing the rule, said, "You can not get your name on the ballot." As applied, the rule of the Republican county committee and the rule of the Democratic State committee under consideration present much the same situation, if not the same situation. Lett made his application upon the law side of the court.

Mr. NORRIS. I can not quite agree with the Senator about the real thing that happened. Mr. Lett declined to make the affidavit, and, therefore, the chairman of the committee refused to accept his application.

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. He did not say by that act that, if Lett had taken the oath and had shown that he voted for a Democrat instead of a Republican for President, he would have declined to receive the application.

Mr. GEORGE. No; there is not any express declaration, but his failure to make oath as required by the Republican committee effectively excluded him from the primary.

Mr. NORRIS. It does not follow under that construction that if he had made the oath and complied with it, he would have been kept off the ticket.

Mr. GEORGE. It does not necessarily follow; but in the Lett case a qualification was required of the candidate which was not also required of the voter, and that requirement of the candidate as interpreted and applied by the party committee effectively excluded the candidate from a place on the party ballot in the primary election.

What I am getting at is that that case is authority for the proposition that the Republican County Committee of Chilton County had the right to prescribe qualifications for a candidate. That case is authority for the proposition that having prescribed reasonable qualifications for the candidate, he had to meet them. That case is further authority, direct authority, as it seems to me, that when the county committee called the primary, put the machinery of the party in motion, one who could and did qualify and who got the nomination in the primary was entitled to go on the Republican ticket as the nominee of that party in the county election.

Mr. BLAINE. And there was no dissenting opinion in the Lett case?

Mr. GEORGE. No.

Mr. BLAINE. Judge Thomas, who dissented in the Wilkinson case, concurred in the majority opinion in the Lett case.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at that point?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Following the question of the Senator from Wisconsin, is it not fair therefore to assume that at least in the judgment of Judge Thomas there was no conflict between his opinion in the Wilkinson case and his agreement with the result reached in the Lett case?

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly. It is entirely fair to Judge Thomas to say that he saw no necessary conflict with the view expressed by him in the Wilkinson case. But what does follow? Judge Thomas recognized this fact, which is fundamental it seems to me, that the party officials, having brought into life a primary election in Chilton County and having prescribed a reasonable qualification for a candidate which was different from and additional to the qualifications prescribed for the voter, nevertheless agreed that the primary must continue to the selection of the nominee of the Republican Party in Chilton County for the particular county office.

Judge Thomas undoubtedly thought, unquestionably thought—and he may have been right—that when the additional qualification was fixed for the candidate, that the same qualification ipso facto applied to the voter; or he may have thought that the fact that the class of voters had been enlarged, that a privilege had been granted to the voter which the candidate himself did not enjoy, was not a reason which the candidate could urge against the rule fixing the qualifications of the candidate.

The point I reach is that when the primary was brought into being by the proper party officials, the fact that they prescribed an erroneous rule in that they required more of the candidate than of the voter, the fact that they prescribed an illegal qualification for the candidate did not wholly void the primary. It could not wholly void that primary, because the voters who had a right to go into the primary and vote constituted at last the party for which the committee had spoken in the first instance. The voters could have gone in the primary and said, "We will disregard the illegal rule. We will wipe away the illegal qualifications fixed. We will not be bound or fettered by them. You are merely our agents to make reasonable, legal qualifications." Now, is not that law and is not that common sense? After all, good law is common sense.

If that is not the law, what result have we here? We have a distinguished former Member of this body, Mr. Heflin, going into the general election in Alabama, organizing a political party, deliberately taking his chances at the polls as the candidate of that party, with the knowledge that if he should lose he could still come into court—and the Senate is the court—and say to the court, "They beat me in the election. I took my chances there. Had I won, I would have said nothing more, but now I come here and petition you to upset the election, because Mr. Bankhead's name should not have been on the ballot"—for no moral wrong in Mr. Bankhead, but upon a ground existing before the election.

I am not speaking to the Senator from Nebraska, because the Senator and myself occupy the same boat, but I would rather be John Bankhead and walk out of this body than to be a member of the regular organization on the other side, who could and did swallow Smith and Vare with all of their corruption, and yet vote to exclude John Bankhead for mere infirmity in State law or party resolution. Our friends can not and will not, I am persuaded, face the country on such a record.

Mr. President, is it not right in morals and in law to say to Senator Heflin, "You knew this primary had been called. You knew the resolution had kept you out. You knew the law of your State. You did nothing to prevent Mr. Bankhead's name going on the ballot in the general election following his selection in the primary. You had 30 days' notice after the certificate was filed with the secretary of state; ample opportunity to have taken appropriate steps to prevent Mr. Bankhead's name from appearing upon the ballot as the party candidate."

The constitution of Alabama does not require a political party to hold a primary; but, on the other hand, the constitution of Alabama says to the legislative, the judicial, and the executive branches of the State government, "You can not make a party primary compulsory. You are forbidden by the express language of the constitution from requiring any political party to hold a primary election."

There are several ways in which one may get his name on the ticket in the general election. He may get his name on the ticket through a primary. He may get his name on the ticket through caucus action. He may get his name on the ticket through a petition signed by a given number of electors. He may get his name on the ticket as the representative of a political faction, as I interpret the law of Alabama.

If the executive committee of the Democratic Party of the State called the primary, if it had the power to call it, if it had the power to prescribe reasonable rules and regulations under which the primary should be held, then Mr. Bankhead had the right to enter the primary if qualified.

The rule is that timely objection must be made to the entry of a name as a party candidate upon the official ballot, and if timely objection is not made, after the election the successful candidate has a clear title to the office if the election is free from fraud. If I am excluded by my party from its primary and, as I think, illegally excluded, why should I not exhaust my rights and remedies before the general election is held and before the people go to the polls and vote? They have the right to assume that my opponent, the party nominee, is entitled to a place on the ticket as the party's nominee if I do not challenge it. I can not refrain from the doing of the things which I ought to do, take my chances at the election, and then, perchance, if defeated, come into court and ask the court to set the election aside for causes existing before the election, the election being free and fair.

Mr. President, I am not going to cite authorities. They may be found in the report. Only two States, so far as I know, have failed to follow the rule. Montana had a different rule; the decision of the Montana court was doubted, expressly questioned, if not finally overruled. The State of Kentucky adopted a different rule in one case, or, at least applied it. The distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN], who comes from the court of last resort of that State, will bear me out in the statement that the Kentucky court has now adopted the general rule.

Now, Mr. President, I am going to discuss the merits of this contest. Former Senator Heflin, in his position yesterday, was entirely right in maintaining that some one was elected at the November, 1930, election in Alabama. If Senator Bankhead was not elected, Senator Heflin was elected, and we must not dodge the question. An election was held under the authority of law; somebody was elected; and it is the duty of the Senate to say who was elected, unless, of course, the Senate finds it impossible to determine who received the highest number of votes cast by the legally qualified electors participating in the election.

The opposition to Senator Bankhead has never undertaken to discover and determine the legal votes cast in that election. It has not undertaken the primary duty of determining what votes were legal and for whom cast. It has looked for irregularities; it has looked for failure of election officers to comply with provisions of the law; it has looked for flyspecks; but it has not inquired whether John Doe in precinct No. 1, of Jefferson County, for instance, was a legally qualified elector and whether his vote was counted as he cast it. And on account of irregularities we are asked to declare this election void.

I ask Senators to bear with me for a moment. Let us make a concrete case of it—and the only way by which we can test any question of law is by making a concrete case of it. Here is John Doe, a legally qualified voter in precinct No. 1, let us say, in Jefferson County, Ala. On this particular election day John Doe went to the polls. When he got there, he found that the sheriff of the county had not provided an election booth. Jefferson County is one in which there is a city or town of more than 3,000 population. John Doe is a good citizen; he has paid his taxes; he is entitled to vote; but the sheriff of the county has not provided an election booth. For the fault of the sheriff is John Doe to be denied the right to cast his vote and to have it counted? My good friend the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] says, "No; I would not put it on that narrow ground"; but let us go a little farther. John Doe asks for a ballot; the law of Alabama says that a ballot must be furnished him, and that when it is furnished him, the election officer must tear off the stub and put his initials on the stub of the ballot. John Doe is a good citizen; he is an honorable citizen; he has paid his taxes; he supports the churches and does everything that a good citizen should do. He takes the ballot furnished him. He can not make the election officer tear off the stub and, if he tears it off, he can not compel him to put his initials on it. But it is said John Doe, finding no booth and not being able to get a ballot with a stub detached and properly marked, must not be allowed to vote and his vote can not be counted; opportunity for fraud is too great.

Let us go another step. The election managers take the ballot from John Doe but do not number it. The law provides they shall number it, but they do not number it, or, perchance, one of the managers gets out a lead pencil and numbers it in pencil, when the law says he shall number it in ink. Is John Doe to be deprived of his vote on that account? There was no booth; the stub was not taken off the ballot; the election officer did not initial the stub; he did not put the number on the ballots. John Doe is yet a man who has paid his taxes; he is entitled in morals and in law to vote and to have his vote counted; but the Senate is asked to throw out his vote; the Senate is asked to throw out the votes of 250,000 John Does because the sheriff did not build a booth and the election manager did not detach the stub and did not put his initials on the stub and did not number the ballot or, if he numbered it, he did not number it with pen and ink.

Then we come to the final, crowning infamy of it all in denying John Doe the right to vote and to have his vote counted as cast. He not only did not find the booth and the stub was not detached and the ballot was not numbered but when the election managers finally counted the ballots they did not roll his ballot, but folded it and put it in a box unsealed. Poor John Doe, who has done nothing but pay his taxes, live an upright and godly life, walk before his fellow citizens as a man without fault, blame, or blemish is disfranchised.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. HOWELL. Is it not a fact that throughout this country John Doe always has suffered from just such things time and again?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes; that may be true.

Mr. HOWELL. The will of John Doe has been negated because of the fact that ballot boxes were not closed, because of the fact that the rules providing for the safety of the ballots were not followed; in fact, that is just exactly where the enemies of good government do their evil work——

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that.

Mr. HOWELL. Through neglecting to do these things, and these things are important. I remember last year in an election held in the State of Nebraska the election commissioner failed to put his initials upon the ballots of absentee voters; and although with those ballots the election had been carried, the supreme court held that because the election commissioner had not put his initials upon the ballots therefore the election was lost.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes.

Mr. HOWELL. So John Doe is suffering from that sort of thing all over this country.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not want the Senator to argue in my time. If the Supreme Court held that, in the absence of a statute expressly declaring that if the initials did not appear upon it, the ballot must be declared void, the decision of the court is to be regretted, because the voter's right to cast his ballot and to have it counted ought not to depend, and in sound law does not depend, upon the uncertainty of petty election officers fully discharging all directory duties placed upon them. If the law of the State expressly declares that the ballot must be held void if any particular requirement has not been complied with, then I grant that the court must hold as the distinguished Senator from Nebraska says the court did hold in his State. The Alabama statute in express terms declares, however, that no irregularity, nor any number of irregularities, not even fraud, not even corruption, shall invalidate or void the election or change the result thereof, unless the candidate who was not declared elected can be shown to have received the greater number of legal votes cast by the qualified electors in the election.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, how are you to determine, in the case of fraud, whether the ballots cast for the candidate who was declared elected were fraudulent ballots or not? When there is fraud, you can not trace it out. The fraud is to accomplish a result; and if enough fraudulent ballots are introduced——

Mr. GEORGE. I beg the Senator's pardon; if there is fraud, and if there is any proof of it, you can trace it out. Fraud is never presumed. It must always be proved; and I desire to call the Senator's attention to what happened in this case.

Late last autumn both the contestant and the contestee were given complete list of voters who participated in the Alabama election, and they were given the information as to how each voter voted; but there has been no showing, and no attempt to show, that the voters did not in fact vote and were not in fact entitled to vote just as they were recorded.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, after the ballots are put in the box, is it not almost impossible to tell whether or not the ballots were fraudulent and which ones were fraudulent.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no. If the Senator, for instance, finds a precinct in which 50 citizens voted and is given the information for whom those 50 citizens are represented to have voted, why can not he, through his friends in that district, ascertain from the 50 voters in that district whether they did in fact vote for A or vote for B, as they were recorded by the election managers? It presents no insuperable difficulty. If there is fraud, generally it can be shown, especially when it is alleged to have occurred in every county in the State of Alabama, in every precinct, and when the same kind of fraud appeared in the counties where the officers were of the Republican Party and where they were of the Democratic faith, and especially where the same sort of alleged irregularity from which fraud is suspected occurred in the votes cast for both Senator Bankhead and Senator Heflin.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. If fraud upon that scale existed, it would be quite possible to ascertain it. Then, again, it must be assumed that the entire force of election officials of a State, charged with the responsibility of conducting a fair election, would never sit down and certify the results of an election if there had been wholesale fraud in every county in that State in the face of abundant evidence of the existence of that fraud.

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I have had some experience in attempting election reforms, and I know that we could not trace fraud; and for that reason we were compelled entirely to reform the laws. I am amazed that the Senator suggests that it is a simple and easy matter to prove fraud in an election.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield for a question.

Mr. BLACK. In the case the Senator is discussing did you have numbered ballots, so that you had the names of the people who voted, and how they voted, and all you had to do was to ask a man whether he had been marked right or wrong?

The Senator says he could not find that out. Did you have numbered ballots?

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, we found that the poll books contained names, and we could not find the voters, and we could not prove that the voter was not there. We found where the ballot boxes had been taken out and the ballots entirely changed and remarked, and it was impossible to trace down and prove the extent of the fraud.

Mr. GEORGE. That was fraud if you found that, I want to say to the Senator—palpable fraud. That is not the case here.

Mr. HOWELL. Of course it was fraud. The fraud was general in this particular section, and it was impossible to trace it down to any individual who was a candidate. It was beyond his means.

Mr. GEORGE. There was general fraud, which would, of course, invalidate the election. I am not discussing that sort of case, because this is not that sort of case.

Mr. HOWELL. No; but the only reason why I am speaking of this is that the Senator has insisted that where there is fraud you can trace the fraud. I insist that you can not trace it. It is impracticable to trace it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I insist that you can, and I insist that that is what you are required to do by every American court; but I do not care to argue the matter with the Senator any further.

Mr. President, let us see what the record in this contest reveals.

The total number of ballots counted by the supervisors was 248,942.

The supervisors found that 6,238 of these ballots were not cast for either candidate for the Senate.

The supervisors counted 242,704 votes for Senator.

Nineteen thousand two hundred and thirty-six of these ballots were rejected by the supervisors because of one or more of the alleged irregularities pointed out in the minority report filed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS].

From the total number, 242,704, if we subtract the 19,236 ballots which the supervisors thought ought to be rejected, we have a balance of 223,468 votes cast for Senator in the November, 1930, election in the State of Alabama.

The supervisors gave to Mr. Bankhead 134,430 of these votes. They gave to Mr. Heflin 89,038 of these votes.

Taking away from Mr. Bankhead every classification of ballots that can be said to be considerable, and giving to former Senator Heflin the benefit of every doubt that can be raised upon this record, we have the following:

The supervisors found and counted 7,439 ballots which should be rejected, according to the supervisors. They could not say for whom they were cast; but they agreed that these votes ought to be thrown out, being illegal, in the opinion of the supervisors. Let us deduct all of these votes from Senator Bankhead's total. Certainly Senator Heflin received some of them; but let us charge them all to Senator Bankhead. Subtracting the 7,439 from 134,430, we have a balance of 126,991 for Senator Bankhead.

There were 2,335 votes which were permitted to be cast upon what were said to be incomplete affidavits or challenged oaths and for other irregularities, pointed out by the supervisors. Some of these votes were certainly cast for Senator Heflin; but let us take every one of them away from Senator Bankhead and leave Senator Heflin's vote unimpaired. Still we have a balance for Senator Bankhead of 124,656 votes against 89,038 for Senator Heflin.

Much has been said about the absentee ballots. According to all of the figures furnished us by the supervisors, properly analyzed, 11,391 absentee ballots were cast in the election. There were counted and identified some 3,834 absentee votes. Of the absentee ballots counted and identified Senator Bankhead received 2,325. Senator Heflin received and was credited with 1,509.

Let us assume that there is too much doubt about the absentee ballots to permit the committee to count any of them; and, subtracting the absentee ballots identified, we have the following:

Senator Bankhead, 122,331 votes.

Senator Heflin, 87,529 votes.

Then there were absentee ballots totaling 7,556 which could not be identified; that is to say, it could not be determined for whom they were cast. Some of them certainly were cast for Senator Heflin, because he received about 40 per cent of every particular classification of the ballots cast in the election, and Senator Bankhead received about 60 per cent. But take them all from Senator Bankhead, and we have a total left for Senator Bankhead of 114,775 against 87,529 for Senator Heflin.

Then there were three counties in which the record here shows that the ballots were burned. It is shown from the testimony of witnesses whom Senator Heflin himself yesterday declared to be men of honor and integrity that they were openly burned; that the public in some instances was invited to come and see the ballots burned. The officials made affidavit to the fact that they were burned because they thought they were not required to keep them more than 30 days, and in one instance because the sheriff was going out of office, and he did not wish to leave the ballots in his office, and he, therefore, decided to burn them before his successor took office. Whether the officers of Alabama are telling the truth, I do not know; but I would not stand upon this floor and charge that every election officer in the State of Alabama, many of them Republicans, many of them Democrats, had falsified their oaths, had disregarded the duty which they were sworn to perform.

Under the primary law of the State of Alabama—and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has reminded us that the primary in Alabama usually determines the election, and that is true—under the primary law of the State of Alabama the ballots might be lawfully destroyed within 30 days after the primary election. Therefore there was some basis upon which these three officers acted. But let us assume that the ballots in these three counties were unlawfully and corruptly destroyed—that is, for the purpose of covering up fraud.

The counties in question are Bibb, Henry, and Houston. Without enumerating the vote cast in each of the counties, permit me to say that the total vote cast in the three counties for both Senator Bankhead and Senator Heflin was 8,394. Now, let us say that these votes should be given, all of them, to Senator Heflin. Add to Senator Heflin's vote all of the ballots as disclosed by the official returns in the counties of Henry, Bibb, and Houston, or 8,394, and we have the final total of 114,775 votes for Mr. Bankhead and 95,923 for Mr. Heflin, or a clear majority of 18,852 votes in favor of Mr. Bankhead.

Let me call attention to one other fact. The votes cast for both Senator Bankhead and Senator Heflin as counted by the supervisors total 223,468; 114,775 is a clear majority of the total, and 114,775 is the irreducible minimum of the 150,000 votes received by Senator Bankhead in the election, according to the official returns.

Finally, I repeat that I am wholly unable to see how any Senator who voted to seat Smith, of Illinois, in the light of the record in his case can vote to exclude Senator Bankhead because he ran under a law of his State and under a resolution of his party with which you may not agree. No fault can justly be imputed to him and no fraud is charged against him.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR reported favorably from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads certain nominations of postmasters in Tennessee.

Mr. ODDIE reported favorably from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads sundry nominations of postmasters.

THE JUDICIARY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of E. Coke Hill, to be district judge, district of Alaska, Division No. 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Robert W. Colflesh to be United States attorney, southern district of Iowa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Lewis L. Drill to be United States attorney, district of Minnesota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of C. W. Johnson to be United States attorney, northern district of Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of R. John Allen to be United States marshal, district of Wyoming.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, all postmaster nominations on the calendar are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE ARMY

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask that all Army nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, all Army nominations are confirmed en bloc.

The Senate resumed legislative session.

ANALYZING THE FEDERAL BUDGET—ADDRESS BY DAVID LAWRENCE

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have a manuscript containing an address delivered by David Lawrence over the radio on April 24, 1932, entitled "Analyzing the Federal Budget," which contains some very interesting data. I would like to have the address printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We hear a great deal of loose talk nowadays about the high cost of government. In the first place, what do we mean by "government"? Shall we visit upon the Federal Government all the sins of the several States and the cities? Combined, all three units spend about thirteen and a half billion dollars a year, of which the Federal Government spends less than one-third. In the last decade the Federal Government has been paying off the public debt at the rate of about $9,000,000,000 and has been yielding surpluses. We heard nothing about the high cost of government until something happened to income. What we are facing to-day is the high shrinkage of income.

This, to be sure, brings us face to face with the necessity of balancing the Budget, for the shrinkage in income has been about 50 per cent. Instead of taking in four billions a year for the Federal Government, we have been collecting only about two billions.

The Federal Government's Budget is being cut. Congress is struggling with the problem to-day and so is the Executive. Unfortunately the task is being made more difficult by the vast amount of pressure exerted on the one hand by those who insist the Budget can be cut sufficiently to avoid all increased taxes and those who insist it should not be cut so as to affect their particular projects or interests.

Now, let us see just what there is to the theory that the Government has suddenly become an extravagant and wasteful institution, and that all the Budget surgeons have to do is to eliminate the wasteful or extravagant or superfluous bureaus and it will bring about a balanced Budget without increased taxation or increased borrowing.

I have to-night reclassified the official estimates for the new Budget. I am not taking into account anything in the way of economies that have been projected in the last few weeks, for I shall try to explain those to you next Sunday night, but I am dealing now with the recommendations made to Congress last December which furnish a basic outline of what has to be done in order to balance the Budget.

Out of the $4,000,000,000 Budget, the entire expense of all the departments, bureaus, commissions, independent establishments, Congress, and the legislative establishment amounted to about $504,000,000.

Just think of it. If we abolished the entire civil establishment of the Government, we would save only a half billion dollars. How, then, can we say that by cutting out "useless bureaus" we can meet a deficit which for the year ending June 30 next amounts to two billions and a half dollars?

Now, just keep in mind this $504,000,000, and we shall build up the items showing how the rest of the Budget is spent, at least how the estimates for the year beginning next July were made up when submitted to the present Congress for further economies and cuts.

The next big item is the Army and Navy. It amounts to $659,000,000. Who says we should abolish our national defense? Is the world ready yet for complete disarmament? Do the violations of treaties in the Far East recently indicate we have reached the point where we can discard the Army and Navy? Well, you will say they should at least be efficiently administered. Let us grant that and concede there are some economies to be effected, but we certainly will not find we can dispense with the whole $659,000,000 for the Army and Navy.

Thus far, adding the $504,000,000 for the civil establishment and the $659,000,000 for the Army and Navy, we add up to $1,163,000,000.

We come next to the interest on your Liberty bonds and Government securities. We certainly can not repudiate those commitments. Our banks have them in their vaults. They are a part of the capital structure of the Nation. We can not revise that commitment or cut it in any way. The interest amounts to $640,000,000. Think of it—almost as much as the Army and Navy combined.

So, adding once more, we have counted up to $1,803,000,000.

We come now to the cost of veterans. This amounts to $1,123,000,000 a year. I talked about this two weeks ago and shall only say in passing that regardless of what we may think of the item, the Government has taken a commitment to its veterans which, if it decides to repudiate or revise, we might as well say frankly will be met with the opposition of veterans and their friends and it would be next to impossible to get such repudiation through Congress. Indeed, we shall be lucky if this item is not increased. There are, of course, some economies in administration and certain inequities that can be straightened out, but the most that has been recommended thus far by anybody in a position of responsibility is a cut of only $80,000,000.

But again continuing with the estimates, we find the items I have mentioned thus far, namely, $1,803,000,000, when combined with the veterans item, makes a total of $2,926,000,000.

We took in during this current fiscal year less than $2,000,000,000 in income, so if we merely want to meet the obligations I have just enumerated we would have to borrow money or increase taxes so as to get more revenue.

Now, there are two more items left that I have not dealt with. One is an item of $363,000,000 for improvements. This includes public roads, public buildings, rivers and harbors, and general construction, all urged upon the Government as a means of diminishing the ill effects of unemployment and helping the producers of raw materials and giving work to skilled as well as unskilled labor. Maybe we don't need all of that $363,000,000 this year for public works, but there again the question is whether the commitments and authorizations made in past years can or should be revised.

There is another item of $155,000,000, which is the cost of running the Post Office Department—that is the deficit. It is one of the reasons why there is now planned an increase in postage rates. But that's only another form of taxation, so whoever says we need not increase revenues by taxes or other revenue-raising measures payable by the public isn't again carefully examining our shrunken revenues.

All these items thus far count up to $3,444,000,000, and to this must be added $496,000,000 as the annual installment payment on the public debt. This item is not to be confused with the annual interest. It is known as sinking fund and is designed to diminish the principal every year.

So the total Budget thus adds up to close to about four billions.

Now, let us consider this Budget in another way. We hear much conversation about "less government in business," much "government competition with business," and so on.

Let me ask you what competition with business there is as between the Army and Navy and the business world? Where does the Navy buy its supplies; where does it buy its materials? From private business.

Again, what competition is there between the expenses of the Veterans' Bureau and the business world? Don't the veterans spend their money buying things from private business firms, stores, and individuals?

What competition is there between the money spent for interest and sinking fund on the public debt and the business world? The interest goes to the holders of securities—the American people.

What competition is there between the roads and buildings constructed and the business world which indeed profits from their construction? There are no Government contractors or laborers—for virtually all of these public works private builders are engaged.

What competition is there between the Post Office Department and the public? Would the Nation repeal the parcel post act or would it turn over the carrying of the mails to private contract and could any private concern make money out of it if the Government insisted on regulation, which it would, of course, do, lest such a Government-granted monopoly would lead to excessive prices for postage and carrying of packages? And who carries the mails? Why, the railroad and steamship companies, and now the aviation companies—they receive a large part of the Government's money.

Now, let us take all the independent commissions and boards—they cost exactly $53,000,000 a year. If we abolished them all, we wouldn't be able to balance the Budget, because the $53,000,000 is a little more than 1 per cent of the whole Budget.

We hear much comment about the costs of the various departments. For instance, we look over the departmental appropriations and we discover that the Agricultural Department spends $197,000,000. We find this to be one of the largest items. But when we examine it what do we learn? Why, that $109,000,000 of the amount is for public roads. And who wants those roads? The automobile industry, which has urged them for a generation. And without those roads we could not have made the automobile as popular a piece of merchandise as it is for the American people. So actually the Agricultural Department spends about $88,000,000 net and not $197,000,000. And would you say $88,000,000 is an excessive amount to spend annually to care for the interests of the American farmer, whose total output is on the average worth between nine and ten billion dollars a year, and has gone as high as twelve billions? That represents a big purchasing power, and we are all dependent on it and want agriculture sustained.

Let us look at the Treasury Department. Here we find in the list that the department costs $293,000,000. But out of this we must take $146,000,000 for public buildings. So the Treasury Department itself spends only $147,000,000, and out of that we find that we could logically subtract $33,000,000, which is the cost of collecting the billions in taxes and revenues and $20,000,000 for gathering of customs duties. This would make the net cost of the Treasury, if we eliminate the cost of collecting taxes, in the neighborhood of ninety millions, and even this is hardly a fair reflection of what the Department of the Treasury does, for it has the Public Health Service and miscellaneous activities that have been under that department virtually from the beginning of the Republic.

My purpose is merely to show you that the Government departments as a whole—all of them, including the independent offices—do not cost us a half billion out of our four billion, and you can not abolish them all. Even if you cut them 50 per cent, you could save but $250,000,000—a big saving, to be sure, but it would not avoid the need for some new taxation.

Next week I shall tell you just what the economy plan thus far is and what progress has been made since the estimates were submitted last December.

But in all this discussion of waste I think we should bear in mind that there are certain offsets which are rarely counted. For instance, the average salary of the higher executives of the Government is about $12,000 a year. How many corporations in America doing a business of $100,000,000 a year pay their presidents $12,000 a year? How many business men with a responsibility for spending $100,000,000 a year would take a salary of $12,000 a year? Why, we know they run from $50,000 to $100,000 a year and there are many subexecutives, vice presidents, and so on, who get in excess of $12,000 a year in the larger corporations.

The Government of the United States gets the benefit of the services of its executives at low cost. These men who come here for reasons of patriotism and fidelity to the public interest are many of them able to get many times $12,000 a year in private business. The Government gets the benefit of their ability and talents. It mounts up to a saving of many millions of dollars a year, possibly offsetting to no small extent the inevitable waste or inefficiency that here and there creep in governmental operation.

But when we come to cutting the Budget so as to avoid new taxes let us not be misled by taking up isolated items of waste and regarding it as characteristic of the whole governmental establishment. I have enumerated the items that involve commitments. They can not be repudiated. A private business may repudiate contracts, break contracts, repudiate commitments. The Government of the United States can not do that. It can not break faith. And that is one of the principal reasons why you can not tear down the Budget structure with a wave of the hand. It can be cut, it is being cut, but we can not cut it deeply enough to avoid increased taxes.

NATIONAL FOREST RESERVATION COMMISSION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, under authority of the act approved March 1, 1911 (Public, No. 435), appoints the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] as a member of the National Forest Reservation Commission, to fill the vacancy thereon caused by the death of Hon. William J. Harris, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

JEFF DAVIS CAPERTON AND LUCY VIRGINIA CAPERTON

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 194) for the relief of Jeff Davis Caperton and Lucy Virginia Caperton, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Jeff Davis Caperton and Lucy Virginia Caperton arising out of the death of J. P. Caperton upon August 24, 1918, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Jeff Davis Caperton and Lucy Virginia Caperton had made application for the benefits of said act within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act.

Mr. McKELLAR. On behalf of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], I move that the amendment of the House be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE CONTINGENT EXPENSES

Mr. JONES. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 375) to provide additional appropriations for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution was read and considered, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932:

For expenses of special and select committees authorized by the House, $15,000.

For furniture and materials for repairs of the same, including labor, tools, and machinery for furniture-repair shops, $6,500.

For stenographic reports of hearings of committees other than special and select committees, $5,000.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALABAMA SENATORIAL CONTEST

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 199) reported by Mr. GEORGE and Mr. BRATTON from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

Resolved, That JOHN H. BANKHEAD is hereby declared to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Alabama for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1931, and is entitled to a seat as such.

Mr. HASTINGS obtained the floor.

RECESS

Mr. McNARY. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) took a recess until to-morrow, Thursday, April 28, 1932, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate April 27 (legislative day of April 25), 1932

DISTRICT JUDGE

E. Coke Hill to be district judge, district of Alaska, division No. 4.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS

Robert W. Colflesh to be United States attorney, southern district of Iowa.

Lewis L. Drill to be United States attorney, district of Minnesota.

C. W. Johnson to be United States attorney, northern district of Texas.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL

R. John Allen to be United States marshal, district of Wyoming.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Arvo Theodore Thompson to be first lieutenant, Veterinary Corps.

John Henry Read, jr., to be colonel, Ordnance Department.

Robert John Binford to be colonel, Infantry.

John Augustus Brockman to be colonel, Infantry.

James Hutchings Cunningham to be lieutenant colonel, Coast Artillery Corps.

Simon Bolivar Buckner, jr., to be lieutenant colonel, Infantry.

John Kimball Brown to be lieutenant colonel, Cavalry.

William Henry Halstead to be major, Infantry.

Randolph Gordon to be major, Infantry.

Charles McDonald Parkin to be major, Infantry.

Oakley George Kelly to be captain, Air Corps.

Bernard Tobias Castor to be captain, Air Corps.

James Alexander Mollison to be captain, Air Corps.

Harold Webster Beaton to be captain, Air Corps.

Lawrence Brownlee Savage to be captain, Quartermaster Corps.

Richard Clark Jacobs, jr., to be captain, Infantry.

Richard Earl Moore to be captain, Infantry.

Charles Stricklen Shadle to be captain, Chemical Warfare Service.

Roy Jacob Herte to be first lieutenant, Infantry.

Arthur Edwin Watson, jr., to be first lieutenant, Coast Artillery Corps.

James Oka Wade to be first lieutenant, Infantry.

Brookner West Brady to be first lieutenant, Infantry.

Harry McNeill Grizzard to be first lieutenant, Infantry.

Charles Herman Deerwester to be first lieutenant, Air Corps.

Charles Winslow O'Connor to be first lieutenant, Air Corps.

Bernard Alexander Bridget to be first lieutenant, Air Corps.

Josiah Ross to be first lieutenant, Infantry.

Charles Arthur Bassett to be first lieutenant, Air Corps.

Grant Albert Williams to be first lieutenant, Cavalry.

Herbert Kelly Moore to be major, Veterinary Corps.

Harry Dubois Southard to be chaplain with the rank of major.

APPOINTMENT BY TRANSFER IN THE REGULAR ARMY

Lieut. Col. Edwin Gunner to Infantry.

POSTMASTERS

ARKANSAS

William H. Tucker, Casa.
Douglas O. Dover, Cove.
Legrand K. Charles, Eureka Springs.
Bertha E. Millian, Lexa.
Maud Jackson, Sherrill.
William M. Dugal, Strong.
Dalton Matthews, Vilonia.
Robert L. Maddox, Winslow.

CALIFORNIA

Belle Hicks, Armona.
Thurlow T. Workman, Bloomington.
Peter D. McIntyre, Blythe.
John H. B. Speer, Delano.
Elvira J. Brown, Denair.
John H. Dodson, El Cajon.

Charles H. Coffey, jr., Gonzales.
Thomas P. Cosgrave, Madera.
William C. Werry, Palo Alto.
Edward A. Baker, Point Loma.
George R. Comings, Ramona.
Ernest R. Rhymes, Sanitarium.
Chauncey P. Wright, San Pedro.
Earle R. Hawley, Stockton.
Clarence G. Carratt, Templeton.
Clyde W. Holbrook, Venice.

COLORADO

John E. Harron, Alamosa.
Thomas F. Beck, Aspen.
Frank J. Stewart, Cedaredge.
George Haver, Eckley.
Idamay Spurlock, Fairplay.
Cora M. Johnson, Fountain.
Crissa B. Pond, Grand Junction.
Harry D. Steele, Holly.
John C. Kessenger, Limon.
Fred A. McDaniel, Oak Creek.
Martha H. Foster, Olathe.
Edna A. McCormick, Sedgwick.
Henry M. Newkirk, Swink.
James L. Allison, Woodmen.

CONNECTICUT

Earle C. Martin, Bridgeport.
Ethyl O. Engisch, Cornwall Bridge.
James F. Holden, Forestville.
Clarence L. Clark, Old Lyme.
James T. Rooney, Sound View.
Clarence B. Emery, Terryville.
Thomas J. Crockett, Unionville.

DELAWARE

Charles L. Talpey, Claymont.
William H. Evans, Newark.

GEORGIA

Will E. Davis, Boston.
J. Arthur Westbrook, Powder Springs.
Hubert H. Berry (Mrs.), Sparta.
Emmett D. Dial, Woodstock.

HAWAII

Alice J. Brown, Paia.
Joseph F. Xavier, Puunene.
William K. Kelii, Wahiawa.

ILLINOIS

Francis W. Craig, Apple River.
Sherman Dorand, Ashland.
Edwin C. O'Brien, Barry.
Elliott O. Andrews, Belvidere.
Clarence E. Snively, Canton.
S. Elmer Simpson, Carrollton.
Louis C. Schultz, Chebanse.
Verda M. Mulhall, Davis.
John E. Heffron, East Dubuque.
Robert R. Davis, Equality.
Jacob L. Pfundstein, Erie.
George F. Batty, Greenfield.
Samuel T. Little, Hillsboro.
Jessie A. Livingston, Livingston.
Harry B. Potter, Marshall.
Guy A. Meyers, Milledgeville.
Charles E. Hartman, Mount Carroll.
William Georger, New Baden.
Minor S. Miller, Pearl City.
John N. Taffee, Pinckneyville.
Jesse L. Jones, Rantoul.
Harry Hutchins, Rockton.
Willis D. Coffland, Seaton.
Edward P. Devine, Somonauk.
Harold E. Ward, Sterling.
John Wacker, Techny.
Kate M. Weis, Teutopolis.
LeRoy Gammon, Thebes.
Christian Andres, Tinley Park.
Clarence C. Cary, Utica.
Arthur Justus, Warren.
Mark Simpson, Waterman.
Lela Seneff, Westfield.
Harry L. Dean, Witt.

INDIANA

T. M. Long, Butler.
Elston H. Elliott, Lynn.
Ira J. Wilson, Muncie.
Claude L. Worster, North Liberty.
Oscar Standeford, Orleans.
Glenn H. Newby, Russiaville.

IOWA

Albert A. Emigh, Atlantic.
Royal E. Hutton, Bancroft.
John J. Ethell, Bloomfield.
Joseph M. Jacobs, Delta.
Mary E. Coy, Farragut.
William C. Upham, Fredericksburg.
Albert L. Mensing, Lowden.
Howard H. Tedford, Mount Ayr.
Frank C. McClaskey, Toledo.
Ralph Hunte, Springville.
Marion H. Barnes, Wapello.

KANSAS

William T. Perry, Belleville.
Gerald G. Smith, Burr Oak.
Arnold C. Heidebrecht, Burrton.
Wilfrid Cavaness, Chanute.
Edward L. Kier, Courtland.
Raymond C. Ogden, Eudora.
John E. Mock, Geneseo.
Susie W. Rhine, Gove.
Robert H. Rippetoe, Havana.
Charles F. Schafer, Jewell.
Ross W. Gault, Lebo.
Hiram W. Joy, Quinter.
Eldon C. Newby, Randolph.
Bessie Custer, Satanta.
Michael Fischer, Tipton.
Floy W. Sellers, Towanda.
Charles J. Roy, Wilsey.

KENTUCKY

Edna W. Morin, Alexandria.
James I. Harlan, Barlow.
Howard C. Pentecost, Corydon.
John M. Burkholder, Crofton.
William E. Keller, Eminence.
Mollie L. Nolan, Harlan.
Claude T. Winslow, Mayfield.

LOUISIANA

Robert A. Giddens, Coushatta.
Jesse L. Beasely, Harrisonburg.
Claude H. Wallis, Houma.
Mattie B. Peyton, Keatchie.
Walter C. Miller, Logansport.
Aimie B. Garrett, New Roads.
Chester C. Heinemann, Rayville.
Esther E. Harlan, Swartz.
Nannie H. Rogillio, Water Proof.
Ector R. Gammage, Westlake.

MAINE

Charles W. McClintock, Fairfield.

MARYLAND

Elmore H. Owens, Perryville.
Robert L. Hall, Pocomoke City.

MASSACHUSETTS

James J. Murtaugh, Hopkinton.
John A. Bell, Leicester.
Fred W. Trasher, Marblehead.
Charles H. Sawyer, Northampton.
Albert S. Hopkins, Norton.

Annie K. Adams, Onset.
Everett W. Carpenter, Palmer.
Walter L. Williams, Peabody.
Aloysius B. Kennedy, Rochdale.
Philip Morris, Siasconset.
Charles M. Edwards, Sterling.
Stephen C. Luce, Vineyard Haven.

MICHIGAN

Hazel M. Foster, Baldwin.
John H. Ter Avest, Coopersville.
J. Gail Show, Elsie.
James B. Haskins, Howard City.
Fred C. Putnam, Kalamazoo.
Frank J. Gehringer, Lenox.
Estella R. Newcomb, Le Roy.
Howard L. Barber, Merrill.
Howard L. Vaughan, Ovid.
Nettie C. Grayson, Pellston.
Charles H. Heath, Richmond.
Florence M. Watson, Three Oaks.

MINNESOTA

Charles L. Coy, Alexandria.
William Peterson, Atwater.
Carl H. Schuster, Biwabik.
Mae Kirwin, Chokio.
Edward B. Anderson, Elbow Lake.
George Leng, Grand Marais.
Anthony L. La Freniere, Grand Rapids.
Oscar W. Erickson, Kensington.
Herbert M. Hauck, Mankato.
Ross Andrews, Meadowlands.
Sidney D. Wilcox, Park Rapids.
Erick G. Berglund, Pennock.
Elizabeth K. Ries, Shakopee.
Lillian A. Peterson, Villard.
Joseph Trojohn, Woodlake.

MISSISSIPPI

Everett H. Badger, Columbus.

MISSOURI

George R. Steiner, Belle.
Robert D. Gardner, Center.
Glade Bradbury, Clarksdale.
Charles A. Mitchell, Clinton.
Louis N. Walker, Holmes Park.
Thomas W. Box, Lamar.
John B. Wilson, Maysville.
John L. Wilkinson, Piedmont.
Jordan W. Schaaf, St. Marys.
Harry H. Forman, Shelbyville.

MONTANA

Wedsel J. Hartman, Broadview.
George C. Core, Choteau.
Avory W. Dehnert, Denton.
George W. Patterson, Havre.
Lee Jellison, Hobson.
Robert T. Richardson, Missoula.
Arnold D. Ferris, Sidney.
Claude C. Alexander, Stanford.
Robert Parsons, Sweetgrass.
Thomas E. Devore, Whitehall.
Maurice D. Holmes, White Sulphur Springs.

NEBRASKA

Frank G. Smith, Ashton.
Louis H. Deaver, Cody.
J. Ned Allison, Gering.
Claude A. Sheffner, Hay Springs.
Given G. Reber, Naper.
Frank A. Bartling, Nebraska City.
Nettie E. Jollensten, Ogallala.
William M. Baskin, Stapleton.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Ralph E. Messer, Bennington.
Ruth G. Hicks, Canaan.
Mina S. Roberge, Cascade.
Alice M. Sloane, Conway.
James P. Farnam, Hanover.
Effie P. Gibson, Kingston.
Harry D. Eastman, North Conway.
Everett F. Tozier, Salmon Falls.
John H. Garvin, jr., Sanbornville.
Eleazer F. Baker, Suncook.
Willis R. Morrison, Tilton.

NEW JERSEY

William G. Z. Critchley, Allendale.
Andreas H. Fechtenburg, Harrington Park.

NORTH CAROLINA

Andrew J. DeHart, Bryson City.

NORTH DAKOTA

Anton A. Ficker, Amidon.
William H. Lenneville, Dickinson.
Paul M. Bell, Elgin.
Peder T. Rygg, Fairdale.
Olaf A. Bjella, Epping.
Benjamin L. Anderson, Grenora.
Charles L. Erickson, Lankin.
Ora J. Goshorn, Rhame.
John W. Campbell, Ryder.
Arthur T. Graf, Streeter.
Austin R. Johnson, Wildrose.
Mary E. Swartwout, Wimbledon.

OHIO

Roy S. Grunder, Creston.
Roy F. Judge, Milan.
Edward P. Harker, Rossford.
Egbert H. Mack, Sandusky.
Ernest G. Lergier, Weston.
Bertus H. Moore, Williamsport.

OREGON

Fitzhugh G. Lee, Junction City.
James W. Dunn, St. Benedict.
William C. Foster, Tillamook.

PORTO RICO

Carlos F. Torregrosa, Aguadilla.
José Mayol, Arecibo.

RHODE ISLAND

Thomas F. Lenihan, Westerly.

SOUTH DAKOTA

Lottie M. Johnson, De Smet.
Linville Miles, Langford.
C. Albert Zeitner, Mission.
William R. Amoo, Morristown.
Fred S. Williams, Pierre.
Charles Furois, St. Onge.
Edna L. Brown, Timber Lake.
Carl O. Steen, Veblen.
Goodwin L. Hansen, Wasta.
Edward A. Wearne, Webster.
Charles G. Kuentzel, White Rock.

TEXAS

Lillie J. Tolleson, Bardwell.
John W. Stegall, Holliday.
John A. Wilson, Knox City.
Bassett R. Miles, Luling.
George F. Bates, Lyons.
Mabel E. Bryant, Rockport.
Hal M. Knight, Sterling City.
Ben M. Vick, Valentine.
Oliver P. Maricle, Wichita Falls.

VERMONT

George E. King, Barton.
Reginald W. Buzzell, Newport.
Casper W. Landman, South Londonderry.
Cecile M. Beaton, South Ryegate.
Lester K. Oakes, Stowe.
Claude C. Duval, West Burke.

WASHINGTON

Julia Enger, Toledo.
William F. Cantrell, Toppenish.
Rodse M. Illy, Uniontown.
Robert J. Robertson, White Salmon.

WEST VIRGINIA

Lawrence Barrackman, Barrackville.
Henry A. Russell, Berkeley Springs.

WISCONSIN

Elizabeth Croake, Albany.
Orestes K. Hawley, Baldwin.
Castor H. Kuehl, Brillion.
Earl H. Herbert, Coleman.
Frank M. LeCount, Hartford.
Edward H. Moore, Lakemills.
Frederic D. Keithley, Land O'Lakes.
Norma E. McNutt, Oxford.

WYOMING

Elizabeth L. Murphy, Edgerton.
Glenwood C. Long, Lingle.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 27, 1932

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

To our Merciful Father in Heaven we offer our tributes of praise and gratitude. Incline our hearts toward Thee as we tarry in the multitude of Thy blessings, so free and full. May it always be our delight to spend our strength and zeal on the very best themes of human thought and life. We beseech Thee, our Father, that this warring, weeping old world may not go back to the trenches of hate. O bring a fresh redemption to it that shall honor Thee and bless humanity and return it to its rest. Lord God of Hosts, be with this Congress. To the troubled in spirit, to those cumbered with heavy cares, and unto all be Thou a blessing. Vouchsafe Thy guidance to direct us through these hours. We are gathered from diverse ways, from different experiences, yet united in common desire. Almighty God, administer unto us the wisdom and the faith that cometh from the infinite source of all truth. Amen.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, there was a very interesting and important session of the House on yesterday, and I am sure the entire membership want to hear the reading of the Journal. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 54]

Abernethy	Crisp	Hogg, Ind.	Murphy
Allgood	Crowe	Horner	Owen
Andresen	Darrow	Hull, Morton D.	Ransley
Andrews, N. Y.	Doutrich	Igoe	Shreve
Beck	Dowell	Jeffers	Smith, W. Va.
Brumm	Drane	Johnson, Ill.	Stalker
Burtness	Erk	Johnson, S. Dak.	Stokes
Campbell, Pa.	Estep	Kendall	Strong, Pa.
Canfield	Finley	Kurtz	Sullivan, Pa.
Cavicchia	Flannagan	Larrabee	Swick
Chapman	Free	Lehlbach	Thatcher
Chase	Freeman	Lewis	Tucker
Chavez	Gillen	Loofbourow	Watson
Chiperfield	Goldsborough	Ludlow	Wolfenden
Cochran, Pa.	Greenwood	McFadden	Wyant
Collier	Griswold	McGugin
Connolly	Hart	Magrady

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and sixty-five Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

THE JOURNAL

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On April 22, 1932:

H. R. 8397. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8779. An act granting certain lands to the board of commissioners of the Orleans levee district in the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, for levee and street purposes;

H. R. 9066. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Tenth Street in Bettendorf, Iowa;

H. R. 9143. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Elbowoods, N. Dak.;

H. R. 9301. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Black River at or near Pocahontas, Ark.;

H. R. 9974. An act to authorize appointment of public-school employees between meetings of the Board of Education;

H. R. 10088. An act to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act authorizing the South Carolina and the Georgia Highway Departments to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Savannah River at or near Burtons Ferry, near Sylvania, Ga.," approved May 26, 1928; and

H. R. 10489. An act to provide for the extension and widening of Michigan Avenue, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

On April 23, 1932:

H. R. 5272. An act for the relief of Frank Bayer; and

H. R. 8087. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to vacate withdrawals of public lands under the reclamation law, with reservations of rights, ways, and easements.

On April 25, 1932:

H. R. 5848. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to lend to the entertainment committee of the United Confederate Veterans 250 pyramidal tents, complete; fifteen 16 by 80 by 40 foot assembly tents; thirty 11 by 50 by 15 foot hospital-ward tents; 10,000 blankets, olive drab, No. 4; 5,000 pillowcases; 5,000 canvas cots; 5,000 cotton pillows; 5,000 bed sacks; 10,000 bed sheets; 20 field ranges, No. 1; 10 field bake ovens; 50 water bags (for ice water); to be used at the encampment of the United Confederate Veterans, to be held at Richmond, Va., in June, 1932;

H. R. 882. An act for the relief of G. W. Wall;

H. R. 1202. An act for the relief of Lehde & Schoenhut;

H. R. 2594. An act for the relief of the State National Bank of Wills Point, Tex.;

H. R. 3265. An act for the relief of W. J. Shirley;

H. R. 3373. An act for the relief of Fireman's Fund Insurance Co.;

H. R. 3909. An act for the relief of Helen Patricia Sullivan;

H. R. 4329. An act for the relief of Alton B. Platner; and

H. R. 7788. An act authorizing the granting by the Secretary of War of a right of way to the Georgia Highway Department.

On April 26, 1932:

H. R. 2086. An act for the relief of Francis Engler; and

H. R. 5259. An act for the relief of Steve Fekete.

On April 27, 1932:

H. R. 10362. An act to require the approval of the General Council of the Seminole Tribe or Nation in case of the disposal of any tribal land.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1196. An act authorizing the Tlingit and Haida Indians of Alaska to bring suit in the United States Court of Claims, and conferring jurisdiction upon said court to hear, examine, adjudicate, and enter judgment upon any and all claims which said Indians may have, or claim to have, against the United States, and for other purposes; and

S. 4123. An act to amend the District of Columbia traffic acts, as amended.

MESSRS. CLYDE PANGBORN AND HUGH HERNDON, JR.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House out of order for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. HORR. Mr. Speaker, some time ago there appeared here as a guest of the House of Representatives a man outstanding in aviation, one who had conquered the great Atlantic. He was our guest on that day, and the House very appropriately received him as their guest, the Lone Eagle of the Atlantic, Colonel Lindbergh.

To-day we have with us two young men who started at New York City, flew around the world, landed at Japan, and from there made the first and only nonstop flight across the Pacific Ocean. Those two young men represent the best there is of American manhood—clean-cut, vigorous, and courageous.

To-day they are our guests, and we are glad to have them with us. I take pleasure in presenting to you from the galleries Mr. Clyde Pangborn and Mr. Hugh Herndon, jr., the first and only men to make a nonstop flight across the Pacific, "the Double Eagles of the Pacific." [Applause.]

ULDRIC THOMPSON, JR.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 10851) for the relief of Uldric Thompson, jr., recently passed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, may be rereferred to that committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the question of Philippine independence.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Speaker, the Legislature of California three years ago approved a joint resolution memorializing and petitioning Congress to restrict the immigration of Filipinos into the United States.

Several bills were presented during the Seventieth, Seventy-first, and Seventy-second Congresses by Representatives from California with a view to bringing about the results desired by the California Legislature. Some of these bills have been the subject of extensive hearings by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, but none was enacted into law, because it seemed to be the judgment of Congress not to exclude or restrict Filipinos coming to the United States while the islands remain under the American flag.

The official representatives of the Filipino people have contended that their people were entitled to the rights and privileges guaranteed by the Constitution pending the grant of their national independence which American Presidents and the Congress have promised. The independence issue has of late become a pressing problem demanding early solution. Various Philippine independence bills were submitted during the early part of the present session of Congress. Both the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs and the House Committee on Insular Affairs have reported out bills looking to the grant of independence, after extensive hearings were held. The House of Representatives this month by a vote of 306 to 47 passed H. R. 7233, granting independence after a period of eight years following the establishment of the government of the Philippine Commonwealth provided for in the bill.

Congressman WELCH of California, who is a member of the House Committee on Insular Affairs, took active part in the discussion of the bill. He himself presented a Philippine independence bill similar to the one presented by Senators HAWES and CUTTING, and Congressman HARE in the House, with a provision that would adequately remedy the question of Philippine immigration.

The Welch bill contained a provision that would remedy the question of Filipino immigration by excluding Filipinos from entering continental United States. This provision was inserted in the Hare bill, which originally contained no immigration provision. While the bill provides for complete independence eight years after the people of the Philippine Islands establish a commonwealth government, which, pursuant to the provision of the bill, may add two years to that time. The immigration provision, however, goes into effect 60 days after the President signs the bill.

While the hearings were being held on the Philippine independence bill all the Members of the House of Representatives from the State of California submitted a statement to the effect that—

Any bill changing the status of the Philippine Islands should contain a provision excluding Philippine immigrants from entering the United States.

My colleagues and I have since had an opportunity to vote for the passage of a Philippine independence bill, and our approval was based not only upon the ground that it would settle satisfactorily the question of Philippine immigration but that it would be a fulfillment of a moral obligation of the United States to the people of the Philippines.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee offers a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 375

Resolved, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932:

For expenses of special and select committees authorized by the House, $15,000.

For furniture and materials for repairs of the same, including labor, tools, and machinery for furniture repair shops, $6,500.

For stenographic reports of hearings of committees other than special and select committees, $5,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain briefly the occasion, particularly, for the first item of $15,000 for special and select committee expenses?

Mr. BYRNS. That is made necessary by the increased amount needed for the Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation; also an investigation which was authorized in January, directing the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to investigate holding companies, and also by another investigation which was authorized in February, authorizing the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to investigate the depressed value of silver. These amounts are pressing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE TARIFF

Mr. POU, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 195), which was read and referred to the House Calendar and ordered printed:

House Resolution 195

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the bill H. R. 6662, with the amendment of the Senate thereto, be, and the same is hereby, taken from the Speaker's table to the end that the amendment of the Senate be, and the same is hereby, concurred in.

AMENDMENT OF THE LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up the resolution (H. Res. 203), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 203

Resolved, That after the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order in the consideration of H. R. 11267, the legislative appropriation bill, for the chairman of the Economy Committee or any member of the Economy Committee acting for him, by direction of that committee, to offer an amendment to said bill, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding. On said amendment there shall be two hours of general debate, one-half to be controlled by the chairman of the Economy Committee and one-half by the ranking minority member of that committee. At the termination of such debate the amendment shall be considered under the 5-minute rule as an original bill and shall be considered by titles. Each title as it is read shall be open to four amendments, said amendments not being subject to amendment, and no further amendments shall be entertained by the Chair. The provisions of clause 7, Rule XVI, or clause 2, Rule XXI, shall not apply to the substitute amendment offered to Title I of the Economy Committee amendment. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union the committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments, including the amendment offered by the Economy Committee as amended, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any of the amendments adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the Economy Committee amendment. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and Economy Committee amendment, including the amendments to the Economy Committee amendment to final passage without intervening motion except two motions to recommit, and such motions to recommit shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Indiana desire to make any suggestion with reference to time for debate on the rule?

Mr. PURNELL. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that I have had considerably more requests for time than I have time. I hoped it might be possible to extend the debate on the rule.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. PURNELL. I would suggest to the gentleman that he ask unanimous consent to extend the time for debate 30 minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that there have been some requests for additional time on this side.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the discussion of the rule be fixed at one and one-half hours, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Indiana and one-half by myself, and that the previous question shall be considered as ordered at the expiration of that time.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In the time to be consumed on the discussion of the rule, which the gentleman stated would be divided between the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Alabama, is it understood that one-half the time will be allotted to Members who are opposed to the rule?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can not speak for the gentleman from Indiana; but, as far as this side is concerned, I think I will be able to satisfy the Democratic Members.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Indiana, if the gentleman from Alabama will permit, if those opposed to the rule will have an opportunity to be heard?

Mr. PURNELL. I will say to the gentleman that it is my intention to yield at least one-half of the time on this side of the House to those who are opposed to the rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object to extending the time on such a gag rule so greatly restricting the time for consideration of such an important matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Wisconsin objects, so there is no use reserving the right to object or discussing the matter if objection is heard.

The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for one hour.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If it is not to be taken out of my time and if the gentleman will submit a very brief question, I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. May we have an understanding with the gentleman from Alabama that he will later permit a substitute rule to be offered, to be voted upon before the gentleman moves the previous question? Some of us are not satisfied with the rule, although we are heartily in favor of most of the committee's bill for economy. We want a little more leeway to properly amend it in a few particulars under the general rules of the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I will answer the gentleman. I do not think that is a fair request for the gentleman from Texas to make of the Rules Committee. There is opposition to this rule from the Rules Committee itself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized for one hour, and his time is going on.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that if in the judgment of the House the rule which is now offered should not prevail, then they will vote down the motion for the previous question and a substitute rule may be offered throwing the whole question open to general debate and amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. That is my idea of what ought to be done. It is absolutely necessary that we pass a rule in order to make this economy program in order on this appropriation bill. No Member here who favors economy and retrenchment can afford to vote against the rule. But under its present provisions no Member not on the committee can be assured of his right to offer a bona fide amendment, as members of the committee are entitled to recognition, and they can absorb the privilege of offering the four amendments to each title. I heartily approve of practically all of the provisions of the Economy Committee's bill. I believe that the consolidation of the War and Navy Departments alone will save $100,000,000 annually. But I want to enlarge the exemption in the bill. Why not permit a substitute to be offered for the rule by agreement?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can not make that concession.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama does not yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield because my time is running. I tried to get the time extended.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a very brief statement in my opening remarks with reference to the purpose of this rule and what freedom of action under its provisions may be allowed to the members of the committee if the rule is adopted. I hardly think it is necessary for me to undertake to explain the mechanics of this rule. I assume that each Member of the House who is interested in the matter has a copy of the resolution before him.

The statement has been made in the press, and it will be made in the argument on this rule, that it is a gag rule. Admittedly it does attempt to restrict some liberty of action under the general rules of the House as we ordinarily consider bills under the 5-minute rule, but it does provide an opportunity under the 10 titles of this bill for members of the committee to offer 40 different amendments to the amendment that will be offered by the Economy Committee, and I want to state to you my conception of what the chairman of the committee, under this rule, will do, and what would be the order of priority in the offering of the four amendments to each title that will be allowed under this rule.

If you will take section 102 of the bill as an illustration—because I imagine that is the section about which most of this controversy will rage—under the rule as now offered, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER], for instance, if he desires to do so, will, under this rule, have the privilege of presenting the so-called President's program with reference to economy in Government salaries, and submit it as a whole proposition, and it is made germane under this rule to throw it open to the full consideration of the House. In addition to that, an amendment to that proposition or to the committee amendment will be in order.

I want you to particularly hear this statement, gentlemen: We have entered into a "gentlemen's agreement" in the Rules Committee—and I want to state to you that it will be carried into effect by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from North Carolina—that some gentleman, I do not know who it will be, and it does not make any difference, will be recognized for the purpose of offering an amendment raising the limit of exemption from $1,000 to $2,000. So you will have an opportunity to vote on that proposition. In addition to that, an amendment will be in order to strike out each one of the titles of the bill in toto, or an amendment to strike out any section of either of the titles in toto. In addition to that, gentlemen, if this rule prevails and the bill comes out of the Committee of the Whole and goes back into the House, this rule provides an opportunity for a separate vote on each amendment that may have been adopted. So when you look at the importance of this great question, gentlemen, and when you analyze the liberty of action that is given under the terms of this rule, I submit to the candid consideration of the House that it is not entitled to be called what we ordinarily call a gag rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very briefly.

Mr. BLANTON. I am supporting the committee's bill for economy, but I want to amend it in a few particulars. If the members of the committee see fit to claim their right to offer the four amendments that are allowed for each title, then no other Member of this House, other than the members of the committee, could offer any amendment whatever. That is the biggest portion of the gag part of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas that he, in my opinion, need have no apprehension upon that score.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I will yield, but I would like to finish my statement to the gentleman from Texas. I say—and if I am not authorized to say it I want to be corrected—that in order that Members of this House may have as full and free an opportunity in the circumstances as possible to register their opposition to this Economy Committee program or any feature of it, I feel it would be the duty of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole to recognize for the offering of amendments gentlemen who desire to oppose some specific and controversial question. I want to say to the gentleman from Texas—and I want to say it to all the Members of this House—that as far as I understand the spirit and purpose of this rule—and I am sure that is the spirit which actuated the members of the Committee on Rules itself—that we desired to bring in a rule that would give to the Members of this House a fair and reasonable opportunity to register their views on all phases of this bill without entering into a discussion here that might take two or three weeks, as happened in connection with the tax-bill proposition.

That is what the committee had in mind. We may have subjected ourselves to the criticism of the membership, but we do feel that in view of the grave importance of this question, in view of the condition of our Federal Treasury, and in view of what has come to all of us, I think, a public demand upon the part of the people of this country, its business organizations and its individuals, to try, if we can, to reduce the burdens of government, Federal, State, county, and municipal, that surely this House will not deny to its membership a rule that will give you, as the representatives of those taxpayers, an opportunity to consider in a thoroughly general and liberal way the basic proposition involved. I will now yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. I wanted to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he offer an amendment to the rule giving the Economy Committee the right to offer perfecting amendments authorized by the committee, outside of the four amendments that are offered from the floor of the House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not had any indication from the chairman of that committee that he has any amendment to offer.

Mr. SNELL. Provided they had any special perfecting amendments to offer. It would seem to me that should be provided in the rule, and then that would not take from the House the opportunity of offering these four amendments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know whether there will be objection to that on the part of those who are against the rule and against considering this question at all or not. I think it ought to be incorporated in the rule.

Mr. McDUFFIE. There will be no objection to that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There will be no objection; but has the gentleman in mind any committee amendments that he proposes to offer of a substantive nature?

Mr. McDUFFIE. There are one or two that the committee has agreed to by way of amendments it is going to offer to-day; and as to any other perfecting or clarifying amendments, the committee, of course, feels there will be no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield for one or two more questions?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have only a short time. The time was not extended, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. SNELL. I realize that. I wanted to have the time extended so that the House would clearly understand the situation.

As I understand from talking to the gentleman from Alabama and also the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the chairman will recognize two on the minority side and two on the majority side on each title to offer amendments as we go along with the bill, and that he also expects as the fourth amendment to recognize some one who desires to strike out the major portion of the title or the entire title. Is this the gentleman's understanding?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman had that understanding with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] I am sure he will carry it out. I have not discussed the details of recognition at all with the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. SNELL. That is the way I understand it and I want to be sure my understanding is correct.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would like to get this question cleared up and then I shall reserve the balance of my time. I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] that a little later in the debate I think we can have an understanding.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have promised all the time I have, I will say to my friend from Missouri.

I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] in opposition to the rule.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I believe this is one of the most important amendments to the bill. You have heard it discussed before. It raises the exemption to $2,000. It takes care of practically two-thirds of the employees of the Government. As I said this afternoon, of the 1,023,000 employees of the Government, 681,000 would not be affected. The cut would affect only 341,000 employees, or those with salaries above $2,000, and then 11 per cent of that excess.

As I tried to say when my time expired this afternoon, while my amendment saves only about $18,500,000 as compared with the $67,000,000 which it is claimed would be saved under the Economy Committee plan, I think the amount involved is no answer because, as I said this afternoon, the Economy Committee started at the wrong end. It started to look for $67,000,000 to save and then to spread it over practically all Government employees, instead of taking what would be a fair, reasonable, and equitable cut in the salaries of the employees and looking for the other savings elsewhere.

I heard the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] talk about the crisis we are in or facing or what not. I heard his plea, as to the effect on business of what we do here on salary reduction. I tried to interrupt him to ask him whether or not he thought the amendments he caused to be adopted to the tax bill, the increasing of income taxes and the increasing of estate taxes, had helped business in any way.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I wish to correct the gentleman. My amendment went to the estate tax and not to the income tax

Mr. O'CONNOR. Well, then, the estate tax. Even that had the reverse effect on business and did not help business in any way.

Then the gentleman says that if you take $50,000,000 out of this bill, as my amendment does, you should find $50,000,000 somewhere else. That is no answer in equity. The answer is this: Is this the last economy proposal this committee is going to offer in this session of Congress? Is this its whole job—an attempt to save merely $200,000,000 out of a Budget of $4,000,000,000? When the country is talking about reducing Government expenses by 50 per cent, is this all you can do by way of effecting that saving? Fifty million dollars does not amount to a great deal under the circumstances, because it must be that the committee is coming in with other consolidations and with other reorganizations to save additional money. The fallacy is that the committee started out the very first thing to take one-third of the $200,000,000 it proposed to save from the employees of the Government. I submit that policy was wrong; that salaries should have been the last thing to be touched. Reduce them if necessary; lower salaries and eliminate positions if necessary; but the committee should have first sought some other place to effect savings instead of taking one-third of the entire savings from the employees of the Government.

I can not believe that this bill represents all the economy you propose to effect before we adjourn this session or before another fiscal year.

I therefore submit that my amendment will at least give some measure of assurance to the little fellow who is getting $2,000 a year or less. If you take from the Government employee receiving $2,000 a year $110, or about $10 a month, that may be just the differential, just the margin, between living and merely existing. If you take $1,000 off a $10,000 man, that is not comparable to taking $10 a month off a $2,000 employee. The latter may deprive a man from living in the place where he now lives; it may make him surrender his life insurance; it may make him give up that little margin of pleasure; it may cause him to take his children out of school.

This furlough plan supported by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] is the most unfair of all plans. To salaries of $4,300 it means much more of a reduction to every employee of this Government than this 11 per cent plan. For instance, the $1,800 man under the furlough plan will lose $150; under the 11 per cent Economy Committee plan he will lose only $88. Under my plan he loses nothing. The furlough plan is just adding insult to injury as compared with the Economy Committee plan. I am accepting the Economy Committee plan in preference to the furlough plan but making the exemption $2,000 instead of $1,000. My plan will permit a man to live and not put him in the position of merely existing. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PURNELL], to dispose of as he sees fit.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself five minutes. Mr. Speaker, I intend to support this rule, and I sincerely hope it will be adopted by the House. [Applause.] Neither the rule nor the bill which it makes in order is entirely satisfactory to me, but this House can not afford to go before the country and take the position that it is opposed to the consideration of any measure which offers any hope of economy. [Applause.]

The country is not interested in the intricacies of rules or methods of procedure. It is not interested in the details of this rule nor the bill which it makes in order, but it is vitally interested in having us as Representatives put into practice as quickly as possible a rigid program of economy. Agriculture, industry, and labor have all taken their cuts. It is high time that the Federal Government take its cut. This rule opens the way for that procedure. Now is the time for us to give evidence of our own good faith to the country by first of all reducing our own salaries. [Applause.] I shall welcome an opportunity to vote to reduce my own.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURNELL. I have not the time; my time is very limited, as the gentleman knows.

I do not want to find fault, but I think our friends on the other side of the aisle who are clothed with responsibility have the cart before the horse. I think we should have first brought in a program of economy. We should have whittled appropriations to the bone and cut to the last penny before going to the country asking for additional taxes. We should have only called on the people to contribute in increased taxes that which is necessary to balance the Budget after all economy efforts had been exhausted.

But, be that as it may, here is an opportunity to do a real service and give evidence to the country of our own willingness to bring about a rigid economy program. I sincerely hope the House will speedily adopt this rule and immediately take up the consideration of the bill. [Applause.]

I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I have been bringing rules into this House for several years, but this is an entirely different and new rule.

From my point of view this rule is not a gag rule; it is a fair rule, and if the gentleman from North Carolina, who will be in the chair during the consideration of the bill, will state to the House his understanding of the proposition I made to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], so that there will be no question about recognition for making the individual motions, I do not think that anybody can reasonably object to the rule.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have had a conversation with the gentleman from North Carolina, and he is here and can speak for himself.

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina, who will be in the chair, to answer for himself.

Mr. WARREN. I stated to the gentleman from Alabama this morning, and will state to the House, that if the rule is adopted, it will be my purpose and my desire to recognize two gentlemen on each side of the House to offer vital amendments.

I go further and say that I will not consider any pro forma or dummy amendment, that all of them must be vital amendments affecting the bill itself.

Mr. SNELL. And one thing further. If at the fourth amendment some gentleman is on his feet and wants to strike out an important part of the title under consideration or the entire title, that gentleman should be recognized to offer that amendment.

Mr. WARREN. I would regard that as a most vital amendment and subject to recognition.

Mr. SNELL. With that assurance upon the part of the gentleman who will be in the chair during the consideration of this legislation, certainly the bill will be fairly considered in the House, and it will give every man a fair chance.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Not at present. As I understand the situation, the country as a whole does not care whether this is brought in under a rule or in any other way. What the country wants is to have this House go on record for an economy program, it does not make any difference how or when or where.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Not now. If by any chance it should go out to the country to-day that the House of Representatives, which has a record for considering things with a fair degree of efficiency and consideration, refuses to consider an economy program, it will be one of the worse catastrophes that has ever happened to this country. If you do not want the rule as it is now, vote down the previous question and write your own rule, but do not defeat the rule.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. I have already told the gentleman that I could not yield.

Mr. YATES. I want to know whether there will be separate votes.

Mr. SNELL. There are to be 40 separate votes.

Mr. YATES. Will there be a separate vote upon the 11 per cent?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. YATES. I want to vote against it.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman will have plenty of opportunity to do it. He will have a right to vote for the President's program, for the 11 per cent program, or for the program of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN]. There will be plenty of opportunity to vote on each one of these propositions, but, gentlemen, we must consider an economy program here to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BOYLAN].

Mr. BOYLAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a gag rule. There is no question about that, because the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], in explaining the rule, stated, "We will permit a certain gentleman to offer an amendment increasing the exemption to $2,000." There is the evidence, you all heard it—not that the House would permit the offering of amendments, but that "we, your rulers, will permit a gentleman to offer an amendment increasing the exemption to $2,000." If that is not a clear exhibition of a gag, I would like to know what it is. The father of the House, that lovable gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], chairman of the Committee on Rules, was quoted in a paper the other day as having said, "It is the damnedest rule we ever got." That is the sentiment of a gentleman old in years and honors, and loved and esteemed by all, and I take his word against the world.

We had a bill under consideration not long ago raising a revenue of approximately $1,000,000,000, and no rule was sought on that. It was thrown open here, but now comes along a cut that is equivalent to about $200,000,000, or one-fifth of that amount, and we are bound hand and foot, and gagged by a rule. What does it say? Speaking of the time allowed, it says:

> One-half to be controlled by the chairman of the Economy Committee and one-half by the ranking minority member of that committee.

It does not say whether the ranking member of the minority is opposed to the bill or in favor of the bill. Both sides might be in favor of it, and where are we going to get off at that rate of going?

Then here is another thing new in legislation. We are presented with the spectacle of the four horsemen. Each one of these horsemen has a right to offer an amendment, we are told. Oh, it is said that we will be taken care of. How do we know we will be taken care of? Perhaps the four horsemen may each offer 10 amendments, and if they offer 10 amendments, the four horsemen of the committee will have offered the 40 amendments that are allowed to the bill. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, the language quoted by my good friend from New York [Mr. BOYLAN] and attributed to me was not directed against the merits of the rule or the rule itself but at the difficulty in drafting such a rule. It has been an exceedingly difficult rule to get in shape, and I may have used language in effect as quoted by my friend, but it was not used in the way attributed to me.

Mr. Speaker, this is a most important moment in the history of this House. I have seen the cost of government mounting from year to year without any successful effort put forth to curb expenses. Since 1925 the cost of government has increased more than a billion dollars, and at this moment we have pending in another body a bill which will increase the burden of taxation to the American people something more than $2,000,000,000. The hour has struck when we must do something to reduce the expenses of government. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] very properly said that one of the worst things that could happen this morning is for the House to defeat this rule. Of course the rule is not exactly what many gentlemen would desire, it is not exactly what I would desire, but any gentleman who wishes to can pick flaws in almost any program of economy. The propaganda that has been put in motion against this bill has been something tremendous. Our desks every morning have communications protesting against this provision in the bill or that provision in the bill. We created an Economy Committee, composed of Republicans and Democrats, a nonpartisan committee, and these gentlemen have submitted to the House a program of economy which will save more than $200,000,000. For God's sake, let us not slap that committee in the face this morning; let it not go forth to the American people that at the very first opportunity the House of Representatives has had we have voted down a proposal to economize in the sum of $200,000,000, and that is the message that will go forth if you defeat this rule.

All the money which the American people will get to run their Government will come from their own taxation. We read in the press reports from abroad that any debt to America is not even considered in the budgets of European nations. When I remember that during the war we were going all over America begging people to buy Liberty bonds down to $50, that we might pour the proceeds into the coffers of the Euopean nations, I say no nation except a nation of hogs would repudiate such obligation. [Applause.] If they do repudiate it I, for one, shall be always opposed hereafter to sending any American to sit in at any of their hyprocritical, scheming conferences called for any purpose. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I do not claim to be any more virtuous than any other Member of this body. I do not claim to be any more earnestly in favor of economy than other gentlemen here are; but I repeat, we can not afford to vote down this proposition this morning. We ought to stay here until winter comes, if necessary, to carry out our pledge to the American people and to save now $200,000,000. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, this is not the last day of the session of Congress. The fiscal year does not commence until July 1. I submit that it is not fair for any Member to take the floor and send word to the country that if this rule is not adopted there will be no economy. That is not a correct statement. We are justified in voting down this rule on the contents of this hodgepodge, miscellaneous bill brought in by the Committee on Economy. [Applause.]

I, for one, do not believe in legislation by selectivity. The limitation of amendments—and the selection of such amendments—is just that. I have never seen such a spectacle in 14 years, where the members of the Rules Committee, becoming rattled and demoralized, bring exhibits onto the floor of the House, put the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the parliamentary spot as to what he would do contrary to his rights and privileges and duties in presiding over the Committee of the Whole. It is only fair to add that the whole House has confidence in the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. WARREN, who is an excellent Chairman. Our complaint is not against him. It is against this rule.

Mr. Speaker, I call attention to a statement made by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], a member of the Rules Committee, who frankly informed the House:

> If the rule does pass, I shall seek to obtain recognition to increase the exemption from $1,000 to $2,000. I have fought in the Rules Committee for an exemption of at least $2,500. It was impossible to get recognition at that figure. Lower figures were offered and a compromise was worked out that possibly a figure of $2,000 would be fixed, and on the theory that this is better than nothing or twice as good or many times as good as the $1,000 exemption, I hope to be recognized, if this rule does by any chance pass, to offer that exemption.

That is enough to prove that it is a gag rule of the worst kind. [Applause.] The gentleman frankly stated he had to submit and accept a lower figure in order to obtain recognition. I wonder how many of the members of the Committee on Rules have made a study of this bill. Let the country know that all we ask to-day is not to slap this rider, covering every department of the Government, flying right in the face of the Constitution, on an appropriation bill, but bring it before the House, under the rules of the House, for intelligent discussion. [Applause.]

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] stated that word had been received from Europe, from foreign countries, that we were to expect no payment of the debts. That, indeed, is a startling piece of information; but, Mr. Speaker, if that is true, we must deal with that subject on its merits and not make the underpaid employees of the Government pay the debts of Europe. [Applause.]

I submit to every Member of the House the repeated statements made by the President of the United States that this was no time to reduce the wage scale; that this was no time to lower the purchasing power of the American people; and yet, disregarding all that admonition, disregarding every sound principle of economics, here, in a play to the boxes—not a play to the galleries but in a play to the boxes—there is brought forth a bill of this kind.

Why the abolition of the Army and Navy Transport Service? I dare the committee to tell all of the truth as to who inspired that. If that is passed, I will promise you a scandal that will stink to heaven. I know what is back of it, and so do some of the other members of the Economy Committee. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. SWING].

Mr. SWING. Mr. Speaker, in the 11 years I have had the privilege of serving here I have never seen a rule brought in on any bill, important or unimportant, that contained the vicious provisions which this bill contains.

Some one has said apologetically in behalf of the rule that it was neither a rule for the full consideration of the proposal nor was it a gag rule. That is one of the things I object to. I would rather be frankly and openly gagged so I could go home to my people and say that my hands were tied and my mouth was closed and I was never afforded an opportunity to present the views which they wanted presented, or the amendments which they desired adopted. But this rule goes to the country with the declaration that four amendments may be offered to each title. The folks back home will think that title means subject and that four amendments may be offered to each subject matter, and they will wonder why you sat in your seat silent, apparently unwilling to present their views and unable to even get a vote on the amendments which they desired to have considered and voted upon.

Consider this bill by title. Title I has 12 sections. Each one deals with a separate and distinct subject matter.

Title II has 10 sections, each one dealing with a separate and distinct subject. Title III has 24 sections, and each and every one of them dealing with a vital and independent subject matter, but to each title four amendments may be offered, and no more! In all probability you will not even get a chance to move to strike out one of these sections, because the four privileged amendments will already have been offered by those who have the privileged right to be recognized, two on the Democratic side and two on the Republican side.

This bill, which contains revolutionary provisions, which commits the United States Government to leading the country in wage slashing; this bill, which commits the United States Government to the dishonor of taking from honorably discharged veterans those benefits which Congress and the American people have said rightly belong to them, was written behind closed doors. This bill is filled with provisions of which you do not know the meaning or effect. No one opposed to any of these provisions had an opportunity to appear before the committee and present his views to the committee, and no one, apparently, is going to be permitted to appear before this House and explain why any of these provisions should not be adopted or to move to strike them out. To the four amendments that may be offered, no one can offer an amendment to perfect such an amendment. Think of it, think of it! Probably an amendment will be offered which needs to be perfected. Neither you nor I nor anyone can offer an amendment to perfect such an amendment. It must be swallowed raw and whole. You are not going to be given the right to vote your own judgment. You must vote for one of the selected amendments offered to a provision of the bill. You will have to content yourself with the sorry satisfaction of voting for the lesser of two evils.

I hope this rule will be voted down and the Committee on Rules instructed thereby to bring in a proper rule, to let this House consider what is in the bill, amend, and vote on it intelligently and in an orderly, legislative way. [Applause.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, there are many provisions in this bill that I would like to vote for.

If we adopt this rule we might be forced to vote for the entire bill in the end and be classed with those in the House voting against economy.

I have heard of orators yielding to the intoxication of rhetorical moments making rash statements. We now see the Economy Committee yielding to the intoxication of a crusading desire to effect economy and report much rash legislation. I can not possibly vote for this gag rule, although I wish to vote for many of the items therein. I would vote cheerfully to decrease my own salary. I would vote for the President's "stagger" plan of employment; but when a rule would allow possibly only five minutes on a side to consider extremely important amendments, like the consolidation of the Army and Navy, I can not support it. The whole two hours of general debate might be taken up with matters but little explanatory of its most important items by those who will be allowed to speak during that time. Therefore, I repeat, I am going to vote against this rule, for I think it is better to defeat this method of legislation, even though it might be interpreted as a vote against any economy measure. It would seem that the Economy Committee might well have reported several separate bills to be considered in the usual orderly way of our procedure.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD]. [Applause.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I accept the challenge thrown down by the gentleman from New York and I repeat what has been said by the gentleman from the State of North Carolina, that if this rule is voted down there will be no economy bill passed by this House. [Applause.]

Mr. GILCHRIST. How does the gentleman know?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I know by reason of the experience we have had before this committee, which has been working for more than six weeks. There is not an item and there is not a title in this bill but what has been opposed by somebody.

The whole country is looking to this Congress for a reduction in the expenditure of public money, yet the very people who are sending us these telegrams and these letters demanding that this be done are likewise asking that this thing or that thing be not touched. So do not be deluded. If this rule is voted down and if this measure is to be considered subject to the rules of the House, there will not be one of the titles, in my opinion, that will pass this House.

All of us must make sacrifices. During the war we made these sacrifices for the benefit of this country. I want to say to you that to-day this country is in worse condition economically by far than it was then. You can not content yourselves by saying you voted against this bill because you did not like this item or that item. If that were to be the excuse or the reason for the excuse there is no chance whatever to pass an economy bill worthy of the name.

I repeat that if we do not accept this rule to-day no economy bill will pass this House. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am in direct opposition to the philosophy of my friend from Indiana who has just spoken. [Applause.] I believe that if the news should go out to this country that this gag rule has been overwhelmingly defeated it would be a splendid inspiration to the people of this Nation. It would be a declaration that Congress is opposed to retreating into the swamp any farther and that we intend to so act as to assure an upward trend in employment and purchasing power in this country. [Applause.]

I have returned this morning after a campaign in my own district, once the workshop of the world, a workshop that was filled with competent, willing workers. The mills still there able to produce abundantly, but thousands of workers are unemployed because there is no purchasing power left among the people. Therefore the mills can not be set to the task of production.

Now, you come here and ask that the United States Government accept the counsel of defeat, embrace the cult of despair, and say, "We are in the swamp now; we must go down farther still." My friends, there is no bottom to these quicksands. Make this 11 per cent cut now, and you can not stop there. You will have to cut again in the future.

Instead, I want to urge the spirit of the message General Foch sent in the darkest days of the World War. With darkness and discouragement around him he sent a telegram to Paris which ought to be in the minds of all of us to-day. He said:

> My left is giving away, my right is retiring, in consequence I am ordering a general offensive, a decisive attack from the center.

Let us end these policies which betoken defeat and despair. Let us stop retreat and go forward. Let us attack this depression instead of surrendering to it. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that we are to-day facing an attack, and the attack is being made upon Congress because no tangible results have been obtained in the bringing about of economies, and this rule is the first step in an effort to make an effective attack on governmental extravagances.

There is just one thing before this House at this time, and that is not the merits of this economy bill; it is whether or not this Congress is going to permit itself to vote upon the question of economy. I am not for everything in this bill. There is no man here who is. I shall vote against some of its provisions. I have been opposed all along to this method of trying to bring about economy, because you can not do it. The Congress should give the Executive the power which he requests, and then we would get action without this trading and quarreling and shadow boxing on the floor. This rule is the method selected by the organization in power for the purpose of considering this economy legislation; and regardless of the attitude of those in power, I conceive it to be the duty of all those desiring economy legislation to accept the only method of consideration proposed and to go along with this rule and attempt to help our brethren in any effort that might prove effective.

I say to Republicans: We can not afford as the minority party to place a single stone in the path of those responsible for legislation in any apparent effort to bring about the economy which the American people are demanding. [Applause.]

The purpose of this rule is to do one thing. It is to bring this bill before the House. It is not a gag rule as gag rules are oftentimes defined. It is a liberal gag rule. [Laughter and applause.]

Those familiar with the rules understand that all rules reported from the Committee on Rules to some extent deprive individuals of rights which they would otherwise have under the general rules of the House. Therefore all rules are gag rules, varying only in degree. This rule permits two hours' general debate, and as has been explained by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], an opportunity will be given to vote on the 11 per cent wage cut or upon the furlough plan. Those favoring a higher exemption than $1,000 will have an opportunity to so vote, and provision is made so that a square vote can be had on the elimination of any title in the bill. A bill bringing about well-balanced consolidations, eliminations, and economies can not be written on the floor or in a mass meeting any more than a proper tax bill could be written on the floor. Some one must assume the responsibility; and even though our majority friends have protested in other days that they would never permit legislation to be brought on the floor other than under the general rules of the House, yet it is evident that they are learning from experience, and the leaders are to be congratulated upon this effort, unsuccessful though it may be.

If the House is to accomplish results, it must be able to function. All legislation is a matter of compromise. Our constituents want action. The taxpayers want relief, and they are not interested in the niceties of parliamentary procedure, and I hope that this rule will be adopted. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I want to state to the Members of the House that in response to the suggestion made by the minority leader, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], immediately upon the conclusion of the time devoted to the debate on the rule, I shall offer an amendment to the proposed rule in the following language:

> Page 2, line 4, after the word "Chair," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following:
> "Provided, That this limitation on the right to offer amendments shall not apply to amendments that may be offered by direction of the Economy Committee."

In the event gentlemen may have misunderstood the purport of this—and I want to say candidly that it was offered for the purpose of liberalizing still further the provisions of the rule—if the Economy Committee in the consideration of this bill sees fit to bring in an amendment of some sort that they want to suggest, that amendment may be open to free amendment regardless of the rule here, and the amendment shall not be included in the four amendments that are provided for under the rule.

I think all gentlemen who are familiar with the rules of the House will understand the purpose of this. It is not to further restrict, but it is for the purpose of liberalizing opportunity of amendment under the rule and not to have any of the four amendments taken away from them.

A number of gentlemen suggested the amendment that has been proposed here, gentlemen who are interested in liberalizing to this extent the rule that is now presented. I do not care to take further time to explain it. I think all gentlemen understand it.

I desire to state a few words in conclusion in reference to the general proposition involved in the rules.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. MAY. I want to hear the amendment read, because I was unable to hear it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It will be reported at the desk again in a moment, and I do not wish to make a further explanation of it.

Mr. GLOVER. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the question?

Mr. GLOVER. If I understand the gentleman's amendment, it simply liberalizes the rule so that the membership of the House, outside of the committee, may offer these four amendments.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is exactly the purpose of it. I can not submit to any further interruptions, although I would like to do so.

I want to make this concluding statement with reference to the general proposition involved in the rule.

This is no pleasant duty that the members of the Rules Committee are engaged in here this morning. No member of the Rules Committee and no Member who shall support a Committee on Economy are deriving any pleasure out of that effort. If we had our own will and way about it, a measure of this sort would not be presented to the House of Representatives for its consideration. The only justification on earth for this bill is the urgent, emergent necessities of our Government, and that is the whole proposition presented here. [Applause.]

I want to say to you that as far as a great number of the personnel in the Government service are concerned, including those I have heard from in my district and in other sections of Alabama, they have directed me, so far as I could say it for them, recognizing this is a temporary emergency measure for the great Government that for years and years has employed them, that has never failed them at pay day and has given them liberal terms for retirement at the expiration of their service, that as far as they are concerned they are willing in this hour of extreme necessity to go along themselves and make some little sacrifice to preserve the integrity of our Government's financial standing. [Applause.]

I can not subscribe to the doctrine that has been announced here that the taxpayers of the United States should be burdened with the duty of preserving the wage scale of industry in America, nor do I believe that this resolution will have any serious effect with reference to the pay roll of those engaged in industry. They have already reduced their pay rolls. The great brotherhoods of railroad people have voluntarily taken a cut. Every town official in this country has voluntarily, or by action of the municipal board, taken a reduction in order to meet the desperate emergencies of the present situation.

Now, gentlemen, here is the question, and I submit it to you in all candor. It is not a pleasure, as I say, for us to bring this rule here. This legislation does not represent your individual wishes or mine. The question here, and the only question, and it is your individual responsibility, and I am not censuring your action—I am only answerable to my own conscience and to my own constituency—it is an individual proposition, Will you vote, by voting against this rule, to deprive the House of Representatives of even the naked opportunity of considering this program of economy? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BANKHEAD: Page 2, line 4, after the word "Chair," strike out the period, insert a colon, and add the following:

"Provided, That this limitation on the right to offer amendments shall not apply to amendments that may be offered by direction of the Economy Committee."

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, can not we withold that until we vote on this amendment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to make a statement? I want to say that this is a matter of a little embarrassment to me. I thought that I had six minutes remaining, excluding two that I promised to yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN]. I do not want to put myself in the position of breaking faith with the gentleman, and I therefore ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may have two minutes outside of the time allowed on the rule.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the adoption of this rule. Surely we are not going to act so hastily in a matter of such vital importance and of such far-reaching consequences.

It seems to me that all fair-minded Members of Congress must realize that a measure involving a reduction in American living standards for the thousands of Government employees should be considered most carefully and acted upon in a thoroughly deliberate and conscientious way.

I consider this destructive legislation with the label of economy attached, and it has now reached the stage where the Government itself might be disrupted and the efficiency of the departments seriously impaired. It will also threaten the security of and of necessity be an undue hardship to the thousands of efficient men and women who work for the Government.

Is it not time to halt this scramble? Is it not the duty of the membership here to point out the cruel inconsistencies and the deplorable results of these disconnected and unrelated series of moves?

We should call a halt to what has become a misdirected and mad rush for economy. There are sane and sound ways of avoiding the bludgeoning of employees and paralyzing the necessary functioning of our Government.

The proposed bill is what I would term a legislative monstrosity and is not worthy of intelligent or honest discussion, and if we do our duty as we should, this rule and bill should be soundly and decisively beaten.

I yield to my colleague [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the honor of closing the debate on this rule. I am not going to vote for this rule or any rule with undue haste. I challenge any man or Member of the House, or member of the Economy Committee, to prove to this House that a wage reduction is the proper way out of this crisis. Look at the experience of Europe in reduction of wages, the destitution and ruin it brought to them. I ask you to look at the experience of private industry of America, to what happened to the coal, the iron and steel, the railroad industries. I say to you and to the Economy Committee that these wage cuts are only sinking America deeper in the mire, and I plead to you to kill this rule, which is not pointing the way out. It is beneath the dignity of this body. Let us carefully consider this question before we act. [Applause.]

PUBLIC WELFARE DEMANDS DEFEAT OF FEDERAL WAGE-CUT MEASURES

This House is now confronted with an imposing bill which, in substance, proposes sweeping cuts in Federal and postal wages, the drastic reduction of existing employment standards, and the nullification of many enlightened labor advances made during recent years. This legislation, if enacted into law, is certain to have a profound and far-reaching effect on the public welfare, the efficiency and dependability of the public service, and the well-being of labor generally. Therefore the moving purpose that prompts this legislation must be of extraordinary moment so as to give warrant to its sponsors in urging its adoption. It must be grounded in a proper concern for the national welfare and for the restoration and maintenance of prosperity. By this test it must be judged. If it fails in this, it fails in everything.

While this campaign to cut Federal wages has been going on for many months, and while many men have advocated such salary cuts on this floor, there has been no bill of particulars presented as to just what these wage-cut proponents have in mind as to why wages should be reduced, or as to what was expected to be accomplished by such reduction. Various arguments have been advanced in support of wage slashing, but they have been general rather than specific, and despite its far-reaching importance there has been no program or definite declaration of purpose set down by the wage-cut advocates. In a general way the changes have been rung in turn on the following wage-cut arguments: It has been urged that the wages of Federal employees should be cut because workers in private industry have had their wages reduced. The reduction in the cost of living has been another argument advanced to justify a wage reduction.

Another reason cited has been the declining returns of agriculture and industry, the necessity of reducing taxes, and the good psychological effect that a cut in Federal wages will have in public sentiment and industry generally. The crowning reason advanced, however, in support of the proposed wage cuts has been that the National Budget must be balanced and that the saving effected through a reduction in Federal wages was part of a general program to achieve this end. Broadly speaking, it has been conceded that Federal and postal employees now receive a modest wage for service performed. Little or nothing has been said by the wage-cut advocates as to what effect these wage reductions will have on the return of normal business conditions or the restoration of prosperity. On this major item of the whole proposition they have been exceedingly vague, if not altogether silent.

The foregoing summarizes the wage-cut situation from its proponents' point of approach. This summary shows that they expect, through the enactment of Federal wage-cut legislation, to accomplish certain things, and it is to be assumed that they recommend this legislation with the thought that its adoption will promote the public interest. On this score I take sharp issue and declare that in every item and particular these wage-cut proposals are fundamentally unsound and that they will do none of the things that their advocates say they will do.

The present business depression, dating from the stock-market crash of November, 1929, has been a season of retrenchment extraordinary. Salary slashing has been the order of the day, resulting finally in a vicious circle of wage cuts, lessened consumption, and declining business volume. It is a familiar story. The record is so complete that none can disregard it. Each succeeding wage cut has made matters worse, benefiting none and injuring all.

Moreover, in the past seven years every European country has been afflicted with this same wage-cutting policy, and with exactly the same results. There is no exception to the rule. Unemployment, misery, and destitution, declining production volume and investment returns, higher taxes, reduced public revenues, and disorganized business generally have followed in the wake of wage reductions. The record is complete, and all who run may read. The coal miners have suffered sharp reduction in wages. More recently the employees in the iron and steel industries had their wages cut, and still more recently the railroad workers were compelled to accept a 10 per cent wage cut on the general proposition that it was essential for the welfare of the transportation industry. What has been the result? Did these wage cuts increase the market value of the concern, bring greater returns to their operators, stimulate and increase production, or tend to promote local or national prosperity? These wage cuts did none of these things. They caused the exact opposite to happen.

One of the chief reasons advanced for a reduction in Federal wages is the fact that a heavy national deficit of more than $2,000,000,000 is in prospect for the current fiscal year. Accepting that estimate, let us inquire how this deficit happens to be? It is not due to increased Federal expenditures, many of which were intended to answer unemployment needs, as it was due to a sharp drop in Federal income, a drop that has kept pace step by step with the wage cuts that have been made in private industry. According to President Hoover's annual message, the fall in Federal receipts for the present fiscal year amounted to $1,683,000,000, of which $1,034,000,000 was in individual and corporate income taxes alone. Simply stated, reduced wages have resulted in less consumption, and this in turn has set in motion a series of reductions which has finally found its full reflection in a staggering annual loss in wealth production throughout the country. Here we find the major cause of the present national deficit; that is, a wage-cutting policy resulting in a stupendous loss in national income. Now it is seriously proposed that the Government on its own account, and as an example, order a sharp cut in the wages of its own employees, and to do this thing on the general concept that the public interest will be served thereby. Could any proposal be more absurd? It would make a bad situation much worse.

Mr. BANKHEAD. A parliamentary inquiry. Did the Speaker put the question on my amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair put the question on the motion of the gentleman for the previous question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move the previous question on the amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. What happened to the vote that we have already had?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not announce the vote. The Chair said that the noes appeared to have it, and then the gentleman from Alabama asked that the gentleman from New York might proceed for two minutes.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BANKHEAD), there were 205 ayes and 14 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was being taken, when Mr. BANKHEAD demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. My inquiry is as to whether or not this vote means that we are voting in favor of the adoption of the rule?

The SPEAKER. No; it does not. The House is voting now on the previous question.

Mr. McCORMACK. And if the previous question is adopted, then the question will come upon adopting the rule?

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 315, nays 60, not voting 56, as follows:

[Roll No. 55]

YEAS—315

Adkins	Carden	Disney	Hancock, N. Y.
Aldrich	Carley	Dominick	Hancock, N. C.
Allen	Carter, Calif.	Doughton	Hardy
Allgood	Cartwright	Douglas, Ariz.	Hare
Andrew, Mass.	Cary	Douglass, Mass.	Harlan
Andrews, N. Y.	Celler	Doutrich	Hart
Arnold	Chindblom	Doxey	Hartley
Auf der Heide	Chiperfield	Drewry	Hastings
Ayres	Christgau	Dyer	Haugen
Bacharach	Christopherson	Eaton, N. J.	Hawley
Bachmann	Clague	Ellzey	Hess
Bacon	Clancy	Eslick	Hoch
Baldrige	Clark, N. C.	Evans, Calif.	Holaday
Bankhead	Clarke, N. Y.	Fiesinger	Hollister
Barton	Cole, Iowa	Fish	Holmes
Beedy	Cole, Md.	Fishburne	Hooper
Black	Collins	Flannagan	Houston, Del.
Bland	Colton	Foss	Howard
Blanton	Condon	French	Huddleston
Bloom	Connery	Fuller	Hull, Morton D.
Boehne	Cooper, Ohio	Fulmer	Hull, William E.
Bohn	Cooper, Tenn.	Gambrill	Jacobsen
Boileau	Corning	Garber	Jenkins
Boland	Cox	Garrett	Johnson, Okla.
Bolton	Coyle	Gasque	Johnson, Tex.
Boylan	Crail	Gibson	Johnson, Wash.
Brand, Ga.	Cross	Gifford	Jones
Brand, Ohio	Crosser	Gilbert	Kading
Briggs	Crowther	Gilchrist	Kahn
Britten	Crump	Glover	Karch
Browning	Culkin	Golder	Kelly, Ill.
Brunner	Cullen	Goldsborough	Kelly, Pa.
Buchanan	Dallinger	Green	Kemp
Buckbee	Davenport	Greenwood	Kerr
Bulwinkle	Davis	Gregory	Ketcham
Burch	Delaney	Guyer	Kinzer
Burdick	DeRouen	Hadley	Kleberg
Busby	Dickinson	Haines	Kniffin
Byrns	Dickstein	Hall, Ill.	Kopp
Cable	Dies	Hall, Miss.	Kunz
Campbell, Iowa	Dieterich	Hall, N. Dak.	Kvale

LaGuardia	Michener	Reilly	Temple
Lambertson	Millard	Rich	Thomason
Lambeth	Miller	Robinson	Thurston
Lamneck	Milligan	Rogers, Mass.	Tierney
Lanham	Mitchell	Rogers, N. H.	Tilson
Lankford, Ga.	Mobley	Rudd	Timberlake
Lankford, Va.	Montague	Sabath	Treadway
Larsen	Montet	Sanders, N. Y.	Turpin
Lea	Moore, Ky.	Sanders, Tex.	Underhill
Leavitt	Morehead	Sandlin	Underwood
Lehlbach	Mouser	Schneider	Vinson, Ga.
Lewis	Nelson, Me.	Seger	Vinson, Ky.
Lichtenwalner	Nelson, Wis.	Seiberling	Warren
Lindsay	Niedringhaus	Selvig	Wason
Linthicum	Norton, Nebr.	Shallenberger	Watson
Lonergan	Norton, N. J.	Simmons	Weaver
Lovette	O'Connor	Sirovich	Weeks
Lozier	Oliver, Ala.	Smith, Idaho	Welch, Calif.
Luce	Oliver, N. Y.	Smith, Va.	Welsh, Pa.
McClintic, Okla.	Overton	Snell	West
McClintock, Ohio	Palmisano	Snow	White
McCormack	Parker, Ga.	Somers, N. Y.	Whitley
McDuffie	Parker, N. Y.	Sparks	Whittington
McGugin	Partridge	Spence	Wigglesworth
McKeown	Peavey	Stafford	Williams, Tex.
McLaughlin	Perkins	Steagall	Williamson
McMillan	Person	Stevenson	Wilson
McReynolds	Pettengill	Stewart	Wingo
Maas	Polk	Strong, Kans.	Withrow
Major	Pou	Sullivan, N. Y.	Wolcott
Maloney	Prall	Sumners, Tex.	Wolverton
Manlove	Pratt, Harcourt J.	Sutphin	Wood, Ga.
Mansfield	Pratt, Ruth	Swank	Wood, Ind.
Mapes	Purnell	Sweeney	Woodruff
Martin, Mass.	Rainey	Taber	Woodrum
Martin, Oreg.	Ramseyer	Tarver	Wright
May	Rayburn	Taylor, Colo.	Yon
Mead	Reed, N. Y.	Taylor, Tenn.

NAYS—60

Almon	Englebright	James	Ramspeck
Amlie	Evans, Mont.	Johnson, Mo.	Rankin
Arentz	Fernandez	Keller	Reid, Ill.
Barbour	Fitzpatrick	Kennedy	Romjue
Beam	Frear	Loofbourow	Schafer
Bowman	Fulbright	McSwain	Schuetz
Butler	Gavagan	Moore, Ohio	Shannon
Cannon	Goodwin	Nelson, Mo.	Shott
Carter, Wyo.	Goss	Nolan	Sinclair
Cochran, Mo.	Granfield	Parks	Summers, Wash.
Cooke	Hill, Ala.	Parsons	Swanson
Curry	Hill, Wash.	Patman	Swing
De Priest	Hogg, W. Va.	Patterson	Tinkham
Driver	Hopkins	Pittenger	Williams, Mo.
Eaton, Colo.	Horr	Ragon	Yates

NOT VOTING—56

Abernethy	Crisp	Hope	Murphy
Andresen	Crowe	Hornor	Owen
Beck	Darrow	Igoe	Ransley
Brumm	Dowell	Jeffers	Shreve
Burtness	Drane	Johnson, Ill.	Smith, W. Va.
Campbell, Pa.	Erk	Johnson, S. Dak.	Stalker
Canfield	Estep	Kendall	Stokes
Cavicchia	Finley	Knutson	Strong, Pa.
Chapman	Free	Kurtz	Sullivan, Pa.
Chase	Freeman	Larrabee	Swick
Chavez	Gillen	Ludlow	Thatcher
Cochran, Pa.	Griffin	McFadden	Tucker
Collier	Griswold	McLeod	Wolfenden
Connolly	Hogg, Ind.	Magrady	Wyant

So the previous question was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

General pairs until further notice:

Mr. Crisp with Mr. Thatcher.
Mr. Canfield with Mr. Dowell.
Mr. Tucker with Mr. Burtness.
Mr. Gillen with Mr. Shreve.
Mr. Chapman with Mr. Swick.
Mr. Larrabee with Mr. Wyant.
Mr. Abernethy with Mr. Erk.
Mr. Igoe with Mr. Hogg of Indiana.
Mrs. Owen with Mr. Johnson of South Dakota.
Mr. Ludlow with Mr. McFadden.
Mr. Griswold with Mr. Estep.
Mr. Collier with Mr. Beck.
Mr. Drane with Mr. Campbell of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Chavez with Mr. Darrow.
Mr. Jeffers with Mr. Ransley.
Mr. Smith of West Virginia with Mr. Connolly.
Mr. Hornor with Mr. Kendall.
Mr. Griffin with Mr. Free.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division of the question. I ask for a separate vote on the substantive proposition contained in the sentence beginning in line 1 on page 2 and ending with line 4, as follows:

Each title as it is read shall be open to four amendments, said amendments not being subject to amendment, and no further amendments shall be entertained by the Chair.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that by the action of the House that portion of the rule has already been amended. As I understand it, the gentleman is asking for a separate vote on something that is not now in the resolution. I submit it is not divisible under the circumstances. The resolution as it now stands on which the previous question has been ordered, so far as the portion to which the gentleman refers is concerned, reads as follows:

Each title as it is read shall be open to four amendments, said amendments not being subject to amendment, and no further amendments shall be entertained by the Chair: Provided, That the limitation on the right to offer amendments shall not apply to amendments that may be offered by direction of the Economy Committee.

The gentleman from Missouri, as I understand it, despite the former action of the House in incorporating that amendment, is asking for a separate vote on something not now before the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on that point.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman is asking for something not now in the resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, all the House did was to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], and now, of course, that sentence, beginning on page 2, as amended, is entirely before the House. We have not yet adopted that sentence either by itself or as amended. That is the parliamentary situation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. And the previous question has been ordered on the part of the resolution now before the committee as amended.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Alabama to paragraph 6 of Rule 16:

On the demand of any Member, before the question is put, a question shall be divided if it include propositions so distinct in substance that one being taken away a substantive proposition shall remain.

The Chair has examined this substantive proposition. If you take away from the bill all of that language—

Each title as it is read shall be open to four amendments, said amendments not being subject to amendment, and no further amendments shall be entertained by the Chair—

there would still be the remainder of the resolution. It occurs to the Chair that it is a substantive proposition.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair hear me for a moment?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. In order to constitute a substantive proposition after the division of a question each of the parts must be complete so that it will stand alone. And it must work both ways. Let us try to work it in the other direction than that just suggested by the Chair. Suppose the House should vote down the first part of the proposition, what would be left if only the portion to which the gentleman makes objection remains? The four lines singled out by the gentleman from Missouri would not be a substantive proposition. It would not be a workable rule. In fact, it would mean nothing standing alone. If the House in its wisdom, when it comes to vote separately, should vote to retain the portion which the gentleman from Missouri wishes to cut out, and to eliminate the rest of the rule, what kind of a substantive proposition shall we have?

Mr. CANNON. If the sentence on which a separate vote is requested is removed, it will leave a complete and workable rule. The effect of such removal is immaterial in construing the rules of the House.

The sentence which I have quoted, and on which I ask a separate vote, is a substantive proposition among many other substantive propositions, and under section 6, Rule XVI, and a separate vote can not be denied.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman must admit, though, that his proposition might be voted down and the other proposition voted up. Suppose it should happen that the portion which the gentleman wishes to strike out was, contrary to his wishes, retained, and the other portion which he would like to have stand, should be, in the wisdom of the House, stricken out, then where would the gentleman be left? Only this one small portion of the rule would be left. It would not be a substantive proposition as far as the rule is concerned.

Mr. CANNON. The rule provides that on request there shall be a separate vote on every substantive proposition.

Mr. RAMSEYER. If the gentleman is correct, there could be a separate vote on every sentence in this rule.

Mr. CANNON. On every sentence which embodied a substantive proposition.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman had his right before the previous question was ordered. The gentleman then had the right to move an amendment. Why did he not do it then? Why did not the gentleman have the previous question voted down and move his amendment? That was the time to act. The previous question having been ordered, if the gentleman can pick out one proposition and have it voted upon, he can pick out any other and have a separate vote on it.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is absolutely right. That is precisely what the rules of the House provide.

Mr. TILSON. After the previous question has been ordered can we have a vote upon every individual sentence in this rule? I do not believe that it can be done after the adoption of the previous question.

Mr. ADKINS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADKINS. As I understand, this resolution has been read and amended and the previous question has been ordered. After all that procedure, is an amendment now in order?

The SPEAKER. This is not in the form of an amendment. It is provided for by the rules of the House of Representatives, which the Chair intends to read, and which he will read for the benefit of the membership.

Paragraph 6, Rule XVI:

"On the demand of any Member, before the question is put, a question shall be divided if it include propositions so distinct in substance that one being taken away a substantive proposition shall remain."

Now, as the gentleman from Connecticut says, if you take away the first substantive proposition—that is, all of this resolution except that included on page 2 in line 1 down to line 4—there would be nothing left except that language and the title. But on the contrary, if you take away the proposition which the gentleman from Missouri has suggested, you still have a complete rule for the consideration of this resolution.

Mr. TILSON. But the Chair must not assume that the House will necessarily take the action suggested by the gentleman from Missouri. The reverse action may be taken.

The SPEAKER. The House is supposed to act intelligently under the rules of the House of Representatives. That may be an unusual presumption, but nevertheless it is presumed to act intelligently.

The gentleman from Missouri has asked for a division of the resolution. It occurs to the Chair that if the provision that the gentleman from Missouri has suggested is voted out there will be a complete special rule remaining. So it seems to the Chair it comes within the spirit of the rule. However, the Chair will be glad to hear any gentleman on the question.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The Speaker proceeds on the assumption that the demand for a separate vote on that sentence beginning in line 1, page 2, is in the form of an amendment. It is not. If the Chair yields to the demand of the gentleman from Missouri, there will not be two propositions before the House. It will be improper for the Chair to divide this unless there are two propositions, each of which stands on its own legs. To say that the House will act intelligently on the matter, of course, is a compliment to the House, but the rules do not go on that assumption. If the Speaker will permit me to repeat, there is no division, under the rules, unless when the division is made each proposition is a substantive proposition and will make sense in itself standing alone.

The SPEAKER. What does the gentleman from Iowa say to the language in this rule? The Chair is only attempting to construe the language of the rule:

On the demand of any Member, before the question is put, a question shall be divided if it include propositions so distinct in substance that one being taken away a substantive proposition shall remain.

Mr. RAMSEYER. But that means if either one is taken away the other one, standing alone, is a substantive proposition. Now, if the Speaker is right in the way he appears to be inclined, why could not there not be a separate vote on the next sentence, and a separate vote on the next sentence? Any one of those sentences is as much of a substantive proposition as the sentence on which the gentleman from Missouri seeks a separate vote. Now, what is left of the rule? If either of those sentences is voted on, you would have a substantive proposition left, but the test is that after dividing the parts divided each presents a substantive proposition.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, would the Chair hear me for a moment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. A division has always been applicable only to that which has been placed in a bill. This resolution is exactly the same as an appropriation bill that has passed the amendment stage and is ready to be voted upon. Suppose this were an appropriation bill before the House, could any Member ask for a separate vote on a provision that was already in the bill, that was not put in by way of amendment in the Committee of the Whole? Certainly not. A separate vote on appropriation bills can only be asked for with respect to amendments that have been put in in Committee of the Whole. This resolution has passed the amendment stage. It comes before the House already amended, with the previous question adopted.

Certainly you could not take up each substantive proposition and ask for a separate vote. I submit that is the rule.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Chair of two notable instances in which this identical question was presented and determined, both of them within the memory of the present distinguished occupant of the chair.

On April 8, 1908, in the Sixtieth Congress, Mr. John Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Rules, brought in a rule providing for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, just as Mr. BANKHEAD, the chairman of the present Committee on Rules, has brought in this rule providing for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill. The rule proposed exactly the kind of legislative program provided by this rule. Mr. John J. Fitzgerald, of New York, demanded a separate vote on one clause in the rule, a clause comparable in all respects with the clause on which we are demanding a separate vote to-day.

In this connection it may be recalled that the Committee on Rules at that time consisted of but three members, Mr. Dalzell, of Pennsylvania, Mr. Speaker Cannon, of Illinois, and Mr. John Sharp Williams, of Mississippi. Speaker Cannon was at that time at the zenith of his power. His control of the legislative program of the House was absolute and undisputed. He was referred to in every newspaper as the czar.

He had personally supervised the drafting of that rule. But when Mr. Fitzgerald demanded a separate vote on one of the five propositions carried by the rule the request was so obviously within his rights under the section of the rules of the House which the Speaker has just read that, although it was vigorously objected to by Mr. Dalzell and other parliamentarians on the majority side, Speaker Cannon held that he was entitled to a separate vote upon that one clause and put the question.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has the gentleman from Missouri before him the case he refers to?

Mr. CANNON. It will be found in the proceedings of the first session of the Sixtieth Congress, page 4509, April 8, 1908.

And while the gentleman is about it he may make note of a precedent of the second session, Sixty-second Congress, page 5006, which I will also cite.

In the Sixty-second Congress, Bob Henry, of Texas, from the Speaker's own State, at that time chairman of the Committee on Rules, reported a rule for the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, a rule which provided a legislative program for the consideration of the bill similar to that provided in this resolution. Mr. James R. Mann, of Illinois, one of the ablest parliamentarians who ever sat in the House, demanded a separate vote on one clause of the rule—in its general effect such a clause as that on which we are now asking a separate vote in this rule. And Mr. Speaker Clark, of Missouri, against the vigorous protest of Members of the Committee on Rules, held that under the section which the Speaker has just read, section 6 of Rule XVI of the Rules of the House, Mr. Mann was entitled to a separate vote on the clause and granted it.

I could cite innumerable instances, Mr. Speaker, throughout the procedure of the House supporting and confirming the inherent right of a Member to rise and demand a separate vote upon any substantive provision which, taken away from the proposition before the House, would leave another substantive proposition. It is a right which has come down to us from the First Congress, and when properly invoked has never been denied from that time to this.

As the Speaker has well said, the clause at bar is in itself a complete substantive proposition, and if removed, it leaves a complete and workable rule. The only effect of the removal of that provision will be that instead of Members of the House being limited to four amendments to a title—all of which will undoubtedly be monopolized by members of the committee—any number of legitimate amendments may be offered and every Member of the House will be permitted to participate in the formulation of this important legislation. But if you leave this proposition in the rule, there will not even be opportunity to offer one amendment to a section. In the very first title there are 16 sections, and under this clause you can not touch 12 of them. You must take them or leave them as the committee crams them down your throat. This one clause is the gag in the rule, and with it in operation the average Member of the House who is not on the committee might as well be a thousand miles away so far as any influence he may be able to exert in the drafting of this legislation is concerned.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. With pleasure.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair should rule in favor of the gentleman from Missouri, that would eliminate the three lines being the sentence starting in line 1 of page 2 and ending with the word "Chair," in line 4, and would leave the situation as though we brought it in under suspension of the rules, except that two motions to recommit would be in order.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman is correct. The elimination of this one sentence will practically throw the bill open to consideration under the rules of the House, the fairest system of legislative procedure ever devised.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In reply to the query of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], if the Chair holds the gentleman's request for a separate vote valid, then the House would vote on the question of four amendments. If the House voted that down, then it means that this rule makes germane to an appropriation bill that which otherwise would not be germane. That is right, is it not?

Mr. CANNON. If the House should vote down this proposition it makes no change except that it will give us the right to offer more than four amendments, to consider fully all sections of the bill. It will permit participation by all Members of the House instead of restricting participation to members of the committee. It will give us the right to discuss the bill at length and to change it if we think it should be changed. It takes away the gag feature. [Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If after the gag portion is taken off does the House still have the opportunity of voting down the rule?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. By dividing the question, the House is given the opportunity to adopt or reject a part of the rule or all of the rule.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman says there are two substantive propositions here. Is this the only sentence that contains a substantive proposition?

Mr. CANNON. There are a number of others containing substantive propositions, and the gentleman or any other Member may ask for a separate vote on any of them.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, may I restate my proposition? I thoroughly agree with the principle announced by the gentleman from Missouri that where there are two substantive propositions, each of which will stand alone, regardless of which one may be voted up and which one may be voted down, then it may be divided; but where there are two propositions, as here, one of which is simply one of the provisions in the other and which of itself means nothing, there can be no division. Here is a rule with several provisions in it. The gentleman from Missouri would like to have a separate vote on one of these provisions. If it should be voted out, it is true there would be a workable rule left; but what happens if the other part is voted out instead?

Again let us suppose that after the gentleman demands a separate vote on this one sentence, I ask the Speaker to give us a separate vote on the next one, which begins on line 7, so as to eliminate it.

From line 7 down to line 14 may be cut out and still leave a substantive proposition. But let us suppose that, instead of this happening, the other portion, the resolving clause and the first part of the rule, is cut out. Suppose the House obstinately votes down my proposal and votes to cut out the other proposition. There would be nothing left except the sentence I tried to eliminate. In other words, one part of the rule will stand alone as a substantive proposition while the other will not. In order to come within the rule providing for a division of a motion, each and every part after the division must be a substantive proposition capable of standing alone and making sense after all the other parts have been taken away.

I wish to ask the Chair this parliamentary question: Whether if I ask a separate vote on the paragraph beginning in line 7—which, as I have shown, can well be cut out and leave a perfectly workable rule—will the Chair recognize me for this purpose? It would seem that I am just as much entitled to a separate vote on this provision as is the gentleman from Missouri on the provision in question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair has already read the rule to the House. An examination of this particular rule shows that it contains a number of substantive propositions. In a ruling made by Mr. Speaker Cannon on April 8, 1908 (RECORD, p. 4509), he said:

> The Chair is prepared to rule. On a careful examination of this rule, the Chair finds that there are five substantive propositions and five only, so that if the gentleman demands a separate vote upon either or all of them, a separate vote will be taken.

The Chair has examined the rule in that case. If the House had adopted two substantive propositions and left out three substantive propositions, it would not have known what it was all about. The House could not possibly have known what it was considering if it had been so foolish as to adopt two of the substantive propositions and reject three, or reject two and adopt three.

As the Chair said a while ago, it is the presumption that the House, in voting upon the proposition, will act intelligently and not emasculate the rule.

The rule is quite specific. It provides that if there is a substantive proposition left a Member is entitled to a division.

The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WOODRUFF. In case the language mentioned by the gentleman from Missouri is stricken from the rule the net result will be that the House will vote to consider this bill under the general rules of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that is the practical effect of it; yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, on what part of the rule will the first question come?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] has demanded a vote on the substantive proposition commencing with the word "each" in line 1, of page 2, and going down to and including the word "Chair" in line 4.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, is that on the section of the resolution as it has been amended by the House? That is not what the gentleman requested.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri did not say anything about the amendment. The Chair does not know what is in the gentleman's mind.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Chair will pardon me, the gentleman distinctly announced he was not asking for a separate vote on that part of the resolution as amended by the House, but he was asking a separate vote upon it in its original form.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair stated.

Mr. BANKHEAD. What happens to the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The amendment remains in the resolution.

The question is on agreeing to that part of the resolution beginning with the word "each" in line 1, page 2, of the resolution and ending with the word "Chair" in line 4.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHENER. As I understand the situation, that particular provision was amended in the House. The Chair is now submitting something which has been amended, but without including the amendment. We can not possibly be dealing with the matter which the Chair is now referring to. The Bankhead amendment is now a part of this provision, be it substantive or otherwise.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Michigan will allow the Chair to state it once more, the gentleman from Missouri did not include in his demand the amendment now in the resolution. The gentleman could include in his demand the amendment that had been agreed to.

Mr. MICHENER. Exactly. We are considering this provision as amended. If this is true, then the gentleman from Missouri has no right to go back and ask for consideration of a provision which was in the resolution when we commenced its consideration, but which is now changed by amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has read the rule once, and if necessary, will read it again. It specifically authorizes any Member of the House to ask for a division and the gentleman from Missouri has asked for a division and has asked that certain language be voted on separately. If that language is disagreed to, the balance of the special rule will be a substantive proposition.

Mr. O'CONNOR. May I respectfully point out to the Chair the practical effect of the Chair's ruling? The Chair rules that a division is possible, but what is happening is that we are dividing a sentence and we are having a vote on a part of a sentence that has been amended. I submit there can not be a division unless it is a substantive proposition, and in this instance the Chair is leaving out a part of the sentence in question.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Would it be in order for the gentleman from Missouri to withdraw his request, so that the House may vote down this rule on its merits? We are ready to do it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, it has been frequently held that it is not a part of the Speaker's duty to determine the effect of an amendment or the effect of any proposition presented for the consideration of the House. He is not required to pass on hypothetical questions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is correct.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, may a separate vote on a part of a substantive proposition be taken, or must it be upon the entire proposition?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is possible to have this division made.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The proposition has been amended. Can a separate vote be demanded upon part of the proposition when it includes other parts?

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the points of order.

The question is on agreeing to that portion of the resolution on which a separate vote is demanded by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, the question is on the division. On what part of the resolution are we voting?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state it.

The question is on agreeing to that portion of the resolution beginning in line 1 with the word "each" and ending in line 4, of page 2, with the word "Chair."

The question was taken, and the portion of the resolution referred to was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the balance of the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SNELL. Will the Speaker state just what we are about to vote on at the present time?

The SPEAKER. If the Chair can get order, he will state the situation. The House has disagreed to that portion of the resolution beginning with the word "each" in line 1, page 2, and down to the word "Chair" in line 4. That language is no longer in the resolution. The balance of the resolution is intact; and the question now is, Will the House adopt the resolution with that portion referred to eliminated from the resolution? The previous question has been ordered, and the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARLAN. What has happened to the Bankhead amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Bankhead amendment is in the resolution. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 219, nays 164, not voting 48, as follows:

[Roll No. 56]

YEAS—219

Adkins	Cary	Eslick	Holaday
Aldrich	Chindblom	Evans, Calif.	Hollister
Allgood	Chiperfield	Fiesinger	Hooper
Andrew, Mass.	Christopherson	Fishburne	Hope
Arnold	Clague	Flannagan	Houston, Del.
Bacharach	Clancy	Foss	Howard
Bachmann	Clark, N. C.	Free	Huddleston
Bacon	Clarke, N. Y.	French	Hull, Morton D.
Baldrige	Cole, Iowa	Fuller	Hull, William E.
Bankhead	Collins	Fulmer	Johnson, Okla.
Barton	Cooper, Ohio	Garber	Johnson, Tex.
Beedy	Cooper, Tenn.	Garrett	Jones
Bland	Corning	Gasque	Kahn
Blanton	Cox	Gilbert	Kerr
Bohn	Crisp	Glover	Ketcham
Bolton	Cross	Green	Kinzer
Bowman	Crowther	Gregory	Kleberg
Brand, Ga.	Crump	Guyer	Kniffin
Brand, Ohio	Culkin	Hadley	Knutson
Briggs	Darrow	Hall, Ill.	Lambertson
Britten	Davenport	Hall, Miss.	Lambeth
Browning	Davis	Hancock, N. Y.	Lanham
Buchanan	De Priest	Hancock, N. C.	Lankford, Va.
Bulwinkle	DeRouen	Hardy	Larsen
Burch	Dickinson	Hare	Lea
Busby	Dies	Hart	Leavitt
Byrns	Disney	Hastings	Lovette
Cable	Dominick	Haugen	Lozier
Campbell, Iowa	Doughton	Hawley	Luce
Cannon	Douglas, Ariz.	Hess	McClintic, Okla.
Carden	Doxey	Hill, Ala.	McClintock, Ohio
Carter, Calif.	Drewry	Hoch	McDuffie
Cartwright	Ellzey	Hogg, W. Va.	McGugin

McLaughlin	Parker, N. Y.	Smith, Idaho	Vinson, Ga.
McLeod	Parsons	Snell	Vinson, Ky.
McMillan	Patterson	Sparks	Warren
McReynolds	Polk	Stafford	Wason
McSwain	Pou	Steagall	Watson
Mansfield	Pratt, Harcourt J.	Stevenson	Weaver
Mapes	Pratt, Ruth	Stokes	Weeks
Martin, Mass.	Purnell	Strong, Kans.	West
Michener	Rainey	Sumners, Tex.	White
Millard	Ramseyer	Swank	Whitley
Miller	Ramspeck	Swanson	Whittington
Milligan	Rayburn	Taber	Wigglesworth
Mitchell	Reilly	Tarver	Williams, Tex.
Mobley	Rich	Taylor, Colo.	Williamson
Montague	Rogers, Mass.	Taylor, Tenn.	Wilson
Moore, Ky.	Sabath	Temple	Wingo
Moore, Ohio	Sanders, N. Y.	Thomason	Wood, Ga.
Morehead	Sanders, Tex.	Thurston	Wood, Ind.
Mouser	Sandlin	Tilson	Woodruff
Norton, Nebr.	Selberling	Timberlake	Woodrum
Oliver, Ala.	Shallenberger	Treadway	Wright
Parker, Ga.	Simmons	Underwood

NAYS—164

Allen	Driver	Kemp	Pettengill
Almon	Dyer	Kennedy	Pittenger
Amlie	Eaton, Colo.	Kopp	Prall
Andrews, N. Y.	Eaton, N. J.	Kunz	Ragon
Arentz	Englebright	Kvale	Rankin
Auf der Heide	Evans, Mont.	LaGuardia	Reed, N. Y.
Ayres	Fernandez	Lamneck	Reid, Ill.
Barbour	Fish	Lankford, Ga.	Robinson
Beam	Fitzpatrick	Lehlbach	Rogers, N. H.
Black	Frear	Lewis	Romjue
Bloom	Fulbright	Lichtenwalner	Rudd
Boehne	Gambrill	Lindsay	Schafer
Boileau	Gavagan	Linthicum	Schneider
Boland	Gibson	Lonergan	Schuetz
Boylan	Gifford	Loofbourow	Seger
Brunner	Gilchrist	McCormack	Selvig
Buckbee	Golder	McKeown	Shannon
Burdick	Goldsborough	Maas	Shott
Butler	Goodwin	Major	Sinclair
Carley	Goss	Maloney	Sirovich
Carter, Wyo.	Granfield	Manlove	Smith, Va.
Celler	Greenwood	Martin, Oreg.	Snow
Christgau	Griffin	May	Somers, N. Y.
Cochran, Mo.	Haines	Mead	Spence
Cole, Md.	Hall, N. Dak.	Montet	Stewart
Colton	Harlan	Nelson, Me.	Sullivan, N. Y.
Condon	Hartley	Nelson, Mo.	Summers, Wash.
Connery	Hill, Wash.	Nelson, Wis.	Sutphin
Connolly	Holmes	Niedringhaus	Sweeney
Cooke	Hopkins	Nolan	Swing
Coyle	Horr	Norton, N. J.	Tierney
Crail	Jacobsen	O'Connor	Tinkham
Crosser	James	Oliver, N. Y.	Turpin
Cullen	Jenkins	Overton	Welch, Calif.
Curry	Johnson, Mo.	Palmisano	Welsh, Pa.
Dallinger	Johnson, Wash.	Parks	Williams, Mo.
Delaney	Kading	Partridge	Withrow
Dickstein	Karch	Patman	Wolcott
Dieterich	Keller	Peavey	Wolverton
Douglass, Mass.	Kelly, Ill.	Perkins	Yates
Doutrich	Kelly, Pa.	Person	Yon

NOT VOTING—43

Abernethy	Collier	Igoe	Ransley
Andresen	Crowe	Jeffers	Shreve
Beck	Dowell	Johnson, Ill.	Smith, W. Va.
Brumm	Drane	Johnson, S. Dak.	Stalker
Burtness	Erk	Kendall	Strong, Pa.
Campbell, Pa.	Estep	Kurtz	Sullivan, Pa.
Canfield	Finley	Larrabee	Swick
Cavicchia	Freeman	Ludlow	Thatcher
Chapman	Gillen	McFadden	Tucker
Chase	Griswold	Magrady	Underhill
Chavez	Hogg, Ind.	Murphy	Wolfenden
Cochran, Pa.	Hornor	Owen	Wyant

So the resolution was agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

On the vote:

Mr. Canfield (for) with Mr. Griswold (against).
Mr. Wyant (for) with Mr. Larrabee (against).
Mr. Kurtz (for) with Mr. Ludlow (against).
Mr. Tucker (for) with Mr. Erk (against).
Mr. Collier (for) with Mr. Ransley (against).
Mr. Chapman (for) with Mr. Gillen (against).

Until further notice:

Mr. Crowe with Mr. Thatcher.
Mrs. Owen with Mr. Burtness.
Mr. Smith of West Virginia with Mr. Campbell of Pennsylvania.
Mr. Jeffers with Mr. Dowell.
Mr. Igoe with Mr. Stalker.
Mr. Hornor with Mr. McFadden.
Mr. Drane with Mr. Finley.
Mr. Chavez with Mr. Swick.
Mr. Abernethy with Mr. Beck.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that the gentleman from New Mexico, Mr. CHAVEZ, has asked me to state that if he were present he would have voted "no."

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11267, the legislative appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on yesterday, the reading of the legislative appropriation bill had been completed down through page 42. At the time the committee rose, there was pending an amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HARDY] and a substitute to that amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON]. The Clerk will now report the pending amendment of the gentleman from Colorado and the substitute by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, the substitute amendment by the gentleman from New York was simply read for information. It had not been formally presented as a substitute.

Mr. SIMMONS. The record is clear about that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that it had been offered. But the question now is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HARDY], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. HARDY: Page 42, after line 25, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 3. The salaries of Senators, Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners shall be at the rate of $9,000 per annum during the fiscal year 1933."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, on that I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That it is legislation on an appropriation bill and not in the form of a limitation. It simply seeks to amend existing law by changing the rate of salary now fixed by law, and there is nothing in the amendment itself from which the Chair can infer a saving under the Holman rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. My understanding, which may have been erroneous, was that having a privileged amendment under the rule, it could now be offered despite the fact that an amendment is pending. I ask the Chair to rule on that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was under the impression that the gentleman from Alabama would offer his amendment after the legislative bill has been concluded; that is, at the end of page 43. The committee is now at the beginning of page 43. The amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. HARDY] was pending when the committee rose, and the Chair thinks it is now in order and should be disposed of before the gentleman from Alabama offers his amendment.

Mr. DYER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. DYER. I rise to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado has the floor.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for the purpose of changing his amendment in one particular?

Mr. HARDY. No; I could not do that. Mr. Chairman, in all the debate that has gone on here about economy I have heard several Members say that they would be glad to vote a reduction in salaries for themselves. I think that that is a matter that ought to be taken up by the House by itself alone and not brought here in an omnibus proposition. The Members of this House know that we are going to have some economies in government and we know that we are going to have some reductions in salaries. We know that while we do not care to touch our salaries particularly, as most Members can not live on what they get, yet we are going to do it, and I say we ought to have a chance to show the country that we are brave enough to vote a cut in our own salaries before we declare a cut in the salary of others. I think we should vote for this amendment I have proposed at this time and avoid the charge that we are not willing to cut our own salaries. Let us take this $1,000 reduction in salary for the fiscal year 1933, and bring the matter to a focus right now.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The form of the gentleman's amendment is that the salary shall be $9,000 for the fiscal year 1933?

Mr. HARDY. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. If later an 11 per cent reduction in all Government salaries or a month of forfeiture is agreed to in lieu of the furlough, will that be taken from the $9,000?

Mr. HARDY. I think the gentlemen of this House have enough sense to meet that when they come to it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. The program which we have agreed to present as an economy proposal deals with this very proposal. Why should the House, knowing as we do that we are going to deal with the salaries of Members of the House in the general program of economy, vote now on this proposition and later on vote again? I suggest that the gentleman withdraw his amendment and let the salaries of the Members of the House be treated either under the President's plan or under the committee's plan along with other salary reductions.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. The charge is already very prevalent in newspapers and particularly in the special columns of political writers that many Members of this House will not vote for the economy plan because it includes their own salaries.

Mr. McDUFFIE. No sensible man on this floor believes such charges on the part of the newspapers.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Suppose the amendment which has been made in order by the rule fails, suppose that should be voted down, then we would not have any reduction in the salaries of Members?

Mr. McDUFFIE. If that amendment is voted down, certainly the gentleman will have an opportunity to offer an amendment, even his amendment, as soon as we shall have finished the committee amendment.

Mr. DYER. Very well.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. It is rather remarkable to find the chairman of the Economy Committee, which has been filling the press and feeding the American people with propaganda in favor of economy and reducing governmental expenditures, including salaries, standing up on the floor of the House and opposing an amendment to commence their economy program by reducing the salaries of Members of Congress.

I believe that I know the reason why the gentleman wants to defeat this amendment now. He knows that there are not enough votes in this House to swallow the 63-page bill, upon which there are no printed hearings, the 68-page bill which was first available on Monday of this week and on which the committee report was not available until this morning; a bill making many drastic changes in the long-established policies of our Nation, such as our national defense. In these times of unrest among the nations of the world, and with the critical situation as it is in the Far East, at a time when our debtor nations are indicating they will not pay their honest debts to us, as the chairman of the Rules Committee indicated, should America, in this omnibus bill, without careful and mature consideration give to one bureaucrat the authority and direction to consolidate and demoralize the arms of our national defense? The chairman of the Economy Committee hopes to gather a few more votes for his indefensible bill by putting the Members of Congress on the spot and forcing them to vote against any cut in their own salaries if they vote against the bill because of some of its indefensible provisions.

Now, the gentleman from Alabama says that after the pending section is passed that the question of considering the salary reduction for the Members of Congress can be considered if the so-called economy amendment is defeated. He well knows that under the rules of the House it takes a unanimous consent to go back to a section which has been considered for the purpose of offering an amendment. I ask that every Member of this House, particularly every member of the Economy Committee, who has been advocating the reducing of salaries of the underpaid Federal employees to stand on the floor of the House and vote to reduce his own salary before talking about and voting to reduce the salaries of other Federal Government officers and employees. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HARDY) there were—ayes 73, noes 134.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. SANDLIN and Mr. HARDY to act as tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported there were ayes 150 and noes 158.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. In expending appropriations or portions of appropriations contained in this act for the payment for personal services in the District of Columbia in accordance with the classification act of 1923, as amended, the average of the salaries of the total number of persons under any grade in the Botanic Garden, the Library of Congress, or the Government Printing Office shall not at any time exceed the average of the compensation rates specified for the grade by such act, as amended: Provided, That this restriction shall not apply (1) to grades 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the clerical-mechanical service, (2) to require the reduction in salary of any person whose compensation was fixed as of July 1, 1924, in accordance with the rules of section 6 of such act, (3) to require the reduction in salary of any person who is transferred from one position to another position in the same or different grade in the same or a different bureau, office, or other appropriation unit, (4) to prevent the payment of a salary under any grade at a rate higher than the maximum rate of the grade when such higher rate is permitted by the classification act of 1923, as amended, and is specifically authorized by other law, or (5) to reduce the compensation of any person in a grade in which only one position is allocated.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BYRNS: On page 43, after line 23, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 4. The detail of the present incumbent as attending physician at the Capitol shall be continued until otherwise provided by law."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order merely to ask the gentleman a question. Does the gentleman think it wise to make this permanent law?

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman that I think his point of order comes too late, as I had asked for a vote. But I will say this simply provides that the House and Senate may have some control over who is detailed, and not permit the War Department or the Navy Department every year or two to make a change.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman fully realizes that his amendment as worded does make it permanent law, and the gentleman really desires to do that, and thinks it is wise, I shall not object.

Mr. BYRNS. I am more than willing, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. BLANTON. I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is permanent law as applied to the present officer who is detailed here?

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. BRITTEN. I think the gentleman's amendment ought to be unanimously approved.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 21, after line 10, for the purpose of offering an amendment, which I ask to be read for the information of the Members.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, after line 10, insert the following as a new paragraph:

"For assistants in compiling lists of reports to be made to Congress by public officials; compiling copy and revising proofs for the House portion of the Official Register; preparing and indexing the statistical reports of the Clerk of the House; compiling the telephone and Members' directories; preparing and indexing the daily calendars of business; preparing the official statement of Members' voting records; preparing list of congressional nominees, and statistical summary of elections; preparing and indexing questions of order printed in the Appendix to the Journal pursuant to House Rule III, for recording and filing statements of political committees and candidates for election to the House of Representatives pursuant to the Federal corrupt practices act, 1925 (U. S. C., title 2, secs. 241–256); and for such other assistance as the Clerk of the House may deem necessary and proper in the conduct of the business of his office, $5,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to augment the annual salary of any employee of the House of Representatives."

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, I would like to have that amendment explained a little.

Mr. BYRNS. I will say to the gentleman this appropriation has been carried for a long time, and certainly as long as I have been a member of the committee. There has been no limitation on it heretofore, with reference to the manner in which it shall be used. The committee was of opinion that the salaries of employees of the House in the Clerk's office should not be augmented by the addition of any sum from this appropriation. Therefore in the Committee on Appropriations it was ordered stricken out, with direction to the Subcommittee on Appropriations to eliminate it, and to provide that it should not be used to augment the salaries of employees of the House. It was eliminated and it is not now in the bill. I am offering it here upon my own responsibility. I want that understood. I have not been authorized by the committee to offer it, nor even by the subcommittee. I am asking unanimous consent to have this amendment adopted, because I am told by the Clerk of the House that he will be in a very difficult situation if some provision is not made by which he has some fund which he can use, in order to do the work enumerated in this amendment.

Mr. SNELL. I did not hear the entire amendment. Will the gentleman explain in a few words what it does?

Mr. BYRNS. It provides that $5,000 shall be appropriated to be used by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in compiling lists and reports to be made to Congress and for public officials, compiling copy and revising proofs for the House portion of the Official Register, and a great many other things set forth in the amendment which has been read.

Mr. SNELL. Have we always made a provision of this characted to take care of this work?

Mr. BYRNS. Such provision has always been made, but there has been no limitation, such as is carried by this amendment, preventing augmenting the salaries of those already on the rolls.

It was my purpose in offering this amendment to see to it that no employee of the House had his salary increased from this sum. If it is used it must be used to employ temporary employees to do this extra work.

Mr. SNELL. Will it be necessary to bring in outside people to do this work?

Mr. BYRNS. I am so told by the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SNELL. How many were brought in last year, and how much was the cost?

Mr. BYRNS. I could not tell the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. If extra assistants are needed, and a good case can be made for their employment, I shall not object.

Mr. RAGON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. RAGON. I want to ask the gentleman whether last year this $5,000 did not go to employees in the Clerk's office?

Mr. BYRNS. I have been told that, but I do not know whether it is true or not. I have been told that this money has been used for the purpose of augmenting salaries.

Mr. SNELL. This bill will be before the House for two or three days. I wish the gentleman would withdraw his amendment until we can secure further information.

Mr. BYRNS. I have given the gentleman all the information I have.

Mr. HOLADAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Certainly.

Mr. HOLADAY. I think I can give the gentleman some information.

Mr. SNELL. I wish the gentleman would.

Mr. HOLADAY. Investigation has disclosed that the money appropriated was divided up among certain men who are already on the pay roll. The committee were of the opinion that there was no legal justification for that, and perhaps it was not justified on other grounds. Therefore, the Appropriations Committee cut out that amount.

This amendment provides the same sum of money, but requires that it shall be paid to employees who are not on the pay roll; in other words, new employees.

Mr. SNELL. If in the past the old employees could do it, why can they not do it now, but without compensation?

Mr. HOLADAY. That is the question.

Mr. BYRNS. I am told by the present Clerk of the House that he needs some sum like this to take care of this additional work, and that without it he does not know how he is going to get along.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the same thing came up in 1913, and the same plea then was made, that it was needed in order to take care of election contests, but it really amounted to a bonus and extra pay to the Clerk. This resolution should have a reservation as to the exact sum to be paid to the Clerk.

Mr. BYRNS. It provides that none of it shall be paid to any employee of the House, that no part of this sum shall be used to augment any salary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. There should be no doubt about it; it should be made clear that it can not be used as a bonus or to increase salaries.

Mr. SNELL. I wish the gentleman would withdraw the amendment for the time being, that we may get further information.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the narration of the work as stated in the amendment shows without question that it is work that should be done by some employee of the House, preparing and indexing the daily calendars of business; preparing the official statement of Members' voting records; preparing list of congressional nominees, and statistical summary of elections; compiling the decisions which are required by the rules of the House, and preparing the Journal of the House. Every specific enumerated item of work should be done, and has been done.

It has been claimed by members of the Committee on Appropriations that this money has been parceled out to some members of the Clerk's force. They wish to correct that, and they have inserted a proviso which forbids that in the following words:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to augment the annual salary of any employee of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. With the permission of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BYRNS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. Is it not a fact that these are a part of the duties of the Clerk?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; some of these activities are not a part of the duties of the Clerk.

Mr. SNELL. Who should do the work?

Mr. BYRNS. The Clerk can not do all of these things. During a period of the year he must have help. He does not know whether he will need all of the $5,000 or not. He may or he may not.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is there a Budget estimate for this?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes; there is a Budget estimate. It came up in the regular way.

Mr. SNELL. For the present I shall have to object. The gentleman can bring up this matter during the consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I object for the present.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise to move to strike out the last word, because I want to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama something about the procedure. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama just what the procedure will be from this point on. As I understand it, his amendment is now germane, and the gentleman is going to offer the entire bill as one amendment?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And then proceed with general debate?

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is correct.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the gentleman know whether we will have a night session?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes. It is our intention to go on this evening and possibly to-morrow evening.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. On general debate only?

Mr. McDUFFIE. There are only two hours of general debate, and we expect to go on and finish this bill as soon as possible.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I ask whether there will be any recess for supper, or dinner? What is the purpose of the gentleman? To have us continue in session until we adjourn to-night or take a recess?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I thought we might continue here until a late hour, 10.30 or 11 o'clock, without a recess, and finish as much of the bill as possible.

Mr. STAFFORD. The purpose is to consider this bill under the 5-minute rule as soon as general debate is finished?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Without any recess?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. After the gentleman's amendment is offered and it is before the House, under the rule it will be read by titles, and then, as I understand, it is open to amendment under the rules of the House?

Mr. McDUFFIE. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to have the first reading of the amendment dispensed with?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have Title I read. It is not very long.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that, of course, the amendment must be read in full and by title when we come to the reading of the amendment for amendment under the 5-minute rule. Does the gentleman now wish to have Title I read?

Mr. McDUFFIE. We are going to consider the amendment by titles.

The CHAIRMAN. But there are two hours of general debate preceding the consideration of the amendment under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, with the understanding that it be printed in the RECORD at this point, as if read, I shall not object.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will report the entire amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McDUFFIE: At the end of page 43 insert the following:

"PART II

"TITLE I—COMPENSATION REDUCTION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

"COMPENSATION DEFINED

"SECTION 101. As used in this title, the term 'compensation' means any salary, pay, wage, allowance (except allowances for subsistence, quarters, heat, light, and travel), or other emolument paid for services rendered in any civilian or noncivilian office, position, employment, or enlistment; and includes the retired pay of judges, and the retired pay of all commissioned, warrant, enlisted, and other personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Lighthouse Service, and the Public Health Service; but does not include payments out of any retirement, disability, or relief fund made up wholly or in part of contributions of employees.

"SCHEDULE OF TEMPORARY REDUCTIONS

"SEC. 102. (a) During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, the compensation for each civilian and noncivilian office, position, employment, or enlistment in any branch or service of the United States Government or the government of the District of Columbia is hereby reduced as follows: Compensation at an annual rate of $1,000 or less shall be exempt from reduction; and compensation at an annual rate in excess of $1,000 shall be reduced by 11 per cent of the amount thereof in excess of $1,000.

"(b) For the purposes of determining the percentage of reduction under this section applicable to any office, position, employment, or enlistment, the compensation for which is calculated on a piecework, hourly, or per diem basis, the annual rate of compensation shall be held to be the total amount which would be payable for the regular working hours and on the basis of 307 working days, or the number of working days on the basis of which such compensation is calculated, whichever is the greater.

"EXEMPTIONS FROM REDUCTION

"SEC. 103. Section 102 of this title shall not apply to—

"(a) any office, position, employment, or enlistment the compensation for which is expressly fixed by international agreement, or

"(b) compensation paid under the terms of any contract in effect on the date of enactment of this act, if such compensation may not lawfully be reduced, or

"(c) any office the compensation of which may not, under the Constitution, be diminished, in the case of any incumbent, during the term for which he was elected or during his continuance in office, unless the application of such section to such office will not result in a diminution of compensation prohibited by the Constitution, or

"(d) any office, position, employment, or enlistment the compensation for which is adjustable to conform to the prevailing local rate for similar work; but the wage board or other body charged with the duty of making such adjustment shall immediately take such action as may be necessary to effect such adjustment, or

"(e) Commissioners of the United States Shipping Board, members of the Federal Farm Board (except the Secretary of Agriculture), members of the International Joint Commission, United States Section, or members of the Board of Mediation.

"GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS

"SEC. 104. In the case of a corporation the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States, the holders of the stock on behalf of the United States, or such persons as represent the interest of the United States in such corporation, shall take such action as may be necessary to apply the provisions of sections 101, 102, and 103 to offices, positions, and employments under such corporations and to officers and employees thereof.

"SUSPENSION OF SATURDAY HALF HOLIDAYS

"SEC. 105. (a) The provisions of the act entitled 'An act providing for Saturday half holidays for certain Government employees,' approved March 3, 1931 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 5, sec. 26a), shall be inoperative during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and the provisions of law amended by such act shall apply as if such act had not been enacted.

"(b) The provisions of the act entitled 'An act to provide a shorter work week for postal employees, and for other purposes,' approved February 17, 1931 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 83[illegible]), shall be inoperative during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, except in the case of employees of the Railway Mail Service, and the provisions of law amended by such act (except in so far as they relate to employees of the Railway Mail Service) shall apply as if such act had not been enacted.

"REMITTANCES FROM CONSTITUTIONAL OFFICERS

"SEC. 106. In any case in which the application of the provisions of this title to any person would result in a diminution of compensation prohibited by the Constitution, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept from such person, and cover into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, remittance of such part of the compensation of such person as would not be paid to him if such diminution of compensation were not prohibited.

"REDUCTIONS INAPPLICABLE WHEN COMMODITY PRICE LEVEL RISES

"SEC. 107. If at any time prior to June 30, 1933, the President finds that for a period of 120 days the average wholesale commodity price level is within 10 points as high as the average wholesale commodity price level of the year 1926, indicated by the figure 100 in the revised index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics ieffect, and upon the issuance of such proclamation to that effect, and upon the issuance of such proclamation the foregoing provisions of this title shall cease to be in effect.

"LIMITATION ON JURISDICTION OF COURTS

"SEC. 108. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of any suit against the United States or against any officer, agency, or instrumentality of the United States arising out of the application of any provision of this title, unless such suit involves the Constitution of the United States.

"PERMANENT SALARY REDUCTIONS

"SEC. 109. Beginning July 1, 1932, the salary of each of the members of the International Joint Commission, United States Section, shall be at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

"SEC. 110. Beginning July 1, 1932, the salaries of the commissioners of the United States Shipping Board, the members of the Federal Farm Board (except the Secretary of Agriculture), and the members of the Board of Mediation shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

"SEC. 111. Beginning July 1, 1933—

"(a) The salaries of the appointive members of the Federal Reserve Board, the commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and the commissioners of the United States Tariff Commission shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

"(b) The salaries of all judges (except judges whose compensation may not under the Constitution be diminished during their continuance in office), if such salaries are in excess of $10,000 per annum, shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

"APPROPRIATIONS IMPOUNDED

"SEC. 112. The appropriations or portions of appropriations unexpended by reason of the operation of this title shall not be used for any other purposes but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

"TITLE II—PROVISIONS AFFECTING PERSONNEL

"SUSPENSION OF PROMOTIONS AND FILLING OF VACANCIES

"SEC. 201. All provisions of law which confer upon civilian or noncivilian officers or employees of the United States Government or the municipal government of the District of Columbia automatic increases in compensation by reason of length of service or promotion are suspended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933; but this section shall not be construed to deprive any person of any increment of compensation received through an automatic increase in compensation prior to July 1, 1932.

"SEC. 202. No administrative promotions in the civil branch of the United States Government or the government of the District of Columbia shall be made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933: Provided, That the filling of a vacancy, when authorized by the President, by the appointment of an employee of a lower grade, shall not be construed as an administrative promotion, but no such appointment shall increase the compensation of such employee to a rate in excess of the minimum rate of the grade to which such employee is appointed unless such minimum rate would require an actual reduction in compensation. The President shall submit to Congress a report of the vacancies filled under this section up to November 1, 1932, on the first day of the next regular session. The provisions of this section shall not apply to commissioned, commissioned warrant, warrant, enlisted personnel, and cadets of the Coast Guard.

"SEC. 203. No appropriation available to any executive department or independent establishment or to the municipal government of the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, shall be used to pay the compensation of an incumbent appointed to any civil position under the United States Government or the municipal government of the District of Columbia which is vacant on July 1, 1932, or to any such position which may become vacant after such date: Provided, That this inhibition shall not apply (a) to absolutely essential positions the filling of which may be authorized or approved in writing by the President of the United States, (b) to temporary, emergency, seasonal, or cooperative positions, or (c) to commissioned, commissioned warrant, warrant, enlisted personnel cadets, and of the Coast Guard. The appropriations or portions of appropriations unexpended by the operation of this section shall not be used for any other purposes but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury, and a report of all such vacancies, the number thereof filled, and the amounts unexpended, for the period between July 1, 1932, and October 31, 1932, shall be submitted to Congress on the first day of the next regular session: Provided, That such impounding of funds may be waived in writing by the President of the United States in connection with any appropriation or portion of appropriation, when, in his judgment, such action is necessary and in the public interest.

"COMPULSORY RETIREMENT FOR AGE

"SEC. 204. On and after July 1, 1932, no person rendering civilian service in any branch or service of the United States Government or the municipal government of the District of Columbia who shall have reached the retirement age prescribed for automatic separation from the service, applicable to such person, shall be continued in such service, notwithstanding any provision of law or regulation to the contrary: Provided, That no such person heretofore or hereafter separated from the service of the United States or the District of Columbia under any provision of law or regulation providing for such retirement on account of age shall be eligible again to appointment to any appointive office, position, or employment under the United States or the District of Columbia: Provided further, That this section shall not apply to any person named in any act of Congress providing for the continuance of such person in the service.

"SEC. 205. The provisions of this part of this act providing for temporary reductions in compensation and suspension in automatic increases in compensation shall not operate to reduce the rate of compensation upon which the retired pay or retirement benefits of any officer or employee would be based but for the application of such provisions, but the amount of retired pay shall be reduced as provided in Title I.

"TEMPORARY REDUCTION OF TRAVEL ALLOWANCES

"SEC. 206. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933—

"(a) the traveling and per diem allowances provided for in sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the subsistence expense act of 1926, approved June 3, 1926 [U. S. C., Sup. V, title 5, §§ 823–826], shall not exceed the amounts of $5, $4, $6, and $5, respectively, in lieu of the amounts set forth in such sections;

"(b) all provisions of law which authorize the payment of mileage to officers of the services mentioned in the pay adjustment act of 1922 (U. S. C., title 37) are hereby suspended and in lieu thereof such officers shall be entitled to allowances for travel only as provided for civilian employees of the Government, and the subsistence expense act of 1926, as modified by this section, shall apply to such travel: Provided, That all appropriations available for the payment of such mileage during the fiscal year 1933 shall be construed as being available for the payment of the allowances herein provided;

"(c) the mileage allowance of Senators, Representatives in Congress, and the Delegate from Hawaii is reduced 25 per cent; the allowance to the delegate from Alaska provided by section 1 of the act of May 7, 1906, the allowance to the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands provided by section 8 of the act of July 1, 1902, and the allowance to the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico provided by section 36 of the act of March 2, 1917, are reduced by 25 per cent; and

"(d) the traveling allowances provided for in the act entitled 'An act reclassifying the salaries of postmasters and employees of the Postal Service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes,' approved February 28, 1925 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 633), shall not exceed $2 per day.

"OVERTIME COMPENSATION

"SEC. 207. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, no officer or employee of the Government shall be allowed or paid a higher rate of compensation for overtime work, for night work, or for work on Sundays and holidays. In so far as practicable, overtime work and night work shall be performed by substitutes in lieu of persons who have performed a day's work during the day during which the overtime work or night work is to be performed, and work on Sundays and holidays shall be performed by substitutes in lieu of persons who have performed a week's work during the same week.

"LIMITATIONS ON AMOUNT OF RETIRED PAY

"SEC. 208. (a) After the date of the enactment of this act no person holding a civilian office or position, appointive or elective, under the United States Government or the municipal government of the District of Columbia or under any corporation, the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States, shall be entitled, during the period of such incumbency, to retired pay from the United States for or on account of services as a commissioned officer in any of the services mentioned in the pay adjustment act of 1922 (U. S. C., title 37) at a rate in excess of an amount which when combined with the annual rate of compensation from such civilian office or position makes the total rate from both sources more than $3,000; and when the retired pay amounts to or exceeds the rate of $3,000 per annum such person shall be entitled to the pay of the civilian office or position or the retired pay, whichever he may elect. As used in this section, the term 'retired pay' shall be construed to include credits for all service that lawfully may enter into the computation thereof.

"(b) This section shall not apply to officers on the emergency officers' retired list created by the act of May 24, 1928, and shall not apply to any person retired for disability incurred in line of duty.

"PERSONNEL REDUCTIONS—MARRIED PERSONS

"SEC. 209. In any reduction of personnel in any branch or service of the United States Government or the District of Columbia, married persons (living with husband or wife) employed in the class to be reduced, shall be dismissed before any other persons employed in such class are dismissed, if such husband or wife is also in the service of the United States or the District of Columbia. In the appointment of persons to the classified civil service, preference shall be given to persons other than married persons living with husband or wife, such husband or wife being in the service of the United States or the District of Columbia.

"TEMPORARY ASSIGNMENTS IN POSTAL SERVICE

"SEC. 210. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, the Postmaster General may, when the interest of the service requires, temporarily assign any clerk to the duties of carrier or any carrier to the duties of clerk, and in an emergency may assign any post-office employee to the duties of a railway postal clerk, or any railway postal clerk to the duties of a post-office employee without change of pay-roll status.

"TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

"TRANSFER OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 301. Not to exceed 15 per cent of any appropriation for an executive department or independent establishment, including the municipal government of the District of Columbia, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1983, may be transferred, with the approval of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, to any other appropriation or appropriations under the same department or establishment, but no appropriation shall be increased more than 15 per cent by such transfers: Provided, That a statement of all transfers of appropriations made hereunder shall be included in the annual Budget for the fiscal year 1935, and a statement of all transfers of appropriations made hereunder up to the time of the submission of the annual Budget for the fiscal year 1934, and all contemplated transfers during the remainder of the fiscal year 1933, shall be included in the annual Budget for the fiscal year 1934.

"PHILIPPINE SCOUTS

"SEC. 302. The President is authorized at any time to disband the Philippine Scouts or to reduce the personnel thereof.

"VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

"SEC. 303. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the further development of vocational education in the several States and Territories,' approved February 5, 1929 (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 20, sec. 15a), not more than $1,500,000 is authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of such section for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934.

"(b) For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for each of the nine fiscal years thereafter, (1) the annual appropriations (for the purpose of cooperating with the States) provided for by sections 2, 3, and 4 of the act entitled 'An act to provide for the promotion of vocational education; to provide for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such education in agriculture and the trades and industries; to provide for cooperation with the States in the preparation of teachers of vocational subjects; and to appropriate money and regulate its expenditure,' approved February 23, 1917 (U. S. C., title 20, secs. 12–14, inclusive), for each year, shall be $300,000 (in the case of sec. 2), $300,000 (in the case of sec. 3), and $100,000 (in the case of sec. 4), less than the appropriation for the same purposes, respectively, for the year preceding such year, respectively; (2) the minimum allotment of funds to any State, under each of such sections, for each year, shall be $1,000 less than the minimum allotment for the year preceding such year, respectively; and (3) the additional appropriations (for the purpose of providing the minimum allotment to the States) provided for by such sections for each year, shall be $2,700 (in the case of sec. 2), $5,000 (in the case of sec. 3), and $9,000 (in the case of sec. 4) less than the appropriation for the same purposes, respectively, for the year preceding such year, respectively.

"(c) In lieu of the annual appropriations provided for in section 7 of such act of February 23, 1917 (U. S. C., title 20, sec. 15), for the Federal Board for Vocational Education there is authorized to be appropriated for such board, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for each fiscal year thereafter, not more than $200,000, for the purposes set forth in such section. With respect to any fiscal year prior to the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, the provisions of such section shall remain in effect.

"(d) For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for each of the nine fiscal years thereafter, the amount authorized to be appropriated under section 4 of the act entitled 'An act to extend the provisions of certain laws to the Territory of Hawaii,' approved March 10, 1924 (U. S. C., title 20, sec. 29), shall be $3,000 less than the amount authorized to be appropriated for the preceding fiscal year; and the amount authorized to be appropriated under section 1 of the act entitled 'An act to extend the provisions of certain laws relating to vocational education and civilian rehabilitation to Porto Rico,' approved March 3, 1931 (U. S. C., Sup. V, title 20, sec. 30), shall be $10,500 less than the amount authorized to be appropriated for the preceding fiscal year, and the amounts expended for each of the purposes set forth in such section shall be proportionately reduced.

"LIMITATIONS ON EXPENDITURES FOR PRINTING AND BINDING, PAPER, AND STATIONERY

"SEC. 304. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, not more than $9,000,000 shall be expended for printing and binding for the use of the United States and the District of Columbia done at the Government Printing Office, of which $2,000,000 shall be for printing and binding for the use of the legislative branch of the Government. The amount available hereunder for the executive departments and independent establishments, the judiciary, and the government of the District of Columbia shall be distributed by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget among the several departments and establishments, the judiciary, and the government of the District of Columbia as, in his judgment, the needs of the service may require. Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the discontinuance of any report or publication specifically required by law. This section shall not apply to printing and binding for the use of the Patent Office.

"SEC. 305. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, not more than $400,000 shall be expended for paper furnished by the Government Printing Office for the use of the several executive departments and independent establishments and the government of the District of Columbia. The amount available hereunder for the executive departments and independent establishments and the Government of the District of Columbia shall be distributed by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget among the several executive departments and independent establishments, and the government of the District of Columbia, as, in his judgment, the needs of the service may require. This section shall not apply to expenditures for paper used in the course of manufacture by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

"SEC. 306. During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933 (1) not more than $16,000 shall be available for expenditure for stationery for Senators and the President of the Senate, and for committees and officers of the Senate, (2) not more than $44,000 shall be available for expenditure for stationery for Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners, and for the committees and officers of the House of Representatives, and (3) each Senator, Representative, Delegate, and Resident Commissioner shall be allowed $90 for stationery allowance or commutation therefor, to be paid out of the sums provided in (1) or (2), as the case may be.

"WEST POTOMAC PARK HEATING PLANT

"SEC. 307. Until otherwise provided by law no further obligations shall be incurred under the appropriation of $750,000 for the construction of a heating plant in West Potomac Park, contained in the second deficiency act, fiscal year 1931.

"ARMY TRANSPORT SERVICE, NAVAL TRANSPORTATION SERVICE, AND PANAMA RAILROAD STEAMSHIP LINE

"SEC. 308. The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to discontinue the Army Transport Service. He shall transfer the sea-going vessels used in such service to the United States Shipping Board. The Secretary of War shall dispose of as much of the property of the United States (other than vessels) used in connection with such service as is not indispensable to the Army or the War Department, and shall take such action as may be necessary to discharge the obligations of the United States growing out of such service existing at the time of such discontinuance. Thereafter no part of appropriations heretofore or hereafter made shall be available for the continuance of such service, and appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations the expenditure of which is made unnecessary by this section shall not be expended but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

"SEC. 309. The Secretary of the Navy is authorized and directed to transfer the vessels Henderson, Chaumont, Kittery, Sirius, and Vega, together with any cargo vessels not in commission which are not indispensable to the naval service, to the United States Shipping Board. The Secretary shall discontinue the operation of that part of the naval transportation service now carried on with the use of such vessels and shall dispose of as much of the property used in connection therewith as is not indispensable to the Navy. The Secretary shall take such action as may be necessary to discharge the obligations of the United States existing at the time of such transfer growing out of the use of such vessels. Appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations, the expenditure of which is made unnecessary by this section, shall not be expended but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

"SEC. 310. No action shall be taken under the provisions of section 308 or 309 until the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, has negotiated contracts with private shipping interests for the performance of the services for which the vessels referred to were operated, under the terms of which, in the judgment of the President, such services will be performed efficiently, at reasonable charges, with accommodations substantially of equal class with those afforded by the services discontinued, and at less cost. Any such contract shall provide that the rates for Government passenger (including employees and their families) and freight business shall be at least 25 per cent less than the published conference rates for similar commercial passenger and freight business. Any such contract shall be renewable on the same terms, at the option of the Government, and the contract shall so provide.

"SEC. 311. The vessels transferred to the Shipping Board under sections 308 and 309 shall be disposed of in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of the merchant marine act, 1920 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 864), except that sums received from such disposition less expenses incurred under this section shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts. Between the time of transfer and the time of disposition of such vessels, the board shall provide for their care and maintenance, either by contract or otherwise, whichever will effect the greater economy.

"SEC. 312. The Panama Railroad Co. is hereby authorized and directed to discontinue the operation of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line and such company shall take such action as may be necessary to dispose of the vessels used by such line and to wind up its affairs. The Secretary of War is authorized and directed to take such action as may be necessary on his part to carry out the purposes of this section. No action shall be taken under the provisions of this section until contracts have been negotiated with private shipping interests for the performance of the services for the Government theretofore performed by the Panama Railroad Steamship Line, under the terms of which, in the judgment of the President, such services will be performed efficiently, at reasonable charges, with accommodations substantially of equal class with those afforded by the Panama Railroad Steamship Line, and at less cost. Any such contract shall provide that the rates for Government and the Panama Railroad Co. passenger (including employees and their families) and freight business shall be at least 25 per cent less than the published conference rates for similar commercial passenger and freight business. Any such contract shall be renewable on the same terms, at the option of the Secretary of War, and the contract shall so provide.

"SEC. 313. Under sections 308 and 309 neither the Secretary of War nor the Secretary of the Navy shall sell or otherwise dispose of docks, yards, wharves, depots, terminals or real estate in connection therewith, except that either may lease such properties for periods of not to exceed five years and at rentals which will provide a reasonable return on the cost thereof. The net proceeds from the sale or lease of property by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy under sections 308, 309, and this section shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"REORGANIZATION OF SHIPPING BOARD

"SEC. 314. (a) The United States Shipping Board shall be composed of four commissioners to be hereafter appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. One of such commissioners shall be appointed from the States touching the Pacific Ocean, one from the States touching the Atlantic Ocean, one from the States touching the Gulf of Mexico, and one from the States touching the Great Lakes, but not more than one shall be appointed from the same State. Not more than two of the commissioners shall be appointed from the same political party.

"(b) Terms of office of the first commissioners appointed under this section shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, one at the end of one year, one at the end of two years, one at the end of three years, and one at the end of four years after the date of the enactment of this act. The term of office of a successor to any such commissioner shall expire four years from the date of the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed, except that a commissioner appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term.

"(c) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a), the United States Shipping Board as constituted upon the date of the enactment of this act shall continue to function until the date of reorganization of the commission pursuant to the provisions of such subsection. The board shall be deemed to be reorganized upon such date as four of the commissioners appointed as provided in such subsection have taken office, and no such commissioner shall be paid salary, as such commissioner, for any period prior to such date.

"(d) This section shall be held to reorganize the United States Shipping Board, and, except as herein modified, all laws relating to such board shall remain in full force and effect, and no regulations, action, investigations, or other proceedings under any such laws existing or pending on the date of the enactment of this act shall abate or otherwise be affected by reason of the provisions of this section.

"(e) Whenever under existing law the concurrence of four or more of the commissioners is required, such requirement of law shall, after the reorganization of the board provided by this section, he held to be complied with by the concurrence of three commissioners.

"(f) After June 30, 1932, no officer or employee of the United States Shipping Board or the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation shall receive a salary at a rate in excess of $10,000 per annum. The provisions of Title I of this act shall not apply to any person whose compensation is reduced by reason of this subsection.

"(g) Two hundred thousand dollars of the unexpended balance of the allotment of $500,000 made available to the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation for experimental and research work, by the independent offices appropriation act, fiscal year 1930, and continued by subsequent appropriation acts, shall not be expended, but shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"(h) The sums available for expenditure, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, for personal services of employees of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation assigned to and serving with the United States Shipping Board are reduced by $167,000, from the pay roll of March 31, 1932, and the amounts of reduction applicable to the various bureaus shall be as follows: (1) Bureau of Research, $30,000, (2) Bureau of Law, $103,000, (3) Bureau of Traffic, $9,000, (4) Bureau of Construction, $5,000, and (5) Bureau of Operations, $20,000.

"(i) The United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation shall, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, transfer from the operating funds and cover into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts the sum of $1,938,240.

"INCREASES IN CERTAIN CHARGES AND FEES

"SEC. 315. After the date of the enactment of this act, the price at which additional copies of Government publications are offered for sale to the public by the Superintendent of Documents shall be based on the cost of printing and binding, plus 30 per cent, and such cost shall be in lieu of that prescribed in the public resolution approved May 11, 1922 (U. S. C., title 44, sec. 220).

"SEC. 316. After the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act (but in no event prior to July 1, 1932), the base fee of $25 provided by section 4934 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 35, sec. 78), to be paid upon the filing of each original application and upon each renewal application for patent, except in design cases, and on issuing each original patent, except in design cases, is hereby increased to $30.

"SEC. 317. Section 4934 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 35, sec. 78), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"'On filing each petition for the revival of an abandoned application for a patent, $10.'

"SEC. 318. The Secretary of Commerce shall make such charges as he deems reasonable for special statistical services; special commodity, technical, and regional news bulletins and periodical services; lists of foreign buyers, and World Trade Directory Reports, and the amounts collected therefrom shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"SEC. 319. Section 5 of the act entitled 'An act to establish in the Department of the Interior a Bureau of Mines,' approved May 16, 1910, as amended and supplemented (U. S. C., title 30, sec. 7), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 5. For tests or investigations authorized by the Secretary of Commerce under the provisions of this act, as amended and supplemented, except those performed for the Government of the United States or State governments within the United States, a fee sufficient in each case to compensate the Bureau of Mines for the entire cost of the services rendered shall be charged, according to a schedule prepared by the Director of the Bureau of Mines and approved by the Secretary of Commerce, who shall prescribe rules and regulations under which such tests and investigations may be made. All moneys received from such sources shall be paid into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.'

"SEC. 320. Section 8 of the act entitled 'An act to establish the National Bureau of Standards,' approved March 3, 1901, as amended and supplemented (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 276), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 8. For all comparisons, calibrations, tests, or investigations performed by the National Bureau of Standards under the provisions of this act, as amended and supplemented, except those performed for the Government of the United States or State governments within the United States, a fee sufficient in each case to compensate the National Bureau of Standards for the entire cost of the services rendered shall be charged, according to a schedule prepared by the Director of the National Bureau of Standards and approved by the Secretary of Commerce. All moneys received from such sources shall be paid into the Treasury to the credit of miscellaneous receipts.'

"SEC. 321. Sections 318, 319, and 320 shall take effect July 1, 1932.

"TRANSFER OF FISH-CULTURAL STATIONS TO STATES OR TERRITORIES

"SEC. 322. Upon the application of any State or Territory, the Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to transfer to such State or Territory, without cost, all right, title, and interest of the United States in any fish-cultural station or fish hatchery located in such State or Territory, together with all personal property used in connection therewith. If any such State or Territory shall cease at any time to use a station or hatchery so transferred, for fish-cultural purposes, or shall at any time permit its use for any other purposes, or shall attempt to alienate the station or hatchery, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

"TRANSFER OF AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS TO STATES OR TERRITORIES

"SEC. 323. Upon the application of any State or Territory, the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized and directed to transfer to such State or Territory, without cost, all right, title, and interest of the United States in any agricultural experiment station located in such State or Territory, together with all personal property used in connection therewith.

"RESTRICTIONS ON TRANSFER OF ARMY AND NAVY PERSONNEL

"SEC. 324. The President is authorized, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, to restrict the transfer of officers and enlisted men of the military and naval forces from one post or station to another post or station to the greatest extent consistent with the public interest.

"TITLE IV—REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

"DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SEC. 401. In order to further reduce expenditures and increase efficiency in government it is declared to be the policy of Congress—

"(a) to group, coordinate, and consolidate executive and administrative agencies of the Government, as nearly as may be, according to major purposes;

"(b) to reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head;

"(c) to eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort; and

"(d) to segregate regulatory agencies and functions from those of an administrative and executive character.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 402. When used in this title—

"(1) The term 'executive agency' means any commission, board, bureau, division, service, or office in the executive branch of the Government, but does not include the executive departments mentioned in title 5, section 1, United States Code.

"(2) The term 'independent executive agency' means any executive agency not under the jurisdiction or control of any executive department.

"POWER OF PRESIDENT

"SEC. 403. For the purpose of carrying out the policy of Congress as declared in section 401 of this title, the President is authorized by Executive order—

"(1) To transfer the whole or any part of any independent executive agency, and/or the functions thereof, to the jurisdiction and control of an executive department or another independent executive agency;

"(2) To transfer the whole or any part of any executive agency, and/or the functions thereof, from the jurisdiction and control of one executive department to the jurisdiction and control of another executive department; or

"(3) To consolidate or redistribute the functions vested in any executive department or in the executive agencies included in any executive department.

"SEC. 404. The President's order directing any transfer or consolidation under the provisions of this title shall also designate the records, property (including office equipment), personnel, and unexpended balances of appropriations to be transferred.

"SAVING PROVISIONS

"SEC. 405. (a) All orders, rules, regulations, permits, or other privileges made, issued, or granted by or in respect of any executive agency or function transferred or consolidated with any other executive agency or function under the provisions of this title, and in effect at the time of the transfer or consolidation, shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer or consolidation had not occurred, until modified, superseded, or repealed.

"(b) No suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against the head of any department or executive agency or other officer of the United States, in his official capacity or in relation to the discharge of his official duties, shall abate by reason of any transfer of authority, powers, and duties from one officer or executive agency of the Government to another under the provisions of this title, but the court, on motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after such transfer takes effect, showing a necessity for a survival of such suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, may allow the same to be maintained by or against the head of the department or executive agency or other officer of the United States to whom the authority, powers, and duties are transferred.

"(c) All laws relating to any executive agency or function transferred or consolidated with any other executive agency or function under the provisions of this title, shall, in so far as such laws are not inapplicable, remain in full force and effect, and shall be administered by the head of the executive agency to which the transfer is made or with which the consolidation is effected.

"STATUTORY AGENCIES

"SEC. 406. Whenever, in carrying out the provisions of this title, the President concludes that any executive department or agency created by statute should be abolished and the functions thereof transferred to another executive department or agency or eliminated entirely the authority granted in this title shall not apply, and he shall report his conclusions to Congress, with such recommendations as he may deem proper.

"DISAPPROVAL OF EXECUTIVE ORDER

"SEC. 407. Whenever the President makes an Executive order under the provisions of this title, such Executive order shall be transmitted to the Congress while in session and shall not become effective until after the expiration of 60 calendar days after such transmission: Provided, That if Congress shall adjourn before the expiration of 60 calendar days from the date of such transmission such Executive order shall not become effective until after the expiration of 60 calendar days from the opening day of the next succeeding regular or special session: Provided further, That if either branch of Congress within such 60 calendar days shall pass a resolution disapproving of such Executive order, or any part thereof, such Executive order shall become null and void to the extent of such disapproval.

"REPORT TO CONGRESS

"SEC. 408. The President shall report specially to Congress at the beginning of each regular session any action taken under the provisions of this title, with the reasons therefor.

"TITLE V—PUBLIC WORKS ADMINISTRATION

"CREATION AND ORGANIZATION

"SEC. 501. There is hereby created at the seat of Government an establishment to be known as the Public Works Administration. There shall be at the head of such administration an officer to be known as the Administrator of Public Works, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall hold his office for the term of six years. Such administrator shall receive a salary of $10,000 per year, payable monthly, and under the direction of the President shall have the control and management of the various bureaus, agencies, activities, and services that the President may under this title transfer to and consolidate in the Public Works Administration.

"CONSOLIDATION OF PUBLIC WORKS BY PRESIDENT

"SEC. 502. (a) The President is authorized, by Executive order, to transfer to the Public Works Administration, and to consolidate and coordinate therein, the whole or any part of all bureaus, agencies, offices, activities, and services, whether now existing in any executive department, independent establishment, or as an independent activity, having to do or that are concerned with the architectural, engineering, surveying, designing, drafting, construction, and/or purchasing activities of the Government relating to public works, and/or that are engaged in the making of plans, specifications, contracts, and/or the supervision of public construction, and the transfer of any activity to the Public Works Administration shall carry with it such property, fixtures, records, and files as may be necessary to the proper functioning of such activity under the administrator, but no provision of this act shall be construed to authorize any transfer, consolidation, coordination, or change in the duties and responsibilities of the Chief of Engineers, or of the Corps of Engineers, or of the officers of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, with respect to rivers and harbors, navigation, flood control, and other civil functions and activities, all of which shall remain as now provided for by existing law.

"(b) The Administrator of Public Works shall utilize the services of the Corps of Engineers, or the officers of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army, whenever and wherever practicable in all other public works, construction, and activities. The Secretary of War, upon the request of the Administrator of Public Works, may continue, as under existing law, to detail officers of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army for duty in such other public works, construction, and activities, to the end that the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army and the officers of the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army may be used whenever practicable in such other public works, construction, and activities, and when so detailed with the consent of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers shall be under the supervision and direction of the Administrator of Public Works.

"(c) The Bureau of Yards and Docks of the Navy Department shall remain as now provided by existing law, and no provision of this act shall be construed to authorize any transfer, consolidation, coordination, or change in the duties and responsibilities of the said bureau and the chief thereof, or the officers and engineers therein. The Secretary of the Navy, upon the request of the Administrator of Public Works, may detail officers and engineers of such bureau for other duties in such public works, constructions, and activities; and the Administrator of Public Works shall utilize the services of such officers and engineers whenever practicable; and when so detailed with the consent of the Secretary of the Navy the said officers and engineers shall be under the supervision and direction of the Administrator of Public Works.

"(d) All officers of the United States Army and/or Navy detailed as aforesaid to serve in the Public Works Administration shall retain their military and naval rank and succession and receive the compensation, commutation, and emoluments provided by law in the case of Army and/or naval officers of the same rank not detached from the regular service; and such payments shall be made out of funds appropriated for use of the Public Works Administration.

"(e) All strictly military, naval, and national-defense construction, improvement, maintenance, and administration shall be and remain in the Army and Navy under the Secretary of War and under the Secretary of the Navy, as now provided by existing law.

"(f) The provisions contained in this title shall not apply to the power and authority now vested in the Architect of the Capitol and the United States Supreme Court Building Commission.

"(g) All authority, power, and duties now vested by law in the head of any executive department, independent establishment, or office in and over any bureau, agency, office, officers, or branch of the public service, or in respect of any function or service transferred to the Public Works Administration under this title, or in or over any contract or business arising therefrom or pertaining thereto, shall be vested in and exercised and performed by the administrator.

"(h) All valid contracts and agreements entered into by any bureau, agency, office, officer, or branch of the public service, and in force at the time of transfer to the Public Works Administration, shall be assumed and carried out by the administrator.

"(i) Under the direction of the President, the Administrator of Public Works shall have the power, by order or regulation, to consolidate, eliminate, or redistribute the functions of the bureaus, offices, agencies, activities, and services transferred, under the provisions of this title, to the Public Works Administration and to create new ones therein, and, by rules and regulations not inconsistent with law, shall fix the functions thereof and the duties and powers of their respective executive heads.

"(j) No consolidation, elimination, redistribution, or coordination of the bureaus, offices, agencies, activities, or parts or functions thereof, as provided by this title shall be effected and no new ones shall be created under the authority of this title unless such action shall either in itself or in relation to the entire Public Works Administration be clearly productive of economy in public expenditures.

"(k) Whenever any Executive order of the President or any order or regulation of the administrator is issued under this section, the President shall thereupon transmit to the Senate and House of Representatives a copy of such order or regulation, except that if the Congress is not in session at the time of such issuance, then the copy of the order or regulation shall be transmitted at the commencement of the next regular or special session of the Congress. Unless an act disapproving the order or regulation issued is enacted within 60 calendar days after the receipt of the copy of the order or regulation by both Houses, the order or regulation issued shall take effect on the day following the expiration of such 60-day period. If the session during which the copy of the order or regulation is received terminates in less than 60 days after the receipt of the copy by both Houses, an act disapproving the order or regulation may be enacted at any time within 60 calendar days after the commencement of the next regular or special session of Congress, but if such an act is not enacted such order or regulation shall take effect on the day following the expiration of such 60-day period.

"APPOINTMENT OF EMPLOYEES

"SEC. 503. (a) The Administrator of Public Works may appoint, in accordance with the provisions of the civil service laws, from time to time such assistants, architects, engineers, and experts in design and drafting as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

"(b) The personnel on duty at the time of the transfer of any bureau, agency, office, activity, or service shall be transferred to and given appointment in the Public Works Administration, subject to such change in designation and organization and reduction in personnel, salary, classification, or otherwise, as the administrator may deem necessary.

"(c) Such of the employees as have a civil-service status at the time of transfer shall retain that status. The salaries of such employees shall be fixed in accordance with the classification act of 1923, as amended (U. S. C., title 5, ch. 13; U. S. C., Supp. V, title 5, ch. 13).

"EXISTING LAW AND REGULATIONS UNCHANGED

"SEC. 504. (a) All laws relating to such bureaus, agencies, offices, activities, and services as are transferred to the Public Works Administration, so far as the same are applicable, shall remain in full force and effect, except as herein modified, and shall be administered by the administrator.

"(b) All orders, rules, and regulations in effect with respect to any activity at the time it is transferred shall continue in force until modified, superseded, or repealed by the administrator.

"(c) All unexpended appropriations in respect of any bureau, agency, office, activity, or service transferred to the Public Works Administration shall be as available for expenditure by the Public Works Administration as though said administration had been originally named in the law authorizing such appropriations.

"SERVICES FOR OTHER DEPARTMENTS

"SEC. 505. (a) Whenever any executive department, independent establishment, or other agency or activity of the Government shall be in need of any service or matter coming within the purview of the functions of the Public Works Administration, such department, establishment, agency, or activity shall make appropriate request in writing to the Administrator of Public Works, who shall forthwith place his administration at the service of the department, establishment, agency, or activity making the request.

"(b) All estimates for public work and construction coming within the purview of the Public Works Administration at the time such estimates are made shall be made by the administrator and all appropriations for public work and construction shall be made directly to the administration: Provided, That said administrator shall make a book charge against the executive department, independent establishment, or agency of the Government covering the cost of any services, public work, or construction performed for such department, establishment, or agency. The amount thereof shall be reported promptly to the department, establishment, or agency for whom services, public work, or construction has been done, and such department, establishment, or agency shall enter the cost of such services, public work, or construction upon its books and the amount of such cost shall be treated as a part of its expenditures in making its annual report to the President and/or the Congress.

"MISCELLANEOUS

"SEC. 506. (a) Quarters for the Public Works Administration shall be provided by the Public Buildings Commission.

"(b) It shall be the duty of the administrator to standardize designs, plans, and specifications, so far as practicable and desirable, with a view to effecting the utmost economy consistent with suitable construction.

"(c) The administrator, at the close of each fiscal year, shall make a report in writing to the Congress, which shall be printed. Such report (1) shall give an account of all moneys received and disbursed by him and the administration, and shall state for what purpose and on whose account expenditures have been made; (2) shall describe in detail what has been done under section 502 of this title, and shall insert a chart showing the set-up of his administration; and (3) shall make such recommendations with respect to legislation and other matters as to him shall seem appropriate.

"(d) The Administrator of Public Works is authorized to make such rules and regulations, in accordance with law, as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this title into full force and effect.

"TITLE VI—NATIONAL DEFENSE REORGANIZATION ACT

SHORT TITLE

"SEC. 601. This title may be cited as the 'national defense reorganization act.'

"ESTABLISHMENT OF DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENSE

"SEC. 602. (a) There is hereby established at the seat of government an executive department to be known as the Department of National Defense, at the head of which shall be a Secretary of National Defense, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall receive the same compensation as other heads of executive departments.

"(b) There shall be in the Department of National Defense three Assistant Secretaries, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall perform such duties as may be required by law or prescribed by the Secretary of National Defense. The Assistant Secretaries shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum. The Assistant Secretaries shall be known, respectively, as the Assistant Secretary for the Army, the Assistant Secretary for the Navy, and the Assistant Secretary for Aviation.

"TRANSFER OF WAR AND NAVY DEPARTMENTS, AND COORDINATION OF ACTIVITIES

"SEC. 603. (a) The Department of War and the Department of the Navy and all that pertains thereto are transferred to the Department of National Defense, and the Department of War and the Department of the Navy shall cease to exist as separate executive departments.

"(b) The offices of Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy, Assistant Secretaries of War, and Assistant Secretaries of the Navy are abolished, and the functions, powers, and duties vested in and imposed upon such officers are hereby vested in and imposed upon the Secretary of National Defense.

"SEC. 604. The Secretary of National Defense is authorized—

"(a) For the purpose of perfecting the organization and coordinating the activities of the Department of National Defense (1) to consolidate, eliminate, or redistribute the functions of offices, bureaus, or agencies, to create new ones, and fix the powers, duties, and functions of their executive heads, and (2) to take such other action, not inconsistent with the provisions of this title, as he may deem necessary;

"(b) To consolidate or to coordinate the activities of the Air Corps of the Army and aviation units, services, and organizations of the Navy and Marine Corps; and

"(c) To recommend to Congress from time to time such legislation as he deems necessary to perfect such organization and coordination of the activities of the Department of National Defense, or of such consolidation or coordination of the Air Corps of the Army and aviation units, services, and organizations of the Navy and Marine Corps.

"MISCELLANEOUS

"SEC. 605. (a) The Secretary of National Defense shall cause a seal of office to be made for the department, of such device as the President shall approve, and judicial notice shall be taken thereof.

"(b) The administration of the Department of National Defense shall be governed by the laws in force with respect to the Department of War and the Department of the Navy at the time of their transfer under this title, in so far as such laws are not inconsistent with the provisions of this title and are not inapplicable.

"(c) All orders, rules, regulations, and permits or other privileges made, issued, or granted by or in respect of the Department of War or the Department of the Navy, and in effect at the time of the transfer of such departments under this title, shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer had not occurred, until modified, superseded, or repealed.

"(d) All unexpended appropriations in respect of the Department of War or the Department of the Navy shall be available for expenditure by the Department of National Defense and shall be treated as if the department had been originally named in the laws making the appropriations.

"TIME OF TAKING EFFECT

"SEC. 606. This title shall take effect upon the enactment of this act, except that sections 603 to 605, inclusive, shall take effect when the Secretary of National Defense and the Assistant Secretaries of National Defense have taken office.

"TITLE VII—PARTICULAR CONSOLIDATIONS EFFECTED

"BUREAU OF NAVIGATION AND STEAMBOAT INSPECTION

"SEC. 701. The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to consolidate and coordinate the Steamboat Inspection Service and the Bureau of Navigation of the Department of Commerce in a bureau in such department to be known as the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, to be under the direction of a chief of bureau who shall be appointed by the Secretary of Commerce.

"SEC. 702. (a) The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to transfer to the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection the records and property, including office equipment, of the Bureau of Navigation and the Steamboat Inspection Service.

"(b) The Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to transfer to such bureau such officers and employees of the Bureau of Navigation and the Steamboat Inspection Service as in his judgment are indispensable to the efficient operation of such bureau. Such transfer of officers and employees shall be without changes in classification or compensation, but the Secretary may make such changes in the titles, designations, and duties of the officers and employees transferred as he may deem necessary to carry out the purposes of sections 701 to 704, inclusive, of this title. The Secretary is authorized to dismiss such officers and employees of the Steamboat Inspection Service and the Bureau of Navigation as are not, in his judgment, indispensable to the efficient operation of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection.

"(c) The consolidation and coordination herein provided for shall be effected not later than July 1, 1932, and when the Secretary of Commerce declares such consolidation and coordination has been effected, the duties, powers, and functions vested in the Steamboat Inspection Service and the Bureau of Navigation shall be exercised by the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, and the Steamboat Inspection Service and the Bureau of Navigation shall cease to exist.

"SEC. 703. All proceedings, hearings, or investigations commenced or pending before the bureau and the service abolished shall be continued by the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection. All orders, rules, regulations, permits, licenses, enrollments, registrations, and privileges which have been issued or granted by the bureau and the service abolished and which are in effect shall continue in effect until modified, superseded, revoked, or repealed. All rights, interests, or remedies accruing or to accrue out of any provision of law or regulation relating to, or out of action taken by, the bureau and the service abolished shall be valid in all respects and may be exercised and enforced.

"SEC. 704. Appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations available for expenditure by the bureau and the service abolished shall be available for expenditure by the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection in the same manner as if such bureau had been named in the laws providing for such appropriations, except that such parts of such appropriations and such unexpended balances as may not be absolutely necessary for the purposes of such bureau shall not be expended but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

"TRANSFER OF PERSONNEL CLASSIFICATION BOARD TO CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION

"SEC. 705. The President is authorized, by Executive order, to transfer the duties, powers, and functions of the Personnel Classification Board to the Civil Service Commission, and upon the issuance of such order—

"(a) the Personnel Classification Board and the position of director of classification shall be abolished;

"(b) all records and property, including office furniture and equipment, of the board shall be transferred to the Civil Service Commission; and

"(c) such of the officers and employees of the board, as in the judgment of the President, are indispensable to the efficient operation of the Civil Service Commission, shall be transferred to such commission, and all other officers and employees of such board shall be dismissed.

"SEC. 706. Any transfer of officers or employees under section 705 shall be without changes in classification or compensation, but the President is authorized to make such changes in the titles, designations, and duties of such officers and employees as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of sections 705 to 708, inclusive, of this title.

"SEC. 707. (a) All orders, determinations, rules, or regulations made or issued by the Personnel Classification Board, and in effect at the time of such transfer, shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer had not been made, until modified, superseded, or repealed by the Civil Service Commission.

"(b) All provisions of law relating to the Personnel Classification Board and the director of classification shall continue in force with respect to the Civil Service Commission, in so far as such provisions of law are not inconsistent with the provisions of sections 705 or 706.

"SEC. 708. Such parts of appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations available for expenditure by the Personnel Classification Board as the President deems necessary shall be available for expenditure by the Civil Service Commission in the same manner as if such commission had been named in the laws providing for such appropriations, and the remainder of such appropriations and such unexpended balances shall not be expended but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

"INTERNATIONAL WATER COMMISSION ABOLISHED

"SEC. 709. The International Water Commission, United States and Mexico, American section, is hereby abolished. The powers, duties, and functions of such section of such commission shall be exercised by the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico, American section. This section shall take effect July 1, 1932.

"TRANSFER OF RADIO DIVISION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE TO THE FEDERAL RADIO COMMISSION

"SEC. 710. The President is authorized, by Executive order, to transfer the duties, powers, and functions of the Radio Division of the Department of Commerce to the Federal Radio Commission, and upon the issuance of such order—

"(a) the Radio Division shall be abolished;

"(b) all records and property, including office furniture and equipment, of the divisions shall be transferred to the Federal Radio Commission; and

"(c) such of the officers and employees of the division as, in the judgment of the President, are indispensable to the efficient operation of the Federal Radio Commission shall be transferred to such commission, and all other officers and employees of such division shall be dismissed.

"SEC. 711. Any transfer of officers or employees under section 710 shall be without changes in classification or compensation, but the President is authorized to make such changes in the titles, designations, and duties of such officers and employees as he may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of sections 710 to 713, inclusive, of this title.

"SEC. 712. (a) All orders, determinations, rules, or regulations made or issued by the Department of Commerce in respect of the Radio Division or by the Radio Division and in effect at the time of such transfer shall continue in effect to the same extent as if such transfer had not been made until modified, superseded, or repealed by the Federal Radio Commisson.

"(b) All provisions of law relating to the Radio Division shall continue in force with respect to the Federal Radio Commission in so far as such provisions of law are not inconsistent with the provisions of sections 710 or 711.

"SEC. 713. Such parts of appropriations and unexpended balances of appropriations available for expenditure by the Radio Division as the President deems necessary shall be available for expenditure by the Federal Radio Commission in the same manner as if such commission had been named in the laws providing for such appropriations, and the remainder of such appropriations and such unexpended balances shall not be expended but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

"TITLE VIII—INTERDEPARTMENTAL WORK

"SEC. 801. Section 7 of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, and for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes,' approved May 21, 1920 (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 686), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 7. (a) Any executive department or independent establishment of the Government, or any bureau or office thereof, if funds are available therefor and if it is determined by the head of such executive department, establishment, bureau, or office to be in the interest of the Government so to do, may place orders with any other such department, establishment, bureau, or office for materials, supplies, equipment, work, or services, of any kind that such requisitioned Federal agency may be in a position to supply or equipped to render, and shall pay promptly by check to such Federal agency as may be requisitioned, upon its written request, either in advance or upon the furnishing or performance thereof, all or part of the estimated or actual cost thereof as determined by such department, establishment, bureau, or office as may be requisitioned; but proper adjustments on the basis of the actual cost of the materials, supplies, or equipment furnished, or work or services performed, paid for in advance, shall be made as may be agreed upon by the departments, establishments, bureaus, or offices concerned. Bills rendered or requests for advance payments made pursuant to any such order shall not be subject to audit or certification in advance of payment.

"'(b) Amounts paid as provided in subsection (a) shall be credited, (1) in the case of advance payments, to special working funds, or (2) in the case of payments other than advance payments, to the appropriations or funds against which charges have been made pursuant to any such order, except as hereinafter provided. The Secretary of the Treasury shall establish such special working funds as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this subsection. Such amounts paid shall be available for expenditure in furnishing the materials, supplies, or equipment, or in performing the work or services, or for the objects specified in such appropriations or funds. Where materials, supplies, or equipment are furnished from stocks on hand, the amounts received in payment therefor shall be credited to appropriations or funds, as may be authorized by other law, or, if not so authorized, so as to be available to replace the materials, supplies, or equipment, except that where the head of any such department, establishment, bureau, or office determines that such replacement is not necessary the amounts paid shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"'(c) Orders placed as provided in subsection (a) shall be considered as obligations upon appropriations in the same manner as orders or contracts placed with private contractors. Advance payments credited to a special working fund shall remain available until expended.'

"SEC. 802. (a) Notwithstanding the provisions of this title, such section 7, as in force prior to the date of the enactment of this act, shall remain in force with respect to the disposition of funds transferred thereunder prior to such date.

"(b) Nothing in this title shall be construed to authorize any Government department or independent establishment, or any bureau or office thereof, to place any orders for material, supplies, equipment, work, or services to be furnished or performed by convict labor, except as otherwise provided by existing law.

"(c) The provisions of this title are in addition to and not in substitution for the provisions of any other law relating to working funds.

"TITLE IX—PROVISIONS APPLICABLE TO VETERANS

"GENERAL ADJUSTMENT OF VETERANS' BENEFITS

"SEC. 901. Notwithstanding the provisions of law in effect at the date of enactment of this act, except as to those persons who have attained the age of 65 years, or those persons who served in the active military or naval forces and who actually suffered an injury or contracted a disease in line of duty as a result of and directly attributable to such service, or those persons who, in accordance with the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, or the laws granting military or naval pensions, are temporarily totally disabled or permanently and totally disabled as a result of disease or injury acquired in, or aggravated by, active military or naval service, or those persons who while in the active military or naval service engaged in actual combat with, were under actual fire of, or served in the zone of active hostilities against, the armed forces of the enemy in any war in which the United States was engaged, no allowance, compensation, retired pay, pension, hospitalization or domiciliary care under the war risk insurance act, as amended, the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, the laws governing the granting of Army and Navy pensions, the laws governing the granting of domiciliary care by the Veterans' Administration, or the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, shall be payable or granted to any person whose net income as defined by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, was $1,500 or over, if single, and $3,500 or over, if married, for the year preceding the enactment of this act or the year preceding the filing of application for benefits, whichever is the later. The minimum amounts above specified shall be increased by $400 for each person dependent upon the applicant during the period prescribed. Such benefits shall not be paid or granted during any year following that in which the net income plus allowance for dependents exceeds the prescribed amounts: Provided, That irrespective of the income for a preceding year, upon submission of proof satisfactory to the administrator of reduction in income during the current year below the amounts specified herein, when prorated monthly, such benefits as may otherwise be authorized shall be allowable from the date of administrative determination. Payments of Government insurance, allowance, compensation, retired pay, or pension shall not be considered as income within the provisions of this section. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed, upon request, to transmit to the administrator a certificate containing the information required by the administrator to carry out the purposes of this section affecting each person who is applying for or receiving such allowance, compensation, retired pay, pension, hospitalization, or domiciliary care, and such certificate shall be conclusive evidence of the facts stated therein. As to allowance, compensation, retired pay, or pension being paid, or hospitalization or domiciliary care being furnished, at the date of enactment of this act, this section shall take effect six months after such date, and no continuance or granting of allowance, compensation, retired pay, pension, hospitalization, or domiciliary care shall thereafter be authorized except in accordance herewith. As to pending claims and claims filed after the date of enactment of this act, the provisions of this section shall take effect on such date: Provided, That this section shall not apply to such persons as are entitled to benefits described in this section on account of the death of any person who served in the active military or naval service.

"VETERANS IN INSTITUTIONS

"SEC. 902. The first two paragraphs of subdivision (7) of section 202 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 38, sec. 480), are hereby amended to read as follows:

"'Effective as of the first day of the third calendar month following the month during which this amendatory act is enacted, where any person shall have been maintained as an inmate of the United States Soldiers' Home, or of any national or State soldiers' home, or of St. Elizabeths Hospital, or maintained by the Veterans' Administration in an institution or institutions, for a period of 30 days or more, the compensation, pension, allowance, or retired pay under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, shall thereafter not exceed $20 per month so long as he shall thereafter be maintained: Provided, That if such person has a wife, a child or children, or dependent parent or parents, the difference between the $20 and the amount to which the veteran would otherwise be entitled except for the provisions of this subdivision may be paid to the wife, child or children, and dependent parent or parents in accordance with regulations prescribed by the administrator.

"'All or any part of such compensation, pension, allowance, or retired pay under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, of any mentally incompetent inmate of such institution may, in the discretion of the administrator, be paid to the chief officer of said institution to be properly accounted for and to be used for the benefit of such inmate: Provided, however, That in any case where the estate of such mentally incompetent veteran without dependents, derived from funds paid under the war risk insurance act, as amended, the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, the laws governing the granting of Army and Navy pensions, or the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, equals or exceeds $3,000, payment of compensation, pension, allowance, or retired pay shall be discontinued until the estate is reduced to $3,000, and this proviso shall apply to payments due or accruing prior or subsequent to the date of enactment of this amendatory act: Provided further, That if such person shall be discharged from such institution as competent, such sum shall be paid as is held in trust for him by the United States or any chief officer of an institution as a result of the laws in effect prior and/or subsequent to the enactment of this amendatory act: Provided further, That if in the judgment of the administrator a mentally incompetent person without dependents, receiving compensation, pension, allowance, or retired pay under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, requires institutional care for his mental condition and his guardian or other person charged with his custody refuses to accept or permit the continuance of the institutional care offered or approved by the administrator, compensation, pension, allowance, or retired pay under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, payable, shall not exceed $20 per month so long as the need for such institutional care shall continue. The administrator in his discretion, upon showing of proper treatment in a recognized reputable private institution, may waive the reduction provided by this subdivision.'

"EMERGENCY OFFICERS' RETIRED PAY

"SEC. 903. (a) In the administration of the act of May 24, 1928, entitled 'An act making eligible for retirement, under certain conditions, officers and former officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps of the United States, other than officers of the Regular Army, Navy, or Marine Corps, who incurred physical disability in line of duty while in the service of the United States during the World War' (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 38, secs. 581 and 582), no officer or former officer shall receive retired pay thereunder, unless he served as a member of the Military or Naval Establishment between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, inclusive, and within such period actually contracted a disease or suffered an injury in line of duty as the result of and directly attributable to such service, or unless he served a period of 90 days or more between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, inclusive, and actually contracted a disease or suffered an injury in line of duty as the result of and directly attributable to service between November 12, 1918, and July 2, 1921, inclusive, and unless he has been or is found by the former Veterans' Bureau or the Veterans' Administration to be not less than 30 per cent permanently disabled as a result thereof prior to May 24, 1928, or within one year thereafter, in accordance with the rating schedule and amendments promulgated pursuant to subdivision (4) of section 202 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 477), in force at that time, and unless he is found by the Veterans' Administration to be not less than 30 per cent permanently disabled at the time of the enactment of this act under such rating schedule as amended and in effect at the date of the enactment of this act: Provided, That no person shall be retired without pay except in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this section, except that the degree of disability required for retirement without pay shall be less than 30 per cent and more than 10 per cent permanent disability.

"(b) The Veterans' Administration is hereby authorized and directed to review all claims heretofore filed under the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, and to remove from the rolls of retired emergency officers the names of such officers as are not found to be entitled to retirement under subdivision (a) of this section. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is further authorized and directed to cause to be certified to the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, as the case may be, the names of those officers who are removed from the rolls, and the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized and directed to drop from the emergency officers' retired list and the Army and Navy registers the names of such officers. Payment of emergency officers' retired pay, in the case of any officer whose name is removed from the rolls or transferred to the list of those retired without pay by reason of the provisions of this section, shall cease on the first day of the third calendar month following the month during which certification or transfer is made, as the case may be. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to transfer the name of each officer removed from the rolls of those entitled to emergency officers' retired pay, to the compensation rolls of the Veterans' Administration, and to pay, commencing with the first day of the third calendar month following the month during which certification is made by the administrator of the name of the officer removed from the rolls, as herein provided, compensation in accordance with the provisions of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, notwithstanding that no previous application for compensation has been made.

"(c) The review of all claims authorized and directed under subdivision (b) of this section shall be final, except for one reconsideration. No rerating or review shall thereafter be authorized in such claims.

"(d) After the expiration of one year following the enactment of this act no review, appeal, or other consideration shall be authorized in connection with any claim for emergency officers' retirement upon which a decision has at any time been rendered by the Veterans' Administration or Bureau.

"(e) No person shall be entitled to benefits under the provisions of this section, except he shall have made valid application under the provisions of the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928.

"(f) All provisions of the emergency officers' retirement act of May 24, 1928, in conflict with or inconsistent with the provisions of this section are hereby modified and amended to the extent herein specifically provided and stated as of the date of enactment, May 24, 1928.

"REPEAL OF PER DIEM ALLOWANCES

"SEC. 904. Section 203 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 38, sec. 492), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 203. That every person applying for or in receipt of compensation for disability under the provisions of this title and every person applying for treatment under the provisions of subdivisions (9) or (10) of section 202 hereof, shall, as frequently and at such times and places as may be reasonably required, submit himself to examination by a medical officer of the United States or by a duly qualified physician designated or approved by the administrator. He may have a duly qualified physician designated and paid by him present to participate in such examination. For all examinations he shall, in the discretion of the administrator, be paid his reasonable traveling and other expenses. If he shall neglect or refuse to submit to such examination, or shall in any way obstruct the same, his right to claim compensation under this title shall be suspended until such neglect, refusal, or obstruction ceases. No compensation shall be payable while such neglect, refusal, or obstruction continues, and no compensation shall be payable for the intervening period.'

"LIMITATION OF RETROACTIVE BENEFITS

"SEC. 905. Section 205 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 494), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 205. The Veterans' Administration may at any time review a claim for benefits under this act, or the laws governing the granting of Army and Navy pensions, and in accordance with the facts found and the law applicable, award, end, diminish, or increase allowance, compensation, or pension, but no allowance, compensation, or pension shall be awarded as a result of such review for any period more than six months prior to date of administrative determination. Where the time for appeal prescribed by regulations has expired a claimant may make application for review upon the evidence of record at the time of the last adjudicatory action but no allowance, compensation, or pension, or increased allowance, compensation, or pension, as a result of such review, shall be awarded for any period more than six months prior to date of application. No review of any claim shall be made except as provided herein. Except in cases of fraud participated in by the beneficiary, no reduction in allowance, compensation, or pension shall be made retroactive, and no reduction or discontinuance of allowance, compensation, or pension shall be effective until the first day of the third calendar month next succeeding that in which such reduction or discontinuance is determined. The proviso in the paragraph under the heading "Pension Office" in the act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply further urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1894, and for prior years, and for other purposes," approved December 21, 1893 (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 56), is hereby repealed: Provided, That as to those persons who served in the active military or naval forces and who actually suffered an injury or contracted a disease in line of duty and as the result of and directly attributable to combat with the enemy during war service, the limitations of this section shall not apply.'

"TRANSFER FROM COMPENSATION TO PENSION ROLLS

"SEC. 906. The first paragraph of section 200 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 38, sec. 471), is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following:

"'Provided further, That where no active military or naval service was rendered between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, no compensation shall be payable for disability or death resulting from injury suffered or disease contracted during active service in an enlistment entered into after November 11, 1918, or for aggravation or recurrence of a disability existing prior to examination, acceptance, and enrollment for service, when such aggravation was suffered or contracted in, or such recurrence was caused by, the active military or naval service in an enlistment entered into after November 11, 1918: Provided further, That the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to transfer to the general pension rolls for the Regular Establishment the names of those persons in receipt of compensation who, by reason of the enactment of this amendatory act are no longer entitled to compensation, and to pay such persons pension in accordance with the rates provided for under the general pension laws, but this transfer shall not take effect until six months following the date of the enactment of this amendatory act: Provided further, That this act, as amended, and the laws governing the granting of Army and Navy pensions shall not be construed to deny the right of any person to receive pension on account of active military or naval service subsequent to November 11, 1918: Provided further, That the provisions of section 602 of this act, as amended, shall not be construed to authorize the payment of compensation contrary to the provisions of this amendatory act.'

"TESTIMONY IN SUITS UPON INSURANCE CLAIMS

"SEC. 907. The first paragraph of section 19 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 38, sec. 445), is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following:

"'Provided further, That in any suit tried under the provisions of this section the court shall not receive, admit, or entertain the testimony of any person whose statement has not been submitted to the United States Veterans' Bureau or the Veterans' Administration prior to the denial of the claim sued upon, and the date of issuance of the letter of disagreement required by this section shall be the date of denial of the claim, except that if in a preliminary proceeding prior to trial of the claim sued upon, it is shown by the plaintiff to the satisfaction of the court that relevant and material testimony is available from any person whose statement has not been submitted to the United States Veterans' Bureau or the Veterans' Administration prior to the denial of the claim sued upon, the court shall stay all proceedings in the suit until the statement of such person is submitted to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs who shall cause the claim to be immediately reviewed, and in case the administrator allows such claim, the suit shall be dismissed, but if the administrator disallows the claim, such person may be a witness in the trial of the cause: Provided further, That the last preceding proviso shall apply to all suits pending on the date of the enactment of this amendatory act against the United States under the provisions of the war risk insurance act, as amended, or this act, as amended.'

"REVIVAL OF GOVERNMENT INSURANCE RESTRICTED

"SEC. 908. Sections 305 and 309 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., Supp. V, title 38, secs. 516, 516b), are hereby repealed as of the date of their enactment, and notwithstanding the provisions of section 602 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 571), no additional payments shall be made under such sections or the third proviso of section 408 of the war risk insurance act, as amended, except to those persons actually receiving payments on the date of enactment of this act, or in those claims where, prior to the date of the enactment of this act, it has been determined by the Veterans' Administration that all or part of the insurance is payable under such sections and the interested person or persons entitled thereto have been informed of such determination: Provided, That where a beneficiary receiving insurance payments under such sections dies and there is surviving a widow, child or children, or dependent mother or father, of the veteran, the remaining unpaid installments shall be paid to the following permitted class of beneficiaries in the following order of preference: (1) To the widow of the veteran if living at date of death of the beneficiary; (2) if no widow, then to the child or children of the veteran, share and share alike; (3) if no wife, child, or children, then to the dependent mother of the veteran; (4) if no wife, child or children, or dependent mother, then to the dependent father of the veteran, but no payments under this proviso shall be made to the heirs or legal representatives of any beneficiaries in the permitted class who die before receiving the monthly installments to which they are entitled, and the remaining unpaid installments shall be paid to the beneficiary or beneficiaries in the order of preference prescribed in this proviso: Provided, That this section shall not be construed to affect any claim wherein it is determined by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs that the insured actually contracted disease or suffered injury in line of duty between April 6, 1917, and November 11, 1918, inclusive, as the result of and directly attributable to actual combat with the enemy during war service, and as the result of such disease or injury, dies or has died or becomes or has become permanently and totally disabled, and as to those cases adjudication shall be made under the law in effect prior to the enactment of this act, in the same manner as if this act had not been enacted, except that the first proviso of section 305 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended, limiting the class of beneficiaries, shall be applicable to any case payable under this section: Provided further, That the uncollected compensation available under the provisions of the law in effect prior to the enactment of this act must be based upon disease or injury as described in this section.

"LIMITATION UPON ATTORNEYS' FEES IN INSURANCE SUITS

"SEC. 909. The proviso preceding the last sentence in section 500 of the World War veterans' act, 1924, as amended (U. S. C., title 38, sec. 551), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'Provided, however, That wherever a judgment or decree shall be rendered in an action brought pursuant to section 19 of Title I of this act the court, as a part of its judgment or decree, shall determine and allow reasonable fees for the attorneys of the successful party or parties and apportion same if proper, said fees not to exceed 10 per cent of the amount found due under the judgment or decree and to be paid by the Veterans' Administration out of the payment made under the judgment or decree.'

"JOINT COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' LAWS

"SEC. 910. There is hereby created a joint congressional committee which shall be composed of three Members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Such committee shall conduct a thorough investigation of the operation of the laws and regulations relating to the relief of veterans of all wars and persons receiving benefits on account of service of such veterans and report a national policy with respect to such veterans and their dependents. The committee shall report to the Senate and House of Representatives not later than February 1, 1933, the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable.

"The committee is authorized to sit and act, whether or not the Senate or House of Representatives is in session, at such times and places as it may deem advisable, and to call upon various departments of the Government for such information and for such clerical assistance as may be necessary, using the services of employees on the Government pay roll.

"TITLE X—SPECIAL PROVISIONS

"SEPARABILITY CLAUSE

"SEC. 1001. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

"SUSPENSIONS AND REPEALS

"SEC. 1002. All acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with those provisions of this act which are of temporary duration are hereby suspended during the period in which such provisions of this act are in effect. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with those provisions of this act which are of permanent nature are hereby repealed to the extent of such inconsistency or conflict."

Mr. SIROVICH (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to dispensing with the first reading of the amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. The understanding is that the bill is going to be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the understanding.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the House should be advised when there is any change in a plan that the House has adopted. I was under the impression we were going to read this amendment so the committee could adjust itself and prepare for the general debate. If the gentleman from Alabama is going to proceed now, my suggestion to the gentleman is that it would be quite proper to finish general debate now, if that is what the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I have in mind going further than general debate to-day. I have in mind working this evening.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. All right; but it is hardly fair, after a long session, to commence title 1 of the amendment which means the very existence of hundreds of thousands of people.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I do not think so.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Of course, we differ there, and the gentleman is within his rights in differing from me; but I do not believe we ought to take that up to-day, and if the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH] withdraws his objection, I shall renew it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that such objection comes too late. The Chair had ruled.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WARREN). When the gentleman from New York asked unanimous consent to dispense with further reading of the bill the Chair thinks the RECORD will show that he asked if there was objection. The Chair heard none, and it was so ordered. It was understood by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that the amendment as a whole would be printed in the RECORD.

Therefore, any further objection, the Chair thinks, comes too late.

Under the rule the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] is recognized for one hour and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, the time having been allotted to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD], and each having one hour, will they yield half of their time to the opposition?

The CHAIRMAN. That is within the province of the two gentleman whom the gentleman from New York has mentioned.

Mr. SIROVICH. Could we find that out now?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not within the knowledge of the Chair. The Chair is unable to advise whom they are going to recognize.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman from Alabama yield for a question?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield for a question.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not he will yield some time to me for the purpose of yielding to some Members who are opposed to various parts of the bill, and are anxious to secure some time.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, it has never been the purpose of the committee or any member of the committee to deny the opposition an opportunity to be heard against this bill, and I shall yield time to the gentleman from Missouri for the purpose of having him express his opposition or doing as he pleases with such time as he may have.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman tell me how much time he will yield me?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Our idea is to yield half the time to the opposition to the bill. I think this would be perfectly fair.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Then the gentleman will yield one-half hour to me to dispose of as I see fit.

Mr. SABATH. There may be others who are opposed to some other propositions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Why does not the gentleman from Alabama yield one-half hour to the member of the committee in opposition to the amendment and let him use it? Then the gentleman has no responsibility in the matter.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I shall do that.

Mr. Chairman, I may not be able now to occupy more than 10 minutes in order that other proponents of the bill may be heard. Of course, within the limited time, it is absolutely impossible to cover the many subjects included in our program. I can only make a few general observations about the economy program without undertaking to deal singly or item by item with the provisions of the bill.

I doubt if any Member of this House, other than those who were members of this committee, has the slightest idea of the task and the overwhelming burden this committee assumed when it undertook to carry out your instructions. I doubt if there is anything as nearly impossible or as difficult as the one thing of withdrawing the strong arm of the Federal Treasury, which has been extended within the last 10 or 12 years in so many directions, touching almost every business and, indeed, touching even the social life of the citizens. It is practically impossible of accomplishment by a political body. People have grown used, if you please, to the benefits, the blessings, if we may call them that, which Uncle Sam has extended within this time.

The cost of government within the last 10 years has mounted $1,000,000,000. We are living now in times of great economic distress. Day after day we read in the press where men and women are marching almost in mob formation upon courthouses, upon capitols of States, demanding, if you please, that the cost of government be brought down.

Realizing the necessity of economizing, if our Nation is to stay on an even keel financially, your committee set about to do all it could in an intelligent way to present you certain proposals which might be immediately adopted and which will save the Treasury, not for 1945 but for the year 1933, approximately $200,000,000 if adopted. We have not covered the entire field; we have merely scratched the surface.

A committee several years ago under President Harding's administration undertook this same or a similar problem. After two years of hearings, going into this and that department, with a view of doing away with overlapping, and consolidating similar work in one agency, or by joining many agencies, finally made a report to this House after laboring for two years.

I mention that to give you an idea of the difficulties that we have had in the time the committee had to cover the entire field and bring to you a bill dealing with the entire consolidation of the Government.

We have brought you a bill which, of course, has been condemned from one end of the country to the other by certain minority organizations and high-powered propagandists who have flooded you with telegrams. The committee itself is not satisfied with the bill as a whole. In other words, no one of us agreed to all of its provisions. This happens in practically all bills presented. But we recognized that in these provisions there are many things that should have the attention of Congress, and we have brought them here in one bill for your consideration. It now becomes your responsibility.

Under the rule agreed upon by the House, let us hope we will not spend two weeks on the bill, let us hope that we will get through and do justice not only to the employees and the various agencies of the Government but justice to the Government and the taxpayers. [Applause.] Let us hope that we may get along and settle this problem one way or the other in two days.

I do not know what you will do with this bill, but your constituents will watch your vote on it. We have submitted the problem to you; and if you see fit to kick it out entirely, that is your responsibility, and you will then go home to answer your own constituents for your action on this floor. We do not say the bill is perfect, but it is the best we could do in the time allotted to us.

There have been certain organizations that have complained bitterly, more especially as to the question of the reduction of salaries. Labor organizations have even gone far enough to condemn certain persons of the committee, including myself, writing into our districts that we were hostile to labor by proposing a reduction of salaries; that we are setting an example or precedent on the part of the Government that will be followed by private industry everywhere, and that there is a principle involved rather than men's pay. You can not make me believe that. I believe the Federal employees are more interested in their pay than the preserving of a principle that makes the smaller-salaried man bear greater burdens.

Some newspapers of the country, and especially those in Washington, have vigorously protested the reduction of salaries of Government employees, and yet I dare say that every last one of them have reduced the salaries of their own employees. Of course, they wish every dollar possible expended in Washington, by the employees of the Government.

We are not legislating here for the benefit of any men or set of men. We are trying to speak for all the people, for the inarticulate masses of the country, some of whom have not got enough money to-day to send you a telegram. [Applause.] Personally, I refuse to be dictated to or wear the collar of any man or set of men. I never have done it, and it is too late now to begin. Remember, gentlemen, any man who has a job with Uncle Sam is fortunate indeed in these days of trial and stress.

I recognize there are lower salaries involved in the bill, but the cost of living has gone down more than we propose to reduce any salaries, and we do not propose to go below the thousand-dollar man. You say that that is a small salary. Indeed it is, but it is a much bigger salary than it was three years ago, and a man who could live upon it three years ago can live on a little bit less at a time like this, at least for one year. I am glad to say that notwithstanding the many protests we have had, we have also received some wonderful letters from employees, patriotic men and women, if you please, who say that if the Government needs a small part of their salary at a time like this they are perfectly willing to give it to the Government. That is the proper kind of spirit to show, rather than seek condemnation of the committee for suggesting a small sacrifice in the hour of their country's need. I am not here to legislate for minorities.

My personal opinion is that the highly paid and high-powered propagandists, the organized minorities, the bureaucrats have almost destroyed representative government in this country. [Applause.] What are you going to do about it? If your business income is cut in two, what course should you follow? If in your own home you have many servants highly paid and your income is cut half in two, will you increase the servants and raise their salaries? No. The argument of some gentlemen here is that the way to prosperity is to engage more employees and pay them more. I can not follow that sort of reasoning. Acting as one of the directors, as we all are, of a great business concern, the United States Government, I feel differently. We must effect economies in government if we are to put our Government on a sound financial basis.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds will the gentleman permit me to make this suggestion? The gentleman from Alabama has only 30 minutes. I think we ought to have greater opportunity to discuss this matter under general debate. There are one or two features in the bill that I desire to discuss. I know that the gentleman from Alabama can not begin to cover the bill in 30 minutes. So far as I am concerned, provided the House will be a little generous with me when we come to one or two of these features under the 5-minute rule, I am quite willing not to take any time in general debate, so that the gentleman from Alabama may not feel it necessary to reserve any time for me. I am willing that he should take it all himself.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in the same situation as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]. My understanding is that certain time under general debate would be allotted to me for the purpose of explaining certain provisions of the amendment now under consideration. In view of the fact that 30 minutes is a very limited period in which the gentleman may attempt to explain the amendment, I take this occasion to cede to him any time that he might have allotted to me, provided when the particular sections that have been allotted to me here under discussion are reached under the 5-minute rule, there will be sufficient leniency with respect to time to permit me adequately to explain them.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I think two hours are altogether too short a time in which to discuss this bill under general debate; and before we get started upon it, I think that the time ought to be increased. I think the gentleman ought to have a full hour for himself, or even more, in which to explain the provisions of the amendment. I wish the gentleman in charge would ask unanimous consent to increase the time for general debate by three or four hours.

Mr. SABATH. That can not be done now.

Mr. BLANTON. We would have to rise to do that.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I am quite willing to do that. I do not want to be selfish or presumptuous. I hate to take any time. It is true that no one can cover this subject within a few moments. I do agree that we should have a little more time under general debate. However, if we are going to extend the time under the rules of the House to any great length, we will be here longer that we were on the tax bill, because I understand there are many who are opposed to various propositions in the bill.

I am not inclined to make the time any longer than is absolutely necessary. I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIROVICH], to ask me the question he had in mind.

Mr. SIROVICH. If I am interfering with the gentleman, I prefer to allow him to go ahead and I shall ask my question later.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I can not take this bill up section by section. The pay-cut plan as offered by the committee explains itself. It simply means that every man on the Government pay roll, without exception, shall have an exemption of $1,000 before the taxation of his salary is applied. After exempting $1,000, the committee decided the fairest and best plan was to apply a cut of 11 per cent. That does not hit the $1,000 man, even though he has a position with Uncle Sam, who is a great paymaster, and who gives him his sick leave and his annual leave. Under the committee plan, neither one of those leaves is disturbed.

The thousand-dollar man does not contribute a dime to his Government in taxation or otherwise. Personally I believe every citizen ought to contribute a little something to his Government. He becomes more interested in it. He realizes then how money gets into the Treasury. It is easy to get money out of the Treasury, but the great problem always confronting the Congress is how to replenish the Treasury. Be that as it may, the committee decided upon this plan even though there were those on the committee who, though opposed to a pay cut, thought it was and is the fairest and best plan. After the pay-cut plan we go to the other sections.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Why 11 per cent instead of 10 per cent?

Mr. McDUFFIE. It is the difference in the amount to be saved. Under that plan we save $67,322,000. A 10 per cent cut would reduce that probably $1,000,000 or more. Let us take the man who has a salary of $1,200, under the committee's plan he would give up $22 for the fiscal year 1933 only, the cut applying only to that year unless the Congress affirmatively decides otherwise. For the $1,800 man there is a tax of only $88 a year. Under the committee's plan you will note from the tables that the smaller-salaried man bears less burden than the high-salaried man. The higher the salary the greater the amount to be taken, while under the furlough system, or the staggering plan, the reverse is true—or was true before the plan was dressed by its proponents. However, the furlough plan takes more money in the long run from the employee. A majority of the employees, I believe, prefer the pay cut or the committee's plan to the furlough or staggering. "Staggering" is a very proper designation for that plan. Whatever you call it, it means a reduction in salaries. It can not be applied to the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. The House generally knows or understands the difference between the requirements of the bill and the President's ideas about salaries, but there were several other differences between the committee and the President. Does the gentleman know any place where those differences are printed so that we can get them and analyze them for ourselves?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does the gentleman mean as to salary reductions?

Mr. BRITTEN. Not only that, but as to other sections of the amendment.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I do not know. I have a print of the first suggestions of the President. Each member of the committee has one. There is a committee print of the President's salary-reduction plan that is available to every Member of the House.

Mr. BRITTEN. We have that, but I thought the gentleman had some other data showing the President's suggestions as compared with the suggestions which he is now presenting.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I have in my office one copy, and the members of the committee each have a copy, but there are not sufficient copies for all the Members of the House. I am not quite sure that certain Members of the House or the committee care to have the differences between the President's original plans and the committee's plans set out in the RECORD. The President's plan, in principle, if you please, with the exception of the pay cut and a few other items, is included in this bill. There were, of course, some changes. For instance, the President suggested that we cut out the Philippine Scouts or have the Philippine government pay that expense. We eliminated that item from the bill and authorized the President to disband the scouts, if necessary. He has that authority now, and can save $5,000,000 by disbanding the Philippine Scouts.

The President made the suggestion, if you wish it in detail, to cut out all the vocational education immediately. The committee decided otherwise.

Mr. BRITTEN. I would like to save some of the gentleman's time. Will the gentleman be good enough to insert in the RECORD the President's suggestions to-night, so that we may see those to-morrow?

Mr. McDUFFIE. The President's general suggestions have already been printed in the RECORD. I do not mind putting his detailed original suggestions in the RECORD, yet I would rather consult my Republican colleagues on the committee before I do that, and I think if the gentleman understood it, he would rather not do that. I wish to avoid partisanship in the consideration of this bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. I do not understand the President's suggestions were confidential in any sense.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Not at all.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The President's plan will be entirely presented befcre this evening is over.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman does not mean all that the President originally suggested to the committee, of course.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman does not mean everything the President suggested to the committee will be presented?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. No.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman refers to the President's views as included in this bill?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Now, Mr. Chairman, there are certain exemptions from this salary reduction. Compensation fixed by international treaty; compensation with reference to the terms of any contract in effect on the date of the enactment of this act, and any office, of course, which can not be reduced under the Constitution, and any one of the employees who is drawing an annuity from a fund contributed to exclusively by employees.

Section 104 is part of the plan. It simply directs the heads of corporations now organized and operated by the United States Government to carry out the salary-reduction theory.

Then comes the Saturday half holiday, and the provisions of the act with reference to employees. That does not affect the railway postal employees, because they are taken care of under a separate act. Then we made some permanent salary reductions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

There is no pleasure in doing what we have done. Whatever we do would hurt some one. Whatever we do is going to affect or will be felt by everybody on Uncle Sam's pay roll—the Congressmen themselves, their employees, their mileage, their stationery. We have tried to go all down the line from the President. Of course, we could not reach the President's salary, but we have provided that those who can not be reached under the Constitution could contribute such of their salary as they may see fit, and the Treasury of the United States is authorized to accept it.

There are some very excellent gentlemen holding high places in Washington. The question came up as to whether all salaries should be reduced. If you could see the letters which have come to my desk and the telegrams which have poured into this committee from all over the country, you would become convinced that the people of this Nation are thoroughly interested in the reduction of Federal salaries. Some go far enough to say, "Cut them in half." People talk about bureaus and commissions. The average man, unless he has had much contact with them, does not always understand what those terms mean, and does not know in detail what these bureaus or commissions are doing, but every man and every taxpayer knows something about salaries, and when we talk about reducing salaries, then he understands what we are doing for him. If we do not reduce salaries at this session of Congress in some reasonable way, my prediction is that in the next session of Congress salaries will be reduced even more than they probably should be reduced.

I do not look for flush times immediately. God knows I hope for them and long for them, but I do believe that for a period of years we will not return to that heyday of prosperity that existed in 1929. Therefore I say, if matters grow worse, there will be such demand in this country for a reduction of everything in the way of Government expenses that this Congress will be forced to do more than it wishes to do when it comes to the reduction of salaries.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield for just a question.

Mr. MAY. Is it not a fact that the telegrams and letters the gentleman is receiving, like the letters and telegrams the rest of us are receiving, are more directed at the cost of government without particular reference to salaries than they are directed to salaries in particular?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I was speaking of the telegrams and letters I received. Most of these letters urge a reduction in salaries.

Mr. MAY. And many of them likewise complain against the multiplicity of bureaus and boards.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes; I understand. It is not altogether a question of urging a reduction in salaries; one question for you is how you are going to do it? The President's plan, the staggering plan, the furlough plan, or whatever you choose to call it, means a cutting of salaries.

These very people who are crying out against the principle of cutting Government salaries, if you please, know that practically 90 per cent of the industries of this country have reduced salaries. The churches, schools, States, counties, even the nurses in the hospitals of the country, have suffered a reduction in salary. The largest body of laboring men in America, 2,000,000, the railway laborers, accepted a 10 per cent reduction in pay.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. For a question only.

Mr. BLANTON. And the employees of the Government prefer the committee's plan to the furlough plan of the President. Is not that so?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I do not know that I can answer that question.

Mr. BLANTON. All of those I have heard from prefer the committee plan.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I think the $1,200 man invariably prefers taking a cut of $22 instead of a cut of $100.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield myself the remaining five minutes.

Mr. Chairman, we have provided also for charges for certain services rendered in certain departments in the hope that we might make those activities more self-sustaining. We have provided that the Bureau of Standards and the Bureau of Patents may make charges for special services, and we have made a similar provision for the Department of Commerce, where they gather statistics for certain organizations throughout the country. We need that revenue as a part of the economies of Government and expect that for the year 1933 it will amount to $725,000.

We have provided for a few consolidations. In addition to that, we have granted the President of the United States, at his suggestion, authority by Executive order to reorganize the entire Government by consolidations, not by the changing of statutes, of course, or by abolishing anything created by statute. That authority can only be delegated by Congress; but he is given broad powers. Yet either House of Congress may veto his order. There are many things he has indicated to the committee that he could do within 30 days and effect great savings. Therefore, I hope this bill will be passed and will reach him in time for his suggestions to reach the House for its approval so as to save money for the year 1933.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Just for a question.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman give the House some explanation for the radical proposal to give a Cabinet officer the authority to consolidate the Army and the Navy, to create and expand, as well as to eliminate and consolidate?

Mr. McDUFFIE. That explanation will be given by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] before the bill is voted upon. The gentleman from Wisconsin sat on the committee considering that question for some time. The gentleman is opposed to consolidation of the Army and Navy, but the gentleman heard practically only those who were in the Army and the Navy and those connected with them, who always have been and always will be opposed to it. [Applause.] There is but one thing for us to do, and that is for this Congress to assert itself if it believes it can, and place these two great arms of the Government under one executive head without impairing the national defense.

Mr. CLANCY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I yield.

Mr. CLANCY. Is it true that the committee is bringing in an amendment compelling the sale of docks and piers in the port of New York?

Mr. McDUFFIE. The committee decided that the transport service of the Army and the Panama Canal Railroad Co. might well be dispensed with for two reasons. One is that we believe private interests can do that work as cheaply or more cheaply than the Government is now doing it. The other is we have to have a merchant marine upon which we are spending millions. This service will be helpful to the merchant marine, the operators, and owners of which are taxpayers of this Government, who help to pay for the Army and Navy transport service. We are the only great Nation on earth that maintains such a service.

In other words, the principle is that if private enterprise can do anything as cheaply or more cheaply than the Government can do it, that private enterprise should have the opportunity to perform the service. The amendment which the gentleman speaks of was adopted by the committee, and it provides that no docks or piers can be disposed of by any executive head of this Government or the President himself without authority of the Congress.

Now, gentlemen, we are building a great heating and lighting plant in the District of Columbia. The Treasury Department is building one that will cost about $5,000,000. The Treasury Department, through its experts, says that one plant can serve the entire city. However, provision was made some time ago for an additional plant called an auxiliary plant, to be constructed near the Munitions Building, at a cost of $750,000. There was a difference of opinion in the War Department, and it became a question of policy and judgment on the part of this committee, and the committee thinks that if one large plant can heat all the buildings, it would be unwise to spend $750,000 to build an auxiliary plant. So we have suspended for 1933 the amount to be carried for that item. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I want to talk for just a minute about the Panama Railroad situation. At the request of the Secretary of War and the then chairman of the Military Subcommittee I became a director of the Panama Railroad three or four years ago. I have watched its operations pretty closely ever since.

The Panama Railroad carries most of our stuff down to the Canal Zone in four ships that are operating between the port of New York and the Canal Zone. This line was started in 1854, and it has operated continuously since 1894. Of course, the railroad company runs a lot of other things besides the steamships. The steamships of the railroad company, operating along through the years, have shown a profit when you come to consider their operation on the basis of rates that are charged by other concerns. The total profit has averaged over the last five years $441,000. If, on the other hand, instead of figuring on that basis we figure on the basis of the actual receipts and disbursements—and, mind you, the steamship line gives the Government a rate 25 per cent below the regular tariff rates, and they carry the Panama Canal and Panama Railroad employees and their families back and forth to the port of New York for $30 each way. It is absolutely necessary that those employees, if they are to continue efficient, shall have a chance to come north into a better climate.

The total operations, beginning in 1919, have shown a loss of $49,000 based on cash receipts over those 13 years, a very insignificant amount.

By this bill it is proposed that the President obtain a contract from private shippers so that we can tell what the private shippers will charge before the proposed law goes into effect. It is also provided that they be required to give a discount of 25 per cent below published tariffs in transporting employees. That would mean carrying them for from $70 to $75, and it means that they practically can not afford to come to the United States; it means an extra burden on them and practically cuts out that trip for them.

It is absolutely necessary, I say, to have them make this trip north if they are to continue efficient.

The concerns in whose interest this provision is put in the bill are the United Fruit Line, the Grace Co., the Colombian Steamship Line, the American Line, the Steamship Corporation, and a number of others. These lines are now operating on a mail subsidy from the United States upon which they will be paid in 1932, $7,333,000. In 1933, $9,383,000 will be paid; and these lines hold construction loans from the United States Government amounting to $56,000,000.

Why should we pay more or force our employees to pay more when in normal times we can operate these lines and break even? Why should we not keep these ships and keep them running so we can have the facilities and take care of our situation? During the war there were no private ships down there, and in other normal times there have not been many, until the subsidy proposition went into effect, and that subsidy is costing the Treasury of the United States more than ten times every year to operate those ships than the total loss altogether ever was.

It is absolutely ridiculous, it seems to me, to abolish these lines at this time and put an additional burden on the Treasury and on the employees of the Panama Canal and the Panama Railroad.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by putting in tables showing the details of the statements I have made to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WOODRUM). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Net revenue of Panama Railroad Steamship Line, without taking into consideration the savings to the Government effected by carrying Government freight and passengers at rates from 25 to 80 per cent below tariff, estimated over this period to be about $10,000,000

Year	Profit	Loss
1919	$3,126,000
1920		$118,000
1921		629,000
1922		719,000
1923		369,000
1924		559,000
1925		198,000
1926		285,000
1927		49,000
1928	102,000
1929	47,000
1930		153,000
1931		245,000
Total for 13 years	3,275,000	3,324,000
		3,275,000
Net loss, actual cash		49,000

The report of the Committee on Economy states that discontinuance of the line will result in a saving to the Government of about one-half million dollars a year, and also, that in order to exist, it must take over a million dollars a year purely private business from private lines. These are deliberate misstatements, as is shown by the statistics below, setting forth the operations of the steamship line during the poorest period of its operations. The statement relative to savings is ridiculous, for the steamship line receives absolutely no appropriations from Congress and is actually a source of economy to the Government.

Fiscal year	Gross revenue plus savings by carrying Government business below tariff rates	Gross operating expenses including depreciation	Total net profits	Capital investment of steamers less accrued depreciation	Per cent of return on investment
1927	$2,511,000	$2,076,000	$435,000	$1,890,000	23
1928	2,768,000	2,188,000	580,000	1,726,000	33
1929	2,645,090	2,090,000	555,000	1,595,000	35
1930	2,382,000	2,010,000	372,000	1,475,000	25
1931	2,024,000	1,763,000	261,000	1,398,000	19
Annual average over period	2,466,000	2,025,000	441,000	1,617,000	27

NOTE.—The gross revenue includes business to South America, averaging about $400,000 annually, which in December, 1931, was given up for the benefit of American steamship lines.

Abandonment of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line will have serious effects upon the operation of the canal; one of these will be increased costs. The latest attempt of private steamship lines to discontinue or to curtail the activities of the Panama Railroad Steamship Line, whose operations during the construction of the canal, as now, have resulted in saving the Government many millions, should be bluntly frustrated.

Additional expenditures will be incurred by the Government if the Panama Railroad Steamship Line and the Army Transport Service are discontinued.

Real economies can be effected by reducing ocean mail subsidies and ship-construction loans to private steamship interests.

Details on ocean mail subsidies and ship-construction loans

	Mail subsidies		Construction loans
	1932	1933
Lines operating to Panama and Haiti:
United Fruit Co	$699,640	$1,483,112	$15,412,800
Grace Lines	2,187,378	2,452,474	14,739,806
Colombian Steamship Line	204,940	524,710	3,614,500
American Line Steamship Corporation	418,496	418,496	10,943,500
Miscellaneous	957,536	1,048,586
Other lines operating in the Caribbean	2,805,557	3,456,522	11,439,383
Grand total for Caribbean	7,333,547	9,383,900	56,149,989
Lines operating in the Pacific	6,616,758	6,971,692	28,778,920
Panama Railroad Steamship Line	Nothing.	Nothing.	Nothing.
Appropriations by Congress for Panama Railroad Steamship Line	Nothing.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. SCHAFER. If the private shipowners who are trying to get control of the Panama Steamship Line and the Army and Navy transport system in the name of a poor, battered Treasury would bend their efforts to removing the burden on that Treasury of more than ten times the cost of said services in the way of subsidies to their steamship companies, they would be in a better position to come to Congress with clean hands. They might then talk about economy in the name of reducing Government expenditures.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five minutes.

Mr. Chairman, while in agreement with members of the committee on many important items, I am in disagreement with the committee in reference to the items that affect the personnel of the Government and also in reference to some of the items that affect the veterans.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MCDUFFIE] spoke of salary reductions. When you come to think of salary reductions I ask you to please examine this bill. It perhaps would not be so bad if you reduced the salary of Government employees, especially those that could stand a cut, but this bill goes far beyond a simple reduction of salary. Let me call your attention to what you will find within the pages of this bill.

First, there is the salary-reduction plan of the gentleman from Alabama or the salary-reduction plan of the President.

Second, you will find in the bill the section which reduces the subsistence allowance of the Government employee who is required to travel. Those who have been receiving five or six dollars a day expenses suffer a reduction of one-fifth or one-sixth of their subsistence, but the postal employee, who receive $3 a day for subsistence suffers a reduction of one-third of his subsistence, because he is reduced from $3 to $2 a day.

Labor has fought for 50 years for the right to be paid for overtime work. You take this away from the Government employee in this bill and say that no matter what his hours may be he will not be paid for overtime work.

Labor has always been paid extra money for working on Sunday and holidays. You deprive the Government employee of the small amount he was receiving for working on Sundays and holidays, in another section.

You take away the night-differential pay which the employees have been receiving for many years.

You deprive the employees of automatic promotions which they have been receiving under the law, and, furthermore, you take away the Saturday half holiday which you have granted to Government employees.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if this House wanted to do something to benefit the situation that exists in this country to-day, it should adopt the 5-day week rather than increase the time of the workers of this country. [Applause.]

When you take away the Saturday half holiday from the Government employees you add nearly 3,000,000 hours a week to their labors. That means less employees—more added to the list of unemployed.

The Bureau of the Budget has reduced Government expenditures and very properly so. The Committee on Appropriations has done likewise, going below the Bureau of the Budget. There is no telling where the Senate will stop. Here are three reductions, and every one of them affects the personnel of the Government, because practically over 50 per cent of the money you spend goes for personnel. Taking in consideration these reductions, if you carry out the provisions in this bill, you are going to add to the army of unemployed in this country 150,000 to 200,000 people.

I contend that the Government employees, taking them as a whole, are underpaid rather than overpaid. The average salary of the Government employee is $1,441. Over half of the money paid to the civil employees of the Government is paid out by the Post Office Department. The 1931 report of the Postmaster General shows the total salary paid as $537,021,228.

Now, what happens to the postal employees under the bill as reported which contains the McDuffie plan—11 per cent reduction, $1,000 exempted? Let us take the railway mail clerk:

First. Eleven per cent reduction on salary, $1,000 exempted.

Second. Reduction in daily subsistence from $3 to $2.

Third. Loss of overtime pay.

Fourth. Loss of night differential.

Fifth. Loss of automatic promotions.

Sixth. Loss of Saturday half holidays.

Seventh. Loss of extra pay for working on holidays or Sundays.

The Hoover plan is even more drastic, as the employee also loses his annual leave.

This is but an example of what happens to the postal clerk, who never did receive over 15 days' annual leave, while other Government employees received 30 days' annual leave. The postal employee also works an 8-hour day, while other Government employees work 7½ hours.

The principle of extra pay for overtime as well as for work on Sundays and holidays is sound and should have never been disturbed. The same can be said of the extra night differential.

The postal employee received no increase in salary during the war. It was six or seven years following the war before he was recognized. To deprive him not only of that small increase but other allowances he has enjoyed would work a severe hardship on this class of employees. The maximum salary of the postal employees—$2,100—is enjoyed by only a small number of postal clerks; in fact, $1,400 is the average salary. The postal clerk must live within his salary, because postal regulations provide for his discharge for failure to meet his obligations.

While the postal clerks, by reason of special provisions in the bill other than the salary reduction, are the hardest hit, all the lower-paid Government employees, if the plan is agreed to, must lower their standard of living. The Government employee to-day, like those employed by private corporations, has assumed added responsibilities due to the depression. He is in many instances caring for his immediate relatives out of employment.

The fate of the Federal Government does not depend upon reducing the salary of the Government worker. Cut those in the upper brackets if you desire; they are better able to stand it; but I am opposed to slashing the barely living wage paid those in the lower brackets.

As to the veterans.

There is a provision in this bill which says a war veteran who is single and made an income-tax return of $1,500 is not entitled to any recognition from the Government unless his disability be a combat disability, and this means that he must have received the disability while in action with the enemy.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five minutes more.

How much can a man save who is receiving $1,500 a year? He is subject to the income tax law, and to-day's paper tells us that the Senate has raised the rate for those in the lower brackets in the bill now pending in the Senate. Suppose one who had served two full years in the Army had been in half a dozen engagements and the Lord was good to him and he came home in fine physical condition. Let us say that he has gone along well, but suddenly some acute disease attacks him. He is single, his parents are probably dead, he lives in a rooming house, and he becomes ill and must go to a hospital. To-day it would be an emergency case, and he could be taken care of for a week or two weeks, and then he could go back to work; but if you pass the provision in this bill, he would be denied hospitalization.

This provision applies not only to the World War veteran, but it applies to the Spanish War veteran.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I wish the gentleman would read the exemptions in that clause and tell us about those who are not included.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I admit there are other exemptions, but I cite this case as an example of what you do.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Tell the committee about that. Do not refer to them all without naming the exemptions.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. How much time will the gentleman yield me? I will read the entire section if the gentleman will yield me sufficient time, and also read the report. I will make no misrepresentations. I will be fair.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama talked about the bureaus of this Government and stated they destroy our form of government. I say to the gentleman that if the Economy Committee had spent its time destroying such bureaus that are destroying our Government, it would have served a better purpose than it has.

There is an opportunity to save as much by destroying useless bureaus and ending duplication and overlapping as can be saved by reducing salaries. Such savings would be permanent savings. There are many important sections in this bill, and my limited time will not enable me to refer to them now.

The task of the committee at the outset did not seem to be a difficult one; but as we proceeded, the Senate reduced the appropriation bill 10 per cent and the Committee on Economy was intending to work along the same line. Then there was a letter sent to the President of the United States asking him to specifically state his views in reference to what reduction could be made, and the result was several White House conferences, and in the end there was an entire new plan developed by the committee and the President and his representatives.

Originally it was the intention of the committee to ask the Committee on Rules for a rule to bring in the salary reduction bill as an amendment to the legislative bill. After receiving the rule the majority of the committee voted to bring in a bill here the like of which no Member has ever seen or read of.

I say it would have been to the advantage of the committee and the House and the country if you had brought this legislation in in four or five separate bills.

Why, gentlemen, think of this—under the rules of the House if this amendment is added to the legislative appropriation bill, and if it passes the Senate, there will not be a member of the Economy Committee named as a conferee. The members of the Subcommittee on Appropriations in charge of the legislative appropriation bill will be the conferees, and not one member of that committee is a member of the Economy Committee.

Mr. SCHAFER. Perhaps that would be a good thing.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not agree with the gentleman. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to have something else to say about the provisions of this bill under the 5-minute rule. My thought is the sooner the House gets down to business and acts on this legislation the better off the country will be. [Applause.] I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, believing that we have only a brief time to discuss the far-reaching bill, I think we ought to have a quorum; and I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and seven Members present—a quorum.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, ladics and gentlemen of the committee, I originally and strenuously opposed the special rule brought in that made in order this economy bill; but after it had been amended on the floor, giving the Members the right to offer amendments, I voted for it as amended, inasmuch as I am for economy. But, Mr. Chairman, just because the Republican administration brought about these intolerable conditions and this serious crisis by destroying the business of the Nation, by gross extravagance and willful waste, and by wrecking and breaking the Treasury and causing a deficit of $2,000,000,000 for the fiscal year of 1932, it does not mean that, nor does it make mandatory upon, the slim Democratic majority, which only lately secured partial control of this House, should make up this great deficit overnight by slashing the salaries in order to balance the Budget.

I for one greatly regret that the Democratic leaders do not realize that the country-wide demand to balance the Budget is due to the conniving, high-powered Republican and big-business propaganda. Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, the same greedy financiers, investment bankers, brokers, and manipulators who, with the aid of the Republican administration, brought about the criminal inflation during the years of 1927, 1928, and 1929, and, since the fall of 1929, the destructive deflation, have set into motion the greatest publicity campaign and are conducting the most vicious propaganda in the history of the country.

The underlying reason for this is the greedy and willful aim and intent to relieve themselves from a just share of taxation and to place that burden on the ruined legitimate business and the suffering—yes, ruined—masses. Mr. Chairman, I am ready to reduce the wages of the higher-paid employees and officials, and I am ready and willing to vote for the reduction of my own salary, but I am unwilling, and I feel it is manifestly unfair, to reduce the wages of those who are earning less than $2,000 annually.

I feel that the reduction of the wages of the lower-paid Federal employees will encourage the large employers and industries to reduce, cut, and slash the wages of the American wage earner still further, and to my mind this is the real reason for bringing about the reduction in the wages of the Government employees. So that my position will not be misunderstand, I reiterate that I am for the reduction of salaries of all higher-paid officials and am in favor of eliminating useless employees. I am also in favor of, and will vote for, the elimination of every useless bureau and commission. I am for real economy. I desire to economize in all departments and bureaus and stop the leakage in these bureaus, and, if in any way possible, prevent the awarding of any contracts that are excessive and that are given to the favorite contractors and supply houses.

Mr. Chairman, I realize that it is extremely unpleasant to increase taxes, but I am ready to vote for and shall vote for any reasonable additional revenue; however, I am opposed to adding greater burdens and additional taxation upon the already overtaxed people. I have observed that there is a great deal of satisfaction and joy among the Republican Members and have overheard many statements to the effect that the Republicans are shifting this unpleasant task of raising additional revenue upon our shoulders. I feel that we Democrats should assume our just share of responsibility, but I resent the attitude, statements, and maneuverings of the Republicans to unload upon us the entire responsibility for their misdeeds. Some of these gentlemen on the Republican side make merry over the fact that they will be able to charge the Democratic Party with the reduction of the salaries and thereby prejudice the Federal employees against the Democratic Party; but I am confident that the vast majority of the Federal employees realize that it is not the Democratic Party but Republican duplicity that is responsible for this action.

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, the Democratic Party and its leaders are cognizant of the responsibility and duty they owe to the Nation and realize that the country looks to them for relief from the unnecessary and heavy burden placed upon their shoulders by the Republican administration. But the Democratic leaders fail to realize to what extent the Republicans have gone in the endeavor to relieve themselves of all responsibility and the methods they are employing to place it upon us. These astute Republicans fail to recognize the fact that—

He serves his party best who serves the country best.

Consequently I feel that it will not avail them or save them from being held accountable for the wreck and ruin they have wrought and which we, to the best of our power and ability, are trying to remedy.

In conclusion, let me say to you Republicans that I am full of glee and joy to-day to recall that—

He who laughs last laughs best.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER.]

Mr. CROSSER. Mr. Chairman, when we consider this proposal for wage reduction from the standpoint of the general welfare, it is astonishing, to say the least. Everyone here knows, everyone has stated from the very beginning of this Congress and for months before, that the first consideration of the Government should be the revival of business. The passage of this bill will do more to retard the revival of business than any other one thing that we could do. We have unemployment on every side.

We were told less than a year ago by the administration, and Members of this House approved the suggestion that the Government must go on with improvements and begin new Government enterprises in order that men might be put to work. Of course, that was not fundamental, but it was a step in the right direction. Here to-day we see a proposal to reverse that course. The administration, uncertain of its judgment, goes from one plan to a method which is exactly contrary. The administration completely reverses its whole course and proposes to turn thousands of men into the highways of the country to compete with the few men still remaining employed. The men in private industry were told not to reduce wages, but here on every hand we see proposed the slashing of the wage standards. Why this change of front, why, after having so solemnly assured us of a determination to maintain the standard of compensation, does the executive department of our Government come now and suddenly say, "We were all wrong, and all good people should turn face about and abandon the idea of trying to maintain the pay standard of employees," and now tell us that the way to bring about an economic revival is to turn into the army of unemployed thousands of men and cut the salaries of all of the rest?

Is that the way to increase the consuming power of the public and restore your markets? What childishness! Members of this House have intelligence enough to know that such action will not increase markets, and they know that others know that it will never revive business, that it will tend to destroy business. How far will we go with that idea? Suppose we have another call made upon us to reduce still farther the number of employees and abandon essential services, if need be, and cut still farther the salaries of those remaining. How would that bring about a revival of business? Yet the only thing that they can offer as a remedy for the depression is to cut salaries and reduce the number of employees in the Government service.

These men must realize how worse than useless is such a proposal as a remedy for our troubles. Is that the measure of statesmanship of those in control at present? Is the reduction of Government service the best that they can suggest as a remedy for the depression?

Why not say then abolish it entirely, and thereby save the expense?

My friends, it is necessary that a start must be made somewhere to bring about the employment of the unemployed. To continue to put more people out of employment will make it necessary to discharge still more, because the increase of unemployment means the decrease of markets. If any concern in the country should undertake the increase of employment, it is the Government, and it can do so profitably. When the Government undertakes new projects, and so employs more men, that means that all of the people of the United States contribute to and cooperate in the effort to revive commerce. That is certainly more reasonable than to expect a private employer on his own account to try to start employment on the upward movement.

Realizing the weakness, the uselessness of this wage-cutting proposal as a means of remedying the depression, some Members of Congress hope to try to excuse themselves when asked for an explanation of this cheap pretense of remedying unemployment by cutting wages and discharging thousands of employees, such Members hope, I say, to satisfy questioners by saying, "Well, maybe it will not do any good, but look, we are cutting our own salaries 11 per cent, we are pinching ourselves, and surely it must make you feel better to know that some one else is hurt." Surely intelligent people can see through that trick. What is needed, my friends, is not cheap claptrap, but a remedy of a fundamental nature.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COOKE.]

Mr. COOKE. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman who preceded me perhaps has expressed a good many of the things uppermost in my mind this afternoon in respect to the question of wage reduction. It does seem to me that this great body of the American Congress has almost entirely missed the real purpose of economy in government and is beginning to think more about reducing wages in the country to the bare cost of the necessaries of life than it is to economizing in government. To my mind we are confronted by a greater question by far than the problem of economy of government. We are confronted by the question of satisfying in some degree the great body of the people throughout this country, and the great body of the people throughout this country consists of the working people, who are not the people who are demanding a wage reduction among Federal employees. I think that most of your demand for a reduction comes from the employers throughout the United States, and I say to you that what little tranquillity we are enjoying at the present time, and what little of prosperity is left for the American people are not attributable to the leadership emanating from those leaders of finance and industry responsible for that demand.

It is not due to our railroad leaders nor our great bankers, but it is due to the men who work with their hands, who toil upon the farms, in the factories, and in the industries of America. Are we going to discourage and disappoint the people of this country to-day by saying to them that we are going to reduce salaries and wages of this great army that I believe stands as our most dependable offensive in the battle against depression in this country? Are we going to take an army of 700,000 people, the only great group of people in the United States to-day enjoying any degree of satisfaction as far as laboring conditions are concerned, and remove a part of their members to the ranks of the unemployed and dissatisfy the balance? Are you going to satisfy by that all the employers of labor throughout the country, so that they may cite this as a precedent for the lowering of wages in private industry?

I care no more for the Government employee than I care for the man in private industry, but I say to you that it is the common man, it is the American Federation of Labor, through its leadership, the common men, through their leadership, that have made possible the Government we have to-day. We must realize that through the breasts of men in this country there runs a spirit to-day demanding that something be done; demanding that they have some opportunity in this great country apart from that dictated by men higher up.

I say to you that unless we give some kind of omen, some kind of symbol to the people of this Nation before we adjourn that we believe more in the rights of workingmen, believe more in upholding their rights and their jobs and their salaries, that we are going before the people, both Democrats and Republicans, this fall with a brand upon us of not having done for the people we represent the things that should have been done.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that in the sane and sensible consideration of this question this Congress will look upon this question of wage reduction in a fair and just light; that we are going to keep the people employed here; that we will do as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] said a few moments ago—instead of adding to the number of unemployed here, we will shorten the hours of labor and put more people to work. We are going to try to restore prosperity by the only method you can use at any time—by raising commodity prices and by giving the people the wherewithal to buy the things that make for prosperity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, it is very easy to balance the Budget when you refuse to pay what you owe. [Applause.] We owe by the present law and by practice and by promises all the money we are denying the people by this bill. This is not Budget balancing. This is not any high order of economics. This is not even good politics. This is just plain, ordinary, everyday embezzlement from a lot of weak people who can not protect themselves.

Every Federal employee already has to bear, directly or indirectly, his share of increased taxes. Why add to his burden? Why make the Federal employee pay about 200 per cent more in taxes than everybody else on the same economic scale? We increased taxes for everybody, either directly or indirectly. The Federal employees, as well as those engaged in private employment, must pay those increased taxes. Why add to their taxes? What is the sense in that? What is sound about that? If the Federal employees are going to pay taxes at this great rate, by this deprivation, why not have the courage to tax everybody else at the same rate, if you want to balance the Budget?

As to my friends the Democrats, I said at the beginning of this session that the only possible way the Democrats could lose the next campaign was that Hoover might become a Democrat again. That was the big danger. Instead of that, the Democrats are becoming Hooverized, and there is just as much danger.

Our party is playing with dynamite in this bill. We have already arrayed directly all the taxpayers of the country against us. Now we insist on having the wage earners of the country against us. In other words, we insist on being 100 per cent unpopular. We are creating at this time a new and lower economic scale. We are creating it how? By legislative fiat, if you want to call it that, but I think by legislative fiasco. What is happening here? The White House and Congress began to make a lot of noise about economy. Instead of trying to do something constructive for the country, instead of either having a plan—either the White House or the congressional leaders—they began to talk economy because they were caught short without a plan. They were fooling the public and fooling each other, and now they have got a bear going downhill. Now they have to do something that neither one wants to do. We began trying to trump the President on economy and then he trumped us, and now look where we are. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the bill in its present form, but hope that sufficient amendments will be adopted that will make it possible to vote for it. I am sorry that this so-called economy bill is being forced upon the House at this time. I consider the bill to be filled with hysteria, hypocrisy, hokum, and humbug. Both hysteria and hypocrisy for rushing in here when at the same time the great Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives is considering the so-called bonus bill to pay $2,400,000,000 in cash to the able-bodied veterans of the World War. This bill should have been delayed at least a month, until we know where we are at; until we know what Congress will do with the bonus bill; until we know what the other branch of the legislative body will do in regard to the tax bill. We do not know what our deficit will be. We do not know yet how much is needed to balance the Budget, and this bill is supposed to be a bill to help balance the Budget. Why the haste and hysteria? None of the proposed savings or cuts can go into effect before July 1.

It is filled with hypocrisy because many Members who are going to vote for this bill on grounds of economy intend to vote for the soldiers' bonus, and that is one of the reasons I am opposed to the bill being considered now or before the bonus bill has been disposed of. I am sorry that the rule was adopted and that the bill was not brought up in the proper way instead of as a rider on an appropriation bill. I am sorry the Economy Committee did not decide to hold the bill back for at least a month until the fiscal situation had cleared up.

This bill proposes to cut down the pay of those Federal employees receiving salaries above $1,000. The only thing the House of Representatives has done to relieve human misery in the United States has been to vote out the 40,000,000 bushel wheat bill, and that under great pressure. That is the only gesture we have made. We have not even considered the fact that there are 8,000,000 unemployed people in America, many millions more on part time, and many millions more scared to death they are going to lose their jobs. It is about time that we had a constructive program to do something for the benefit of the unemployed and to relieve unemployment. The Economy Committee now proposes to even reduce the salaries of the most poorly paid Federal employees—those receiving eleven, twelve, and thirteen hundred dollars a year, which is not a living wage.

No wonder Mr. William Green, head of the American Federation of Labor, denounced the bill in its present form as legislative trickery and an attempt to reduce the American standard of wages and of living. I just voted a few minutes ago on a teller vote to reduce the salary of a Member of Congress by 10 per cent, and will be glad of an opportunity on a record vote to reduce it by 11 per cent, as suggested by the Economy Committee.

I, for one, certainly will not vote for this bill unless the pay-cut exemptions are raised to $2,000 or $2,500. I am opposed to the proposed reduction of the benefits for the disabled veterans. Nothing was too good for the disabled both during and just after the war, but now those for whom there has been no armistice are called on to make further sacrifices. Such hysterical, picayune, and humbug economy will be resented by the American Legion and all friends of the veterans. What hypocrisy for sake of politics to attempt in this bill to consolidate the War and Navy Departments. Just a mere political gesture and nothing but pure hokum.

No wonder a great many Members voted against the rule, and many more would have voted against the rule if the gag section had not been stricken out. I am in favor of economy, but not of the hysterical or hypocritical brand. If the Congress had voted for the manufacturers' sales tax, we would not have to reduce the salaries of low-paid Government clerks and cut the benefits of the disabled veterans and eliminate the funds for educational research.

Who knows to-day whether we need to save $100,000,000, $200,000,000, or $300,000,000 in Federal appropriations?

As far as the Army and the Navy are concerned, the proposition that I advanced in the House of Representatives a little while ago showed where we could save $100,000,000 and maintain the same efficiency and degree of national defense. That proposition was to limit further the number of battleships and battle cruisers over 10,000 tons by agreement with Great Britain and Japan, while still maintaining the 5–5–3 ratio. That would save over $100,000,000 a year and give the United States the same proportional naval strength. As it is we now propose to take some pay from hundreds of thousands of inadequately paid Federal employees. If the exemption of $1,000 is not raised to at least $2,000, it will amount to taking their daily bread right off their plates.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA].

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I believe the utter lack of orderly and intelligent consideration of a measure which affects the economic life of this country is apparent when we attempt to consider a bill of this magnitude in two hours of general debate and force it through in night sessions. I want to say that if the leadership of this House can take any credit for that kind of legislation, they are entitled to it. It is cruel; it is wrong. Of course, I can understand some of our leaders, particularly on our side. They have absolutely no understanding of the value of money; it has come too easy to them. Why, we saw the millionaire bloc stand up to-day, thinking they were courageous, and attempt to vote down the salary of the Members of the House, so as to make a rich man's club out of it, or to send men here who would come under a retainer.

Look at the history of Congress and you will find that there was a time before the popular election of Senators when every big railroad had its lobbyist in the United States Senate. That is what brought about the popular election of Senators.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For a brief question.

Mr. SCHAFER. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I have worked for a living all my life, and perhaps harder than he has ever worked, and I do not belong to the millionaire's club, either.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And the gentleman never will. The millionaires are using him. He had better wake up. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. For a question.

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to ask the gentleman a question without interrupting his speech. The gentleman from New York a few moments ago said that three weeks from now we might know "where we were at."

Mr. LAGUARDIA. When did I say that?

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] said that a minute ago. I tried to ask him a question about it.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I can not answer for the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. STEVENSON. I want to know if the gentleman thinks that three weeks from now we will know any more about where we are than we do now?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Probably three weeks from now my colleague from New York will experience a thrill such as came to Elinor Glyn in that time; I do not know. [Laughter.]

Now, seriously, gentlemen, I submit that the burden of the economies effected in this bill is directed at the underpaid employees of the Government service, vocational training for handicapped people, reduction of allowance to disabled veterans, abolition of the Army and Navy Transport Service, which is not economy. We are paying millions of dollars now in subsidies, and the bill for the transportation of Government troops and freight will be more than the cost of the maintenance of the Army and Navy Transport Service. There is another reason for putting that in. There is repeal of the Saturday half holiday in these times, and we are discussing a 5-day week; there is repeal of the law providing extra pay for overtime and night work—labor conditions which took us 50 years to acquire.

I know there are things in this economy bill that certain interests have been trying to get through this House for the last 10 years, and under the guise of economy they are putting them in the bill now. Why, take Mr. Hoover's own statements—I am going to read them into the RECORD—his telegram to the governors appealing to them not to reduce wages, his conference on economic conditions, appealing to the members of the conference not to reduce wages and not to discharge employees. What has happened? I would like to know if there is a spokesman for the President on the floor of this House who will stand up and say that this bill has the approval of the administration?

Mrs. KAHN. It has not.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Then vote against it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, the Post Office Department, unlike every other department of the Federal Government, is a public utility conducting its business in every section of the country. It was never intended that the department should return a profit to the Treasury on its operations. It is the only department that is in constant, daily contact with the people of the United States. It is their service, and as such should be maintained in its present efficiency. It is being conducted to-day as economically as possible. The personnel of the department is called upon to produce a greater volume of work than ever in its history.

It has been geared up to its highest point of efficiency by successive surveys conducted by the present Postmaster General. The present administration has conducted 5 of these surveys—the first on December 11, 1929, which included the 18 largest post offices of the country; the second on June 5, 1930, which included all offices other than the 18 largest, having receipts of $500,000 or over; the third on August 28, 1930, which took in the next 37 largest offices not heretofore surveyed; the fourth on November 5, 1931, taking in all offices having receipts in excess of $250,000; the fifth, and last, on January 11, 1932, which included all the remaining first-class offices having receipts below $250,000.

As a result of these surveys the personnel was reduced and the service curtailed and many economies were effected. While the department has not the accurate figures at this time, the savings will approximate six or seven million dollars.

To accomplish this saving, deliveries have been reduced in both residential and business sections to the very lowest number consistent with good service. It has been estimated by representatives of the employees that these surveys eliminated 4,000 work opportunities for the men.

In cities like New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago, the carrier force alone was reduced by upwards of 300 in each of these cities.

In addition to these savings based on the results of the surveys, the department has, since October, 1925, and up to the present time, consolidated 4,219 rural routes. These consolidations resulted in a saving of approximately $1,000 for each route consolidated, or a total saving of upwards of $400,000. Consolidations are being effected by the department wherever a vacancy occurs, and this policy will continue until the rural service has assumed the greatest volume of mail possible for it to handle.

Further reductions in expenditures based upon receipts at the post offices have been effected as of July 1, 1931, and will be further reduced on July 1, 1932, based upon receipts for the last calendar year. On July 1, 1931, the following reductions were made for the calendar year 1930:

4,681 postmasters' salaries reduced	$575,900
232 assistant postmasters' salaries reduced	24,200
323 supervisors' salaries reduced	40,700
125 clerks in 94 offices reduced from second to third class	50,622
Total reduction for all postmasters, supervisors, and clerks based on receipts for the calendar year 1930	691,422

Taking into consideration all of the economies effected as a result of the surveys, the consolidation of rural routes, and the reduction in salaries based upon receipts, the Budget set out to prepare the estimate for the appropriation necessary for the fiscal year 1933.

The Budget estimate as prepared for the Post Office Department amounted to $813,559,487. This is $35,284,570 under the estimate prepared by the Budget for the last fiscal year.

The Post Office Department's estimate as presented to the committee totaled $813,724,487, which is $165,000 more than the Budget estimate.

The House Committee on Appropriations reduced this estimate to $805,586,575, which is a further reduction of $8,000,000 under the Post Office estimate, and the House further reduced the amount to $805,466,175.

The Senate now proposes to reduce the total appropriation as reported to that body from the House by 10 per cent. This proposed Senate cut will amount to $80,546,617.50, which leaves approximately $725,000,000 to operate the department for the next fiscal year.

All told, this amount will be nearly $90,000,000 less than the original Budget estimate, and it will amount to nearly 50 per cent of the total economies set out by our Economy Committee.

It is my understanding that the total amount of the reduction in Federal expenditures included in the program of the House Economy Committee must be $200,000,000. If the House Appropriations Committee continues to reduce all appropriation bills to the limit, and if the Senate persists in its horizontal 10 per cent cut, the total savings from such a policy will amount on paper to $451,100,000.

These reductions effected by the House and the Senate, which amount to approximately $451,100,000, are $250,000,000 in excess of the program outlined by our Economy Committee.

When we stop to consider all the savings and economies so far effected in the Post Office Department, economies which have resulted from surveys in the cities, consolidations in rural routes, and reductions due to falling receipts, together with the reduction in the estimates made by the Budget and the Post Office Department, and then the further reductions in the appropriation made by the House committee and the House itself, we can readily realize the demoralizing effect upon the service which must result from the arbitrary and unscientific reduction totaling $80,000,000 ordered by the other branch of this legislative department; and when we further consider the fact that we have already raised the cost of the service to the patrons of the department by over $200,000,000, it is grossly unfair to destroy or impair that service under these conditions.

We increased first-class postage in the revenue bill from 2 to 3 cents, and, according to the department's figures, that will increase the revenues $165,500,000.

The Postmaster General increased the rates on foreign mail, which will add $4,000,000 more to the revenues.

The Interstate Commerce Commission increased parcel-post rates and increased the size and weights of packages, which will add $12,500,000 to the revenues.

Our Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads reported favorably, and the House passed, 10 bills increasing rates of postage, which will increase the revenues of the department by $20,000,000.

Is it fair, is it good business, to increase the cost of the service to the people by over $200,000,000 and at the same time reduce the appropriation so low as to impair, demoralize, and in some instances utterly destroy this splendid service?

If we persist in this program, it will be necessary for the department to eliminate rural free delivery in many offices and to give triweekly service in others. The collection and distribution of mail in the villages of the country will be wiped out. There will be no village delivery service in the United States. Deliveries in the city residential districts will be reduced to one, and collections will be likewise reduced, while in the business sections where they are now receiving 3 and 4 deliveries a day, they will be reduced to 1 and 2 deliveries. Eight thousand rural carriers will be dismissed. Over 2,000 railway mail clerks will be discharged. More than 20,000 clerks and carriers in the City Delivery Service will join the bread lines or enlist in the army of the unemployed, and hundreds of village carriers, supervisors, and other employees of the department will be without jobs.

I believe it is the duty of this House to put an immediate stop to this hit and miss, destructive policy of so-called economy until such time as the Senate and the House and the administration are able to get together on a definite plan that will result in proper economies without destroying the service.

It seems to me that the administration, together with its leaders in the House and Senate, could work out a better policy than the blind, destructive program which we have before us now, and it occurs to me that the Democratic leaders of the House and Senate should get together and reach some agreement with regard to the numerous economy plans and reductions proposed in both Houses. In other words, I can not vote to consider the economy bill until some proper plan is worked out by the House and Senate and the administration, which will not result in serious injury to the service, and I am therefore opposed to any further action on the part of the Appropriations Committee of our House or the Economy Committee of our House in reducing expenditures until we have some idea of what is going to happen to the appropriation bills in the Senate. If they are going to continue to reduce all appropriations by 10 per cent, and if such cuts will result in serious consequences, I believe it is time for us to stop. Let some one else take the responsibility. I am willing to cooperate, but I am not willing to destroy. [Applause.]

Estimate submitted by Mr. Trotter, Post Office Department, April 26, 1932 (these figures are subject to revision from time to time)

Number of postmasters to be reduced July 1, 1932:

5,259	to be reduced (each)	$100
1,243	to be reduced (each)	200
230	to be reduced (each)	300
70	to be reduced (each)	400
20	to be reduced (each)	500
5	to be reduced (each)	600
1	to be reduced	700
1	to be reduced	800
23	to be reduced (each)	1,000
6,852		909,000

Number of supervisors, including assistant postmasters at first-class offices, to be reduced, 737 106,400

In addition, 380 assistant postmasters at second-class offices will be reduced about $100 each.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Alabama. Do I understand we are going to recess from 6 to 7.30 o'clock?

Mr. McDUFFIE. I hoped we could finish general debate before we recessed, which will take until 6.10.

Mr. SNELL. And then recess until 7.30?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Or 7.40, which will give a recess of an hour and a half.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL].

Mr. WILLIAM E. HULL. Mr. Chairman, H. R. 11597 is a bill to effect economies in the National Government. In portions of this bill you will find very obnoxious items, and I call particularly the attention of the House to the schedule of temporary reductions, section 102 (a), reading as follows:

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, the compensation for each civilian and noncivilian office, position, employment, or enlistment in any branch or service of the United States Government or the government of the District of Columbia is hereby reduced as follows: Compensation at an annual rate of $1,000 or less shall be exempt from reduction; and compensation at an annual rate in excess of $1,000 shall be reduced by 11 per cent of the amount thereof in excess of $1,000.

Then, I again call your attention to page 7, section 112, which reads as follows:

The appropriations or portions of appropriations unexpended by reason of the operation of this title shall not be used for any other purposes, but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

It is not hard for the House to visualize those two sections.

The Senate, upon a motion of Senator McKELLAR, has instructed its Appropriations Committee to reduce the appropriations of the Postal Service for the fiscal year 1933 to an amount 10 per cent below the amount approved by the House of Representatives.

The amount carried for the Postal Service for the Treasury-Post Office bill, as adopted by the House of Representatives, was $805,466,175, and the required reduction is, therefore, $80,546,617.50.

This will bring the postal appropriations for the next year to approximately $725,000,000, which is $116,000,000 less than the amount appropriated for the current year.

As the laws now stand, the department has no authority to reduce the salaries or the allowances of its employees, so that this arbitrary reduction in the funds available for the maintenance of the Postal Service must be met in large part, under the plan being followed in the Senate, by the discharge of postal workers.

Of the sum of $805,000,000 carried in the House bill for postal purposes, about $235,000,000 is for transportation of the mails, for the rental of quarters, for the purchase and distribution of supplies, and other similar miscellaneous items. Five hundred and seventy million dollars is for salaries and wages.

The department's expenditures for transportation and for miscellaneous purposes are in large part controlled by long-term contracts, so that the amount which can be saved in these items is not large, unless the Government is to adopt a policy of repudiating its lawful contract obligations. It follows, then, that almost the whole of the $80,000,000 which the Senate is seeking to save must be taken from the amount of $570,000,000 carried in the House bill for salaries and wages.

It is easy to calculate what this would mean. The average salary in the Postal Service is in the neighborhood of $2,000. If $80,000,000 is to be saved by the dismissal of postal employees, it is a simple matter of arithmetic to determine that the number to be dismissed would be in the neighborhood of 40,000.

The effect on the Postal Service would be disastrous. There are now about 42,000 rural carriers, about 50,000 city delivery carriers, about 22,000 railway postal clerks, and about 70,000 post-office clerks. These four groups make up the backbone of the Postal Service. They aggregate 184,000 people. A reduction of this number by from 30,000 to 40,000 would obviously cut deeply into the service which the post office now renders to the public.

About 8,000 rural routes will have to be consolidated. About 9,000 additional rural routes will have to be placed on a triweekly basis, so that the patrons will receive their mail only on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, instead of every day as at the present time.

This will in a large measure not only affect the farmers, but seriously discommode them and destroy every opportunity of receiving the daily markets, either through the newspapers or bulletins that they are now receiving. Is there any farmer in the United States who would sanction this cut? I say no!

City deliveries will be reduced from two a day to one a day in residential districts; and from four or more a day to two a day in business districts.

Is there any business man in the United States who would commonly consent to taking away these deliveries which mean so much to the success of his business? I say, no!

Many railway postal clerks will have to be taken off. Much of the mail moving from Chicago to New York, for instance, will have to move in storage cars and await distribution until it arrives at destination, thus slowing up delivery by 24 hours or more.

It is no exaggeration to say that if the Senate carries out its program and the House concurs in the action, it will mean the complete demoralization of the Postal Service throughout the entire country.

And, then again, we propose in this bill to cut the postal clerks and carriers and railway mail clerks' salaries 11 per cent, and you have made a provision in this bill, according to section 112, whereby this extra money that you are taking away by the reduction of 11 per cent shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

Why, gentlemen, is it possible that you men here in Congress are willing to go the extreme and make a cut of 11 per cent against the operators of this great service? I want you to think, and go home and think, before you vote for such an obnoxious bill to destroy the greatest business operation we have in America, the United States mail.

Why do not we pull ourselves together like men and do away with this hysteria that is going through Congress to destroy all public operations because of the clamor to reduce the poor mail carrier 11 per cent? Why, my friends, I was in the Postal Service, first as assistant postmaster, then as a railway mail clerk, and then as postmaster of Peoria for eight years. I was not only that, but I was made president of the First-class Postmasters' Association of the United States.

And when I look back and see those young men that I appointed when they were 23 years old—good husky young fellows—who have spent their entire life trudging through the sleet and storm and sunshine and deliver the daily mail to you and to the business men of this country, to-day with their feet sore from continual walking and their backs humped from carrying the heavy sacks of mail, at the age of 50, only drawing a small salary of $2,080, which has only been increased $400 from the time they started, I can not believe they have been overpaid. And yet you men here are willing to vote to take away 11 per cent of that salary. Is it possible? I do not see how you have the heart to draw such a conclusion from the hysteria that now prevails and destroy the morale of these men, take away from them and their families the small stipend that keeps them alive in old age. Oh, no! Certainly the time has not come when you are willing to do this thing. Gentlemen, sheathe your pruning knife and lay it aside and forget it. This can not do you any good at home. Not only that, but consider the heartlessness of any man who is willing to take away from his fellow man a livelihood that he so rightly deserves from the long and studious and competent work that he has done for the Government of the United States.

Let us go back to the President's plan under this great emergency under which we are working.

Is it necessary for you Democrats to vote for something that will not do the real thing you are voting for just because you want to make it a political issue?

Is it possible that you Republicans are so afraid that you are not willing to vote for a measure that will not only save the Postal Service but will in a measure help solve the unemployment problem by putting on an additional 20,000 men to work with the same amount of expenditure? I can not yet see why any of us, either Republicans or Democrats, are willing to try to make a political issue of this. It is not fair to the mail carrier, to the clerk, and the Railway Mail Service. They are your servants, and have been for these many years, and I would say that it would be better to adopt the stagger plan even though it does make them lay off for 30 days and deprives them of some little overtime, but they have the time to use as a vacation, and that is not at all bad anyway, because every man in America needs a vacation.

By following this plan in the Postal Service it will save $21,000,000 after allowing for the cost of hiring substitutes to take the place of the regular clerks and carriers while they are on furlough. It would not only accomplish this saving, but it would mean part-time work for some 20,000 additional people.

Now, take the two propositions together. Is it good for the country to lay off rural carriers, city carriers, railway mail clerks and put them on charity of the United States Government, as that is what you will do, because there is a very small per cent of these men who have saved anything, and are living now on their salaries, or is it better to keep them to work for 11 months in the year and put 20,000 more men to work a portion of the time and then have a saving of $21,000,000 in the service?

My friends, I can not yet conceive that there is any man within the hearing of my voice who will vote for this bill if it includes the Postal Service of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 11267, the legislative appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. CHAVEZ (at the request of Mr. THOMASON), for to-day, on account of illness.

Mr. KLEBERG, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

Mr. BOYLAN, on account of illness.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 332. An act for the relief of Samson Davis; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 570. An act to exempt from taxation certain property used by the National Society of the Colonial Dames of America, in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 1562. An act for the relief of William S. Cook; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2409. An act to amend Title II of the Federal farm loan act in regard to Federal intermediate-credit banks, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

S. 2654. An act to allow credit in connection with homestead entries to widows of persons who served in certain Indian wars; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3472. An act to amend the act of Congress approved June 26, 1912, entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 3477. An act for the relief of the Playa de Flor Land & Improvement Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 3577. An act for the relief of Rolando B. Moffett; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3852. An act to amend section 2288 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, with respect to the taking for highway purposes of lands entered upon under the homestead or preemption laws; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3864. An act authorizing expenditures from Colorado River tribal funds for reimbursable loans; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

S. 3911. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close Quintana Place, between Seventh Street and Seventh Place NW.; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 3929. An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to close certain alleys and to set aside land owned by the District of Columbia for alley purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 4029. An act to restore homestead rights in certain cases; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 4106. An act to provide for the closing of certain streets and alleys in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

S. 4165. An act to remove existing discriminations incident to certain land grants and to subject them to the same conditions that govern other land grants of their class; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 4190. An act for the relief of Thomas E. Reed; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4193. An act to authorize the issuance of bonds by the St. Thomas Harbor Board, Virgin Islands, for the acquisition or construction of a graving or dry dock; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 231. An act to grant certain lands to the State of Colorado for the benefit of the Colorado School of Mines;

H. R. 1231. An act for the relief of Grina Bros.;

H. R. 1768. An act for the relief of Alvina Hollis;

H. R. 1770. An act for the relief of Senelma Wirkkula, also known as Selma Wirkkula; Alice Marie Wirkkula; and Bernice Elaine Wirkkula;

H. R. 3580. An act for the relief of Clara E. Wight;

H. R. 4724. An act to confer to certain persons who served in the Quartermaster Corps or under the jurisdiction of the Quartermaster General during the war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition, the benefits of hospitalization and the privileges of the soldiers' homes;

H. R. 4752. An act for the establishment of the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park.

H. R. 5484. An act extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1877 (19 Stat. 377), and acts amendatory thereof, to ceded lands of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation;

H. R. 5603. An act to authorize the conveyance by the United States to the State of Minnesota of lot 4, section 18, township 131 north, range 29 west, in the county of Morrison, Minn.;

H. R. 8084. An act for the protection of the northern Pacific halibut fishery;

H. R. 8914. An act to accept the grant by the State of Montana of concurrent police jurisdiction over the rights of way of the Blackfeet Highway and over the rights of way of its connections with the Glacier National Park road system on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana;

H. R. 9598. An act to authorize expenditures for the enforcement of the contract-labor provisions of the immigration law; and

H. R. 10495. An act amending an act of Congress approved February 28, 1919 (40 Stat. L. 1206), granting the city of San Diego certain lands in the Cleveland National Forest and the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation for dam and reservoir purposes for the conservation of water, and for other purposes, so as to include additional lands.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 3095. An act for the relief of J. J. Bradshaw and Addie C. Bradshaw.

RELATION OF A TOBACCO TAX TO A BALANCED BUDGET

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a radio address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] over station WJSV.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. VINSON] over Station WJSV.

ADDRESS OF HON. FRED M. VINSON, OF KENTUCKY, APRIL 25, 1932

Ladies and gentlemen, the Ways and Means Committee of the House, of which I am a member, was called upon to initiate legislation which would bring in new taxes to balance the 1933 Budget. The deficit for 1931 is $903,000,000; for 1932 it is two and three-quarter billions of dollars; the prospective deficit for 1933 is one and three-quarter billions. Passing payment of the debt requirement, there is one and one-quarter billions in new taxes to be raised. When it is considered that the total receipts, under existing law, for 1933, was estimated at $2,375,000,000, the magnitude of the task is easily observed. We were called upon to raise in this bill an amount equal to 50 per cent of all taxes that could be collected under existing laws. Such a task never confronted any legislative body in peace times.

As an original proposition, there was difference of opinion in the committee and in Congress with reference to the Treasury's position that it was imperative to balance the Budget in a single year. With full knowledge of the deficit for 1931 and 1932, the administration took no steps toward balancing the Budget until last December, and then insisted that the ends must meet July 1, 1933. Some of us thought that it would be more businesslike, and certainly less burdensome to an already heavily laden taxpaying public, to bring the receipts and expenditures together over a 2-year spread. In this manner we could have fuller benefits from reductions in appropriations, elimination of useless offices, consolidation of kindred functioning, reductions in expenditures, and economies in administration. Further, the full benefits of the new taxes can not be secured until the second fiscal year, in view of the fact that only the collections in March and June, 1933, of taxes for the calendar year 1932 will be collected in the next fiscal year.

However, so insistent was the Treasury upon the 1-year program, which position it sold to the country, that those of us who had originally entertained the idea of the 2-year spread, made concession of our position. The House balanced the Budget for the fiscal year 1933.

After defeat of the sales tax, a subcommittee composed of Messrs. RAGON, CANFIELD, and myself (Democrats), and Messrs. HAWLEY and TREADWAY (Republicans) formulated the substitute program which the full committee and the House adopted. The tax bill H. R. 10236, with its new taxes, as it passed the House, may be broken down, as follows:

Individual income tax	$217,000,000
Corporation income tax	43,000,000
Administrative changes (revision of existing laws)	126,000,000
Estate and gift tax	30,000,000
Excise taxes	488,000,000
Increased postage rates	165,000,000
Reduced expenditures	200,000,000
Total	1,279,000,000

It was the recommendation of the subcommittee, adopted by the full committee and the House, that the Budget for 1933 should be an economic Budget; that it should be cut by reducing expenditures at least $200,000,000. In our bill, this mandate was given to the administration. Mr. Mills, Secretary of the Treasury, before our committee, was loath to concede that such reduction would be made. He insisted that $118,000,000 was the figure to be used. I maintained that there could be a reduction in expenditures of at least $243,000,000 without any serious inconvenience to the functioning of the Government. Finally, the two hundred million dollar figure was agreed upon. Now, before the Senate committee, the distinguished Secretary of the Treasury concedes that at least $208,000,000 may be saved in expenditures.

Strange as it may seem, the largest and most dependable tax source for Uncle Sam is the tax levied upon a product of the soil—tobacco, which is the only farm commodity upon which the Federal Government lays its heavy hand of taxation. From the earliest days of our Government it has been a revenue producer, in increased amounts, until in 1916 its tax yield was $85,000,000. That year the tax on cigarettes was $3 per 10,000. In 1918, this tax was increased 900 per cent—$3 per 1,000, or $1 per pound on cigarette tobacco. The tax on smoking and chewing tobacco is 18 cents per pound.

It was proposed by the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the tobacco tax one-sixth of its present rate, that is, 16⅔ cents per pound on cigarette tobacco, and 3 cents per pound on chewing and smoking tobacco. Every Treasury recommendation before the House and Senate carries that increase. The sales of Burley tobacco in Kentucky for the season of 1930–31 averaged 15 cents per pound; last year's sales averaged 8⅔ cents per pound. For the Burley that goes into cigarettes, the new tax of $1.16⅔ per pound would be fourteen times the average for the crop. The increase alone would be twice the average for the crop. The dark tobacco of Kentucky averaged 3½ cents per pound. The new tax would be six times its average price.

The attention of the committee was called to the fact that under existing law, tobacco would pay, next fiscal year, approximately one-fifth of the total revenues from all sources. Its yield for that period will be $434,000,000. Under the existing law, the tax on tobacco will exceed the yield of the income taxes, individual or corporate, and actually approximates two-thirds of their combined total. It was the Sage of Monticello who said:

"The Government which steps out of the ranks of the ordinary articles of consumption to select and lay under disproportionate burdens a particular one, because it is a comfort, pleasing to the taste, or necessary to health, and will therefore be bought, is, in that particular, a tyranny."

The subcommittee, the full committee, and the House itself refused to consider this added tax upon tobacco, which refusal was based upon many grounds.

The Federal Government has a direct interest in the consumption of cigarettes. For every 50 packs of cigarettes sold, the Government collects $3—6 cents per pack. It was shown without contradiction that the Federal Government receives four times in taxes what the manufacturers receive in profit. It is unquestioned that the government, for the 1931 crop, will receive almost three times in taxes what the grower received for his farm product.

We are convinced beyond doubt that the point of saturation in tobacco taxes has been reached, if not passed; that an added tax in any form would bring into action the law of diminishing return, which in everyday parlance simply means "killing the goose that lays the golden egg."

Thirteen States have taxes upon tobacco ranging from 2 cents to 5 cents a pack of 20 cigarettes. The effect of this added tax presents a very vivid picture in consumption. For illustration, the average consumption in the United States, including these 13 States, is 975 cigarettes per capita per annum. In these 13 States—tobacco-taxing States—this average shrinks to 431 cigarettes per capita per annum. The present panic has shown its effect in that, in the first eight months of the present fiscal year, there has been a decline of a billion cigarettes per month over the same period in the prior fiscal year, with the consequent loss to the Government of $23,000,000 in taxes and a consequent decrease in the consumption of the tobacco growers' commodity of 23,000,000 pounds. Undoubtedly, decreased consumption means a decreased price for the farmer's product. Only when there is a demand for his product can a fair price be secured. With the export market practically nil, any increase in the tobacco not marketed has a direct effect in a lower price.

It was suggested that the Government and the manufacturer were partners in this transaction, with the Government receiving four times the profit of the manufacturer. If we consider the matter as a partnership, might I suggest that there is a third partner—a silent partner—of whom I have been thinking in this fight against tyranny in taxation. I have been thinking of the tobacco farmer—the silent partner—who secured for his 1931 crop $156,000,000, as compared to the $434,000,000 which the Federal Government will receive in taxes. No other farmer, and no other class, has ever been called upon to pay the price exacted of him by this Government. It is strange that this additional tax is the character of farm relief the administration would recommend for the 400,000 tobacco farmers in America, 115,000 of whom reside in my State of Kentucky.

Some say that the additional tobacco tax would not be reflected in the price the tobacco grower secured for his crop. I do not adhere to that philosophy. As long as human nature is human nature, the tobacco manufacturer will not pay this additional tax with his own money. He can collect it in a reduced price to the grower, or he can add it to his price to the consumer, or both. If the tax be collected by an added price to the consumer, undoubtedly there will be decreased consumption of tobacco.

The consumer of cigarettes now pays a Federal tax of 6 cents per pack. A man using one pack per day already pays a tax of $21.60 a year to his Government. With the additional 1 cent per pack his tax would be $25.50 per year. We submit that this tax is more than the income tax required of a married man with a wife and three children, under existing law, who has a net income of $7,000.

Recently I saw a pack of 20 cigarettes to retail for 10 cents. Immediately I saw a Federal tax of 150 per cent—one and one-half times the total cost of the cigarettes ready for delivery to the consumer, including the price of the tobacco, its manufacturing cost, distributing costs, and all profits to the wholesaler, jobber, and retailer. In my mind, such a tax condition is the tyranny of which Mr. Jefferson spoke.

Hon. James C. Stone, chairman of the Federal Farm Board, in discussing the reduction of the tobacco tax before a congressional hearing, stated his belief that if the present taxes were cut in two that—

"The consumption would increase to such extent that the Government would get as much revenue from it as it does to-day, and at the same time give the producer a much greater demand for his product," and, in my judgment, a much better price for his product.

It is to be hoped that the Senate of the United States, now considering the tax bill, will not undertake to place an added burden upon the tobacco grower or the consuming public. When the sun shines through the dark economic clouds we hope that just consideration will be given the plea of the tobacco farmer for a material reduction of his tax burden. It will be a privilege to press the plea.

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, there is a bill upon the calendar providing for the establishment of a new Government agency to be known as the "Public Works Administration." This agency is to have charge of certain governmental construction work, but not to include river and harbor and flood-control work. The bill is H. R. 11011, as reported by a majority of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. Three members of the committee, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. WILLIAMSON], the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL], have filed minority report upon the bill.

It is not my purpose at this time to discuss the merits or demerits of the bill. I shall confine my remarks to certain statements in the minority report, pertaining to river and harbor work under the Corps of Engineers of the War Department. Many of these statements, in my judgment, are erroneous in fact and in the conclusions drawn, and constitute what I believe to be an unjust criticism of the personnel, and efficiency of one of our most important and useful Government agencies.

The minority report states:

> We are the only civilized government on earth, of any consequence, that does not have a consolidated public-works administration that brings within its folds all public construction of importance.

A study of the administrative organization of foreign governments shows that this is a very erroneous conclusion. For a number of years I have been in touch with the system in Canada. The work of river and harbor improvements there is spread among three departments. The major improvement of the St. Lawrence River, below Montreal, is carried out by the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The construction of the new Welland Ship Canal is under the Department of Railroads and Canals. The Department of Public Works is charged with minor works of waterway improvement only.

In Great Britain public works are spread among many government agencies. Port improvements are carried out by local public corporations, deriving their revenues in large part from tonnage dues. Control of the general waterway development is in the "Board of Trade." Lighthouse construction is under the Trinity corporation, while the Department of Public Works has jurisdiction over public buildings, forest grounds, parks, and monuments.

In Germany river and port development is under various State agencies and commissions, and the same situation is common in other European countries.

A report by the late General Bixby shows that the organization for river and harbor works in France is almost an absolute parallel with our existing system.

The minority report criticizes our system of waterway improvement, because its administrative head, the Secretary of War, is a civilian, who is not presumed to be familiar with the work. The report says:

> The Secretary of War is a civilian, but what does the average Secretary know about rivers and harbors work?

The bill advocated by these gentlemen also provides for a civilian to be placed at the head of the rivers and harbors work, who, in all probability, would know far less than a Secretary of War.

It is true that the Secretary of War is not supposed to possess the highly technical knowledge and training necessary for dealing with all the engineering problems of river and harbor works. But under our present system we have at the head of this work the Chief of Engineers and the Corps of Engineers, whose ability, training, and experience have no superiors. They are also as far removed from political influence as any class of citizens we have.

Under the bill advocated by these gentlemen, not the Secretary of War but another civilian is to be at the head of river and harbor improvements. He may or may not be superior to the Secretary of War. He is not required to be an engineer, and from the fact that he is to be at the head of all character and types of public works he can not possibly, from training or experience, have superior technical knowledge upon all of them. He will be an administrative officer and nothing more.

Experience shows that the distinguished men who have filled the important post of Secretary of War have ably carried out their duties in the matter of river and harbor administration. To change the administration of these works from a high Cabinet officer to a bureau chief, with express authority in the bill to either ignore or override and set aside the findings and conclusions of the Corps of Engineers, would soon lead to a disgraceful political situation, far more reprehensible than the so-called "pork barrel" practices that prevailed before the present system was perfected.

The minority report constitutes a bitter criticism of our military and naval academies, and a reflection upon the proficiency of the graduates of these institutions. It states:

West Point and Annapolis are not engineering schools. They are military schools where some engineering is taught. Those desiring proficiency in construction engineering must look elsewhere for their training. Why, then, the superiority of the West Pointers? It simply does not exist.

The standing of West Point and Annapolis as institutions of learning is too well known to need a defender. Those who seek to make a jest of these institutions acknowledge the weakness of their cause. Other institutions may have courses in engineering equal to, or possibly greater than, that of West Point. But it will be borne in mind that West Point is only the foundation for the course of training of the engineers in charge of our river and harbor improvements.

The report further says:

The fact is that at no time has the real job of improving rivers and harbors been done by Army engineers. The men who are on the job year out and year in are civilian engineers. With few exceptions, the technicians are civilians. So are the engineers who prepare the plans and specifications and who do the work. Why should the superior be under the domination of a military clique by far their inferior in technical training and practical experience.

It is not uncommon for a district engineer to have several surveying parties engaged at the same time measuring the watershed of a river. He may also have several draftsmen engaged in drawing plans and making blue prints. Other engineers may be making plans for a bridge or designs for a lock and dam. It is physically impossible for the district engineer to do all these works himself. Such would also be the case in the event the work should be transferred to a new bureau, as recommended by these gentlemen.

Under the present system the officers of the Corps of Engineers in charge of the engineer division and districts are the responsible directing heads of the river and harbor construction under their charge. They supervise the activities of the engineers drawn from the civil service but are wholly responsible for their activities. It is not humanly possible for one man to possess the varied technique of all portions of construction work. Every engineer in charge of important work must employ draftsmen who can draw better than he, surveyors who are more skillful than he with their instruments, and computers especially skilled in such activities.

The minority report further states:

Rivers and harbors work has been an expensive school in which to train young Army engineers under the present arrangement. For a hundred years we have had the spectacle of the untrained and inexperienced supervising the highly trained and experienced that the former may get "practical" experience for something supposed to be useful to him in time of war. True, we have developed some excellent Army engineers at heavy public cost; but the supposed efficiency of the young engineers who are sent out on detail is a myth, and it is time this superiority-complex fetish is exploded.

The report further says:

During our entire history our rivers and harbors and flood-control program has suffered from lack of long-time planning and continuity of policy. Necessarily this must be so. The law does not permit a detail for more than four years. The average is about three years. This applies to the Corps of Engineers and its chief. Differences of opinion of succeeding chiefs have not been conducive to either efficiency, speed, or economy.

There is no provision of law limiting the detail of officers of the Corps of Engineers to four years. Long-time planning and continuity of policy have been carried out in the administration of the river and harbor work. Shifting of officers from station to station has been found to be an essential element in securing such continuity and general policy. It produces a uniformity of practice impossible under a system in which a man is retained in a single local position for life. In such case an engineer's views would become localized, and he would lose the national viewpoint in course of time.

Although the engineers of the corps are shifted from one place to another every few years, they are still retained in the actual operation of river and harbor work and given a wider range of thought for more effective planning.

There can be no question as to the actual experience of the Corps of Engineers. A district engineer has in every instance had a course of study and actual experience of from 10 to 20 years or more. The late General Taylor had been in line of river and harbor work 42 years at the time of his retirement, and General Jadwin's experience was about the same. General Brown, the present efficient chief, has had a remarkable experience. How can it be reasonably claimed that these men are less efficient than the man who may be selected through political influences for the proposed position of public works administrator? Such contention simply falls by its own gravity.

The minority report further says:

After an expenditure of more than a billion and a half our inland-waterways system is of little value to the country at large.

Just where the gentlemen got their figures of a "billion and a half" on our inland waterways I am not advised. Evidently they did not obtain them from any official source.

Our total expenditures for all river and harbor works under the Army Engineers, for a period of about 110 years, and including costs of improvement and maintenances, up to June 30, 1930, was only $1,210,683,644.12. Of this sum only $415,381,911.94 had been expended on the Mississippi system. Additional to these figures the sum of $99,524,-912.41 had been expended for care and operation of canals and other works. I am advised that the expenditures on the Mississippi and its tributaries to the present time are $419,304,129.

Of the expenditures made for improvement and maintenance for rivers and harbors, not including flood-control work, to June 30, 1930, totaling $1,210,683,644.12, the expenditures upon our Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf ports accounted for $517,401,686.02, while $181,306,210.74 of the sum total were expended upon the Great Lakes.

As to our inland waters being "of little value to the country at large," I will say that this is a conclusion which the facts do not warrant. These rivers and canals for many years provided the only means of inland transportation our country afforded.

From about 1880 up to the administration of Theodore Roosevelt the railroads succeeded in practically destroying all river transportation. Since then great advancement has been made in river improvement, and in so far as the rivers have been placed in condition for handling traffic they have performed a great service to the country.

The Mississippi, the Ohio, and the Monongahela are fair examples of the use that is being made of our rivers. These streams in 1929 carried a total of 65,000,000 tons of freight, with a valuation of more than $1,000,000,000. If Congress has failed to provide the money for completing the improvement of more of our rivers, so that they can be performing a service to our country, it is not the fault of the engineers.

The course at West Point is four years. The portion of classroom time given to purely military subjects is small. Upon his completion of the course, the cadet's engineering status is the same as that of B. S. in the leading technical institutions. This is so recognized by the American Society of Civil Engineers.

After graduation at West Point the Army engineer is sent out as a student officer for two years with a river and harbor or flood control district. There he learns every task from lockman to dredge hand, from surveyor to chief of party. He then takes a postgraduate course for one year at one of our leading technical institutions in order to be in touch with the best the country affords from every available source. He then takes a special river and harbor course for one year at the Engineering School at Fort Humphreys. There he gets the benefit of a course that is not available at any other institution in the United States.

After completing the course at Fort Humphreys the engineer is detailed to duty as assistant to a district engineer. Later he is in line for promotion to district and then division engineer; also, for membership on the Board of Engineers and as Chief of Engineers. If this long course of intensive and effective training is to be treated as a joke, then we had better tear down our institutions of learning and return to the stage of primitive man.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

Mr. McDUFFIE rose.

The SPEAKER. Is it the intention of the gentleman from Alabama to ask that the House take a recess until 7.30?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to lay before the House a message from the President before that is done.

VETO OF THE PENSION BILL

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the president (H. Doc. 322):

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning without approval H. R. 9575, entitled "An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and so forth, and to certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors."

The bill contains a total of 367 items establishing special pensions and increased allowances to persons who have not been able to comply with the general laws. The bill contains many meritorious cases and a just recognition of their equities which can not be reached under these laws. I regret exceedingly, however, that I must withhold approval of the bill because of the number of cases which I do not deem worthy of public bounty. Most of these undeserving cases have been previously rejected by the Pension Bureau as having no sound basis upon which to construe any obligation in equity for the granting of special benefits.

As I do not wish to reflect upon any individual, I cite some instances in the bill without mentioning names, the facts as to which have been furnished to me by the Government agencies. And I may state that these are only examples and do not include the whole of the list which I believe would be excluded if the matter were reconsidered by the Congress. Such instances comprise:

A proposed pension for a man who was court-martialed for drunkenness and conduct prejudicial to good order, sentenced to six months' confinement, and whose conduct during confinement was so bad that he was finally discharged without honor for the good of the service.

A proposed pension to a man who was discharged without honor because of chronic alcoholism.

A proposed pension to a widow whose claim was filed five years after the death of the veteran, and upon call having been made for evidence of legal widowhood, claimant abandoned her claim for a period of 25 years. A recent investigation indicates claimant was never the legal wife of the soldier.

A proposed pension to a man guilty of desertion and dishonorably discharged.

A proposed pension to a man shown to have been a deserter, to have been punished by confinement, and discharged without honor.

A proposed pension to a man for self-inflicted injuries incurred in attempted suicide.

A proposed pension to a man who was tried for desertion, convicted of absence without leave, and honorably discharged, having been found to have been mentally deficient, a condition that antedated his enlistment. There was no disability relating to service on which Federal pension should be granted.

A proposed pension to a would-be suicide, no disability relating to service on which Federal pension should be granted being indicated.

A proposed pension for a widow whose husband gave eight days' service, with no disability relating to the service.

A proposed pension to a man who still suffers from a wound in the throat self-inflicted with a razor, with no disability relating to the service.

A proposed pension for loss of a leg as the result of being struck by the fender of a street car while claimant was lying on the track in a completely intoxicated condition.

A proposed pension to a widow whose husband had only nine days' service in a State militia, for which reimbursement was made by the United States; no disability relating to service being found.

A proposed pension to a man who spent most of his service in the hospital and was discharged without honor because of diseases not contracted in line of duty; was shown to have been guilty of malingering by taking soap pills to aid him in appearing anemic, and was recorded to have remarked that he knew "how to play it and proposed doing it as long as he could." His physical condition was not the result of service.

A proposed pension to a man discharged without honor because of diseases not contracted in the service in line of duty, his condition not being one upon which Federal benefits should be based.

I could add other instances, but it seems to me that even this number which appear neither to have law nor equity to justify them, warrants a revision of the bill, and that a larger dependence should be placed upon reports which are easily obtainable from the pension service.

HERBERT HOOVER.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 27, 1932.

The SPEAKER. The message will be spread upon the Journal and printed as a public document.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the committee is away, and at his request I ask unanimous consent that the message go over until next Tuesday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

RECESS

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess until 7.30 o'clock to-night.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I offer as an amendment that the House adjourn until 12 o'clock to-morrow. We are all tired now and will accomplish no useful purpose by coming back here to-night.

The SPEAKER. A motion to adjourn is of higher privilege.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LaGUARDIA].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PARKS) there were—ayes 31, noes 60.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE].

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.), the House stood in recess until 7.30 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION

The recess having expired, at 7.30 o'clock p. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

Mr. LaGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman wish to keep the House in session later than we planned on?

Mr. LaGUARDIA. We are going to have another roll call later on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed, the Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 57]

Abernethy	Douglass, Mass.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Sanders, N. Y.
Adkins	Doutrich	Kading	Seger
Andresen	Dowell	Kemp	Selberling
Arentz	Drane	Kendall	Sinclair
Bacon	Erk	Kleberg	Smith, Va.
Baldrige	Estep	Kurtz	Smith, W. Va.
Beck	Evans, Mont.	Lambeth	Somers, N. Y.
Beedy	Finley	Larrabee	Stalker
Bloom	Fish	Larsen	Stevenson
Boileau	Fishburne	Lea	Stokes
Bolton	Flannagan	Lehlbach	Strong, Pa.
Boylan	Freeman	Linthicum	Sullivan, Pa.
Briggs	French	Ludlow	Sumners, Tex.
Brumm	Gilbert	McFadden	Sutphin
Buckbee	Gillen	McMillan	Swick
Burtness	Golder	McReynolds	Taber
Busby	Goldsborough	McSwain	Thatcher
Campbell, Pa.	Goss	Magrady	Treadway
Canfield	Griffin	Manlove	Tucker
Celler	Griswold	Martin, Oreg.	Wason
Chapman	Hall, Miss.	Millard	Watson
Chase	Hancock, N. Y.	Mitchell	Whitley
Chavez	Harlan	Moore, Ohio	Wigglesworth
Chindblom	Haugen	Murphy	Williams, Tex.
Cochran, Pa.	Hogg, Ind.	Oliver, Ala.	Wolfenden
Collier	Hope	Owen	Wood, Ga.
Coyle	Hornor	Patman	Wyant
Crowe	Houston	Pettengill	Yates
Davenport	Hull, Morton D.	Pou	Yon
De Priest	Igoe	Pratt, Mrs.
Dominick	Jeffers	Purnell
Doughton	Johnson, Ill.	Ransley

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and six Members present—a quorum.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 11267, the legislative appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. WARREN in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CLANCY].

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for leave to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD, and insert a letter from the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Chairman, one of the most sensational features of the economy bill, if not the most, was the joker compelling the sale of priceless property of the United States Government. Sale was ordered in New York Harbor of 4 piers of the value of over $50,000,000, of 2 in Boston, of 3 piers and wharfage at San Francisco, of 1 at Manila, and of 1 at Honolulu.

These piers which should be the property of the Government for many years to come, and which should be leased rather than sold, would be sacrificed on the market at panic prices if this joker worked.

The insertion of this joker was discovered by me, and I was the first to inform the chairman of the House Economy Committee, who was thunderstruck when he realized the meaning of the few words on pages 19 and 20 in section 308 of the so-called economy bill, H. R. 11597.

The fateful words were—

The Secretary of War shall dispose of as much of the property of the United States (other than vessels used in connection with such service), the Army Transport Service—

And so forth.

I was also the first to inform the War Department of the joker, and the department was astounded.

The Assistant Secretary of War, Colonel Payne, said:

Al Capone in his most daring schemes never planned as bold a feat as this.

My committee, the Merchant Marine, Radio, and Fisheries Committee, discussed for two years the disposition of the Hoboken piers and wharfage opposite New York City without arriving at any action. The Hoboken piers, seized from German shipping interests during the World War, are valued at about $7,000,000, yet here in this joker the Brooklyn piers and wharfage, valued at over $50,000,000, were ordered sold in veiled and hidden language without hearings being held, without even the committee knowing that the language of the bill ordered them to be sold, and certainly without the knowledge of the Members of the House.

Honest and honorable language would have named the Brooklyn piers and wharfage, the two Boston piers, the three San Francisco piers, and the piers and wharfage at the first line of defense in Honolulu and Manila.

Anybody who knows anything about harbor development knows that water frontage in cities which are going to last for hundreds of years is absolutely invaluable. My own city of Detroit knows that; so does New Orleans, New York City, Boston, San Francisco, and so do the great European, Asiatic, and Latin American maritime cities.

Yet here in a joker of a few words are these marvelous piers and wharfage thrown to the wolves—ordered sold at a time when they can bring in the open market probably only 5 or 10 per cent of their real value.

Now, what did the Economy Committee do this morning when informed of my protests? Members were furious at the trick played upon them and ordered language written to kill the joker and to reverse the action.

Instead of mandatorily ordering the Secretary of War to sell the piers and wharfage, they mandatorily ordered him not to sell them.

Thus were the interests which have been trying for the past few years to get these piers and wharfage foiled.

I now give the letter sent to me to-day at my request of yesterday from Assistant Secretary of War Payne.

I particularly call attention to the last two paragraphs, emphasizing the iniquity of the joker which I discovered and which ordered the sale of the piers and wharfage at unfair prices.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 27, 1932.

Hon. ROBERT H. CLANCY,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CLANCY: Replying to your inquiry regarding House bill 11597, your attention is invited to section 308, which directs the Secretary of War to discontinue the Army Transport Service and dispose of the property used in connection with such service.

The discontinuance of the Army Transport Service would be a serious blow to the efficiency and morale of the Army, and would materially increase the cost of transportation for the Army.

The Army Transport Service is an integral part of the Military Establishment. It is the Army's overseas field train prepared for service at any place to follow the troops just as the regimental field train follows the Infantry regiment. It is essential that it be maintained under Army control just as all other supply units, communications, and other branches of the S O S. No army in all history has failed to have at its command adequate supply systems for its outposts. The existence of this service has saved the Government a total of over $40,000,000 since 1903. The incident voyage of the transport Republic will save the Government over $400,000 above what the same service of this one voyage would cost if done by commercial lines at the lowest rates now obtainable.

The clause directing disposition of the property used in connection with the Army Transport Service would involve the sale of valuable piers just at a time when values are at the lowest level, resulting in an enormous financial loss to the Government.

In my opinion, the impelling impulse back of this effort is not directed primarily at destruction of the Army Transport Service, but is aimed by virtue of such destruction at the possession of the War Department shore establishments, representing at New York alone a valuation of $50,000,000, which they hope to obtain for a small fraction of their real value.

Sincerely yours,

F. H. PAYNE,
Acting Secretary of War.

I also give a letter to me, dated to-day, from Hon. S. S. Sandberg, commissioner of the United States Shipping Board.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD,
Washington, April 26, 1932.

Hon. ROBERT H. CLANCY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: With further reference to our telephone conversation of this afternoon regarding additional information and valuation of various piers owned by the Government. The piers listed below were not appraised when turned over to the United States Shipping Board and have not been appraised since, except Hoboken.

Boston Army base: Under date of May 2, 1921, the Secretary of War granted to the United States Shipping Board permit for the use and occupancy of the Boston Army base under certain terms and conditions.

Hoboken terminal: The Shipping Board is presently in possession of certain property consisting of piers and terminal facilities at Hoboken. The property was acquired by the United States from the North German Lloyd and Hamburg-American Steamship Cos. and subsequently transferred to the United States Shipping Board in fee simple by four Executive orders, the last one dated November 2, 1921.

This pier property, together with certain other buildings on the demised premises, was appraised on June 30, 1924, at $7,098,205.

Charleston Army base: On November 3, 1923, by Executive order of President Coolidge, a portion of the Charleston Army base was transferred from the War Department to the United States Shipping Board under certain terms and conditions.

Philadelphia Army base: Under date of April 13, 1921, the Secretary of War granted to the United States Shipping Board permit for the use and occupancy of the Philadelphia Army supply base, under certain terms and conditions.

Norfolk Army base: By Executive order of President Coolidge, dated June 27, 1924, a portion of the Norfolk Army base was transferred from control of the War Department to control of the United States Shipping Board.

NOTE.—Full particulars regarding the acquisition of Hoboken property may be found in the shipping act, pages 96–105.

Full particulars regarding the acquisition of Charleston Army base may be found in the shipping act, pages 105–107.

Full particulars regarding the acquisition of Boston Army base may be found in the shipping act, pages 107–110.

Copy of the shipping act is inclosed for your convenience.

The purpose of turning the bases over to the United States Shipping Board was to aid American-flag lines in the development of an American merchant marine.

The properties listed above are the finest piers and facilities in those particular ports and are a very valuable asset to the United States Government in times of national emergencies.

If you desire further information do not hesitate to call upon me.

Yours very truly,

S. S. SANDBERG, Commissioner.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, we are in the midst of a crisis such as this country has never faced before in war time or in peace time. In a way, we are still a new country. We have blundered along, made mistakes, but because of our location, the wide expanse of our territory, we have always gotten through without bad consequences. We have not learned how to meet crises with dispatch. Other countries have learned that. It took England 48 hours to get off the gold standard. If we should face a crisis like that, making it necessary for us to get off the gold standard quickly, in order to save our very existence, under our way of doing business we would talk and delay and procrastinate here in Congress until the ship of state was sunk. We were 18 months considering a tariff bill. Canada, in May, 1930, considered a tariff bill with nearly as many changes in rates as we had. The bill was introduced one day and the Minister of the Exchequer announced that that would go into effect the next day, and it did go into effect the next day.

I am as liberal on rules as anyone here, but I say to you that the dictatorships that have been set up in Europe since the war have been set up because the parliamentary bodies in those countries had neither program nor leadership to come to an agreement to act expeditiously to meet the peculiar situations that confronted them. I am not in favor of amending our form of government, and I would not go to the parliamentary systems of Europe, where, when leadership fails to command a majority, it resigns; but this Congress has to learn to discipline itself, and when we are confronted with a crisis to law aside our ideas about liberality of amendment and debate, in which we can indulge in normal times. There is no question in my mind—and I am not saying this in the way of criticism or censure because of the attitude of anyone on the revenue bill—that our failure to act with dispatch and pass a revenue bill in order to balance the Budget has had a disastrous effect upon business. Business to-day does not know what to expect.

If we could have passed a revenue bill within a few days or a few weeks at the outside, even though it had inequitable provisions in it, business could and would have adjusted itself to the new situation and have gone on, but here we have had a revenue bill before the Congress for three months, the end is not yet in sight, and business does not know how to proceed and will not know how to proceed until it knows what the additional tax burdens are to be. When the revenue bill was before this House we went upon the assumption that with the reductions in appropriations which the Appropriations Committee contemplated, we would have to find means of further reducing and curtailing Government expenditures to the extent of upwards of $200,000,000 in order to balance the Budget. Almost everyone in the House agreed that we had to balance the Budget, that it is important to do so.

A year ago I gave a statement to the press in which I called attention to the fact that we were running behind and that we could not continue to borrow to meet peace-time expenditures without disastrous results. In November of last year the Treasury Department took the same attitude, and when Congress convened we went to work to balance the Budget. The revenue bill has passed this House, and it is pending in another body. How soon that will be completed we do not know.

A few months ago—about 10 weeks ago—this body created the Economy Committee. The Economy Committee was created purposely to aid in finding ways and means to curtail the governmental expenditures so as to balance the Budget. The Economy Committee has been in daily session ever since. About three weeks ago a second or third message came from the President in regard to the importance of curtailing governmental expenditures and making consolidations.

The committee invited the President to present his views relative to the best way of meeting the situation. The result was that the President invited us to the White House. We sat one Saturday all day around the table with the President. In the next week, on Wednesday, we spent a whole afternoon with him discussing ways and means across the Cabinet table to meet this situation. Before the President's message and before we were invited down to the White House this committee had considered some of these provisions in the bill, among others the pay cut. The committee tentatively agreed to but never reported out a bill to reduce salaries all along the line. The first day we were at the White House the chairman of the committee frankly asked the President whether he would approve that pay cut. The President gave his reasons why he was opposed to it and presented another proposition. That is the proposal known as the furlough plan, which is not in the committee print of the omnibus bill, but which will be offered as a substitute to title 1 when we come to read the bill. In the brief time allotted to me I wish to explain to you the difference between the pay-cut plan and the furlough plan.

The pay-cut plan has been explained to you by the chairman of the committee, Mr. MCDUFFIE. It provides for a reduction in pay of 11 per cent, with an exemption of $1,000. That plan will save $67,000,000. There is some talk here of offering an amendment to raise the exemption to $2,000. That would reduce the savings of this item down to eighteen and a half million dollars. You gentlemen who agreed, or seemed to agree, when the revenue bill was under consideration that we had to balance the Budget, especially you gentlemen who did not agree with the committee in the revenue bill, after striking out the important features of that bill, did not have a program to present to balance the Budget. I want to impress upon you who are still for balancing the Budget and who seem to have approved of the policy that $200,000,000 more saving had to be made, that before you start to cut on any part of this bill you either ought to have ready to present something else that will make a saving of $200,000,000 or you ought to amend your professions that you are for balancing the Budget. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I would rather not. I shall after a while when I get further along.

Mr. BRITTEN. I merely wanted to ascertain if the gentleman's $18,000,000 saving——

Mr. RAMSEYER. I am not yielding.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RAMSEYER. We are in a crisis. The economic situation is serious, bordering on the dangerous. That fact can not be brushed aside. I am often impressed when I see how this House functions that everybody in the United States knows there is a crisis except the Members of this House. [Applause.] We have to meet this crisis. As I stated, if the debacle on the revenue bill had a distressing effect on business and shook the confidence of the people in Congress, I am here to tell you that if you fail, in the bill that is now before you, to reduce governmental expenditures upward of $200,000,000, you will again shock business, and such confidence as there is left in Congress will be still further diminished.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Not now.

Now, we are operating under a liberal rule, and the people are going to judge you by the way you conduct yourselves during the consideration of this measure. I am not trying to discourage amendments, but let your amendments be constructive and let your amendments be such that the object to be attained will not be defeated by your amendments. The people of this country, especially the people who live in the rural sections, such as I represent, expect this Congress to consider and pass a bill that will effect a saving of upward of $200,000,000.

Now I want to go to this bill. At the proper time I intend to offer a substitute for Title I. When the time comes you can get copies of committee print, which was printed for your convenience, containing this substitute.

The furlough plan, in the first place, recognizes the principle of the 5-day week. The per diem employees are now on a 5½-day week. Instead of having a 5½-day week they will have a 5-day week and will be paid proportionately. For all annual employees we do, in effect, the same thing that we do for the per diem employees. The per diem employees will lose one-half day each week. Fifty-two weeks in the year means 26 days annually. The annual employees will be given a furlough without pay for one month. In both instances the bill does not apply to employees who receive $1,200 a year and less, and in no case will the employee's salary be reduced below $1,200.

Now, I know Members of this House are more intimately acquainted with the Postal Service than they are with any other service. It touches all people. I was a member of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads for a number of years up until four or five years ago. I think I know something about the Postal Service. I had the Post Office Department prepare a chart which will give you a picture of how both plans will work as to the postal employees.

The statement is as follows:

Statement comparing the furlough plan with the 11 per cent salary-cut plan as applied to the Postal Service

Branch of service	Present number of regular employees	Present total regular pay roll	Saving by 11 per cent cut	Effect of 1 month's furlough plan
				Gross saving	Cost of additional substitute service	Net saving	Number of additional substitutes employed
Post Office Department	1,450	$2,969,660	$167,163	$253,000		$253,000
Inspection service	664	2,369,200	187,572	197,000		197,000
First and second class postmasters	4,688	13,618,700	962,377	1,138,000		1,138,000
Third-class postmasters	10,800	18,185,200	812,372
Fourth-class postmasters	32,870	18,996,100
Assistant postmasters	2,776	7,113,800	477,158	595,000	$199,000	396,000
Clerks, etc., first and second class offices	76,520	162,792,760	9,490,004	12,935,000	1,560,000	11,375,000	5,000
City letter carriers	53,014	110,743,100	6,350,201	9,305,000	2,280,000	7,025,000	7,000
Village carriers	1,008	1,326,500	35,035	110,000	30,000	80,000	100
Rural carriers	41,597	84,849,244	4,757,747	10,312,500		10,312,500
Railway postal clerks, etc	21,211	51,834,550	3,368,590	4,325,000	810,000	3,515,000	2,000
Motor vehicle service	3,818	7,826,050	440,885	652,000	157,000	495,000	400
Mail bag repair shops	421	676,150	28,066	49,420		49,420
Miscellaneous	238	540,540	33,280	45,045		45,045
Total	251,075	483,841,554	27,130,450	39,916,965	5,036,000	34,880,965	14,500

NOTE.—Rural carriers' equipment allowance reduced to 1½ cents per mile in lieu of furlough.

Mr. RAMSEYER. At the top you see "Statement comparing the furlough plan with the 11 per cent salary cut, as applied to the Postal Service."

In the first column is the branch of the service.

In the second column the present number of regular employees in each branch of the service. Altogether there are 251,075.

The third column is the present total regular pay roll of each branch of the service.

In the fourth column is the saving by the 11 per cent cut. The 11 per cent cut reduces expenditures for the Post Office Department $27,130,450.

In the remainder of the chart is a subheading "Effect of the one month's furlough plan." In the first column under this subheading is the gross saving from each of the services. That is $39,916,965 total.

In the second column is the cost of additional substitute service, which is a total of $5,036,000.

In the third column is the net saving, which is $34,880,965.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa nine additional minutes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. In the last column is the number of substitute employees which can be worked in under this plan, 14,500. The number of substitutes in the Postal Service—that is, men on part-time work—is something like 30,000. Under this plan the estimate for additional substitutes, as estimated by the Post Office Department, will be something like 14,500 men. In the bill as presented to you the Saturday half holiday is done away with, which, of course, lengthens the week for the Postal Service from five and one-half days to six days. In the furlough plan we leave it at five and one-half days, which increases the number of substitutes that can be used.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. In just a moment.

Then the furlough plan for annual employees of one month without pay gives employment to additional substitutes.

The rural carriers, under the pay-cut plan, of course, are cut just as all other employees. That is, 11 per cent over the $1,000 exemption. The furlough plan does not apply to the rural carriers, nor, of course, does the Saturday half holiday apply. The rural carriers are reduced in pay in that instead of receiving 4 cents a mile for equipment allowance they receive 1½ cents.

Now I yield to my colleague for a question.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. The gentleman inferred that the 5½-day week would continue in force under the furlough plan. It was my understanding of the furlough plan that, in effect, either by reason of reducing the per diem employee to five days, or by reason of compelling the annual employee to take a month's leave without pay, the week would be shortened to five days, which in substance was the reason for the necessity for employing additional substitutes. Otherwise it is not clear in my mind as to why additional substitutes must be employed.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The per diem employees are placed on a 5-day week plan. The annual employees are not changed.

Of course, the annual employees in the department here in Washington get 30 days leave now; in the field they get 15 days leave. The nature of the work in the Post Office Department is such that when one of the employees goes on leave a substitute must be put in his place, and the substitute receives less pay than the salary of the regular employee. There is where the saving comes in.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. And that is why additional substitutes must be employed.

Mr. RAMSEYER. That is correct. One argument for the furlough plan which is fairly plain is to prevent the discharge of employees, by staggering the work; and, if the appropriations are greatly cut too much in the appropriation bills, as there seems to be a tendency in the Senate to do, this furlough plan contemplates that there will be less discharges of employees in the Government services, and in the Post Office Department and some other services there will be room for substitute workers.

The idea of staggering is to make it less necessary to discharge employees and to give more of the employees work. It is true that some of them under this plan lose a little more in dollars and cents than under the pay-cut plan, but there is a principle involved which has been carried out in many of the industries; that is, that rather than discharge employees the work is spread among more employees. It is true it results in reduction in pay over a long period of time.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. If the gentleman will yield for just a very brief statement, I think what the gentleman has said proves my contention that the furlough plan, in effect, reduces the working week of the annual employees in the Postal Service in the District and in the field from 5½ days to 5 days per week, and that that, in essence, is the reason for the necessity of employing additional substitutes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman's statement is correct. Of course, in the Post Office Department the per diem employees are not as numerous as they are in some other Government establishments, as the navy yards and some other branches of the Government service. If I understand the Postal Service correctly there are not so many per diem employees in it. The employees mostly are on annual pay rolls.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSEYER. If it is a question with regard to the operation of the furlough plan, I yield; yes.

Mr. BOWMAN. With reference to the rural carriers, have you estimated the difference between the 1½ cents per mile and the reduction that would be effected by the furlough plan?

Mr. RAMSEYER. The furlough plan can not be applied to rural carriers in such a way as to produce any savings, because the substitutes in that service will receive the same pay as the regular carriers. The rural carrier, in the furlough plan, loses a little more than one month's pay.

Mr. BOWMAN. How does that reduction compare with the 11 per cent reduction?

Mr. RAMSEYER. Of course, on different salaries it is a little different. Any salary can be divided by 12 and the reduction effected by the furlough plan ascertained. It can be figured out by the pay-cut plan, and the two results compared. Let me be frank—in dollars and cents under the pay-cut plan many employees lose some dollars less than they would lose under the furlough plan. The furlough plan saves more money for the Treasury, and at the same time makes it less necessary to discharge employees. It is more economical and beyond question more humane. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

PART II

TITLE I.—COMPENSATION REDUCTION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

SECTION 101. As used in this title, the term "compensation" means any salary, pay, wage, allowance (except allowances for subsistence, quarters, heat, light, and travel), or other emolument paid for services rendered in any civilian or noncivilian office, position, employment, or enlistment; and includes the retired pay of judges, and the retired pay of all commissioned, warrant, enlisted, and other personnel of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Lighthouse Service, and the Public Health Service; but does not include payments out of any retirement, disability, or relief fund made up wholly or in part of contributions of employees.

SCHEDULE OF TEMPORARY REDUCTIONS

SEC. 102. (a) During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, the compensation for each civilian and noncivilian office, position, employment, or enlistment in any branch or service of the United States Government or the government of the District of Columbia is hereby reduced as follows: Compensation at an annual rate of $1,000 or less shall be exempt from reduction; and compensation at an annual rate in excess of $1,000 shall be reduced by 11 per cent of the amount thereof in excess of $1,000.

(b) For the purposes of determining the percentage of reduction under this section applicable to any office, position, employment, or enlistment the compensation for which is calculated on a piecework, hourly, or per diem basis, the annual rate of compensation shall be held to be the total amount which would be payable for the regular working hours and on the basis of 307 working days, or the number of working days on the basis of which such compensation is calculated, whichever is the greater.

EXEMPTIONS FROM REDUCTION

SEC. 103. Section 102 of this title shall not apply to—

(a) any office, position, employment, or enlistment the compensation for which is expressly fixed by international agreement, or

(b) compensation paid under the terms of any contract in effect on the date of enactment of this act if such compensation may not lawfully be reduced, or

(c) any office the compensation of which may not, under the Constitution, be diminished, in the case of any incumbent, during the term for which he was elected or during his continuance in office, unless the application of such sections to such office will not result in a diminution of compensation prohibited by the Constitution, or

(d) any office, position, employment, or enlistment the compensation for which is adjustable to conform to the prevailing local rate for similar work; but the wage board or other body charged with the duty of making such adjustment shall immediately take such action as may be necessary to effect such adjustment, or

(e) commissioners of the United States Shipping Board; members of the Federal Farm Board (except the Secretary of Agriculture); members of the International Joint Commission, United States section; or members of the Board of Mediation.

GOVERNMENT CORPORATIONS

SEC. 104. In the case of a corporation the majority of the stock of which is owned by the United States, the holders of the stock on behalf of the United States, or such persons as represent the interest of the United States in such corporation, shall take such action as may be necessary to apply the provisions of sections 101, 102, and 103 to offices, positions, and employments under such corporation and to officers and employees thereof.

SUSPENSION OF SATURDAY HALF HOLIDAYS

SEC. 105. (a) The provisions of the act entitled "An act providing for Saturday half holidays for certain Government employees," approved March 3, 1931 (U. S. C., Sup. V, title 5, sec. 26a), shall be inoperative during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and the provisions of law amended by such act shall apply as if such act had not been enacted.

(b) The provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide a shorter work week for postal employees, and for other purposes," approved February 17, 1931 (U. S. C., title 39, sec. 831), shall be inoperative during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, except in the case of employees of the Railway Mail Service, and the provisions of law amended by such act (except in so far as they relate to employees of the Railway Mail Service) shall apply as if such act had not been enacted.

REMITTANCES FROM CONSTITUTIONAL OFFICERS

SEC. 106. In any case in which the application of the provisions of this title to any person would result in a diminution of compensation prohibited by the Constitution, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept from such person, and cover into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, remittance of such part of the compensation of such person as would not be paid to him if such diminution of compensation were not prohibited.

REDUCTIONS INAPPLICABLE WHEN COMMODITY PRICE LEVEL RISES

SEC. 107. If at any time prior to June 30, 1933, the President finds that for a period of 120 days the average wholesale commodity price level is within 10 points as high as the average wholesale commodity price level of the year 1926, indicated by the figure 100 in the revised index of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor, he shall issue a proclamation to that effect, and upon the issuance of such proclamation the foregoing provisions of this title shall cease to be in effect.

LIMITATION OF JURISDICTION OF COURTS

SEC. 108. No court of the United States shall have jurisdiction of any suit against the United States or against any officer, agency, or instrumentality of the United States arising out of the application of any provision of this title, unless such suit involves the Constitution of the United States.

PERMANENT SALARY REDUCTIONS

SEC. 109. Beginning July 1, 1932, the salary of each of the members of the International Joint Commission, United States section, shall be at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

SEC. 110. Beginning July 1, 1932, the salaries of the commissioners of the United States Shipping Board, the members of the Federal Farm Board (except the Secretary of Agriculture), and the members of the Board of Mediation shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

SEC. 111. Beginning July 1, 1933—

(a) The salaries of the appointive members of the Federal Reserve Board, the commissioners of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and the commissioners of the United States Tariff Commission shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

(b) The salaries of all judges (except judges whose compensation may not, under the Constitution, be diminished), if such salaries are in excess of $10,000 per annum, shall be at the rate of $10,000 per annum.

APPROPRIATIONS IMPOUNDED

SEC. 112. The appropriations or portions of appropriations unexpended by reason of the operation of this title shall not be used for any other purposes but shall be impounded and returned to the Treasury.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Page 2, lines 14, 16, and 17, strike out "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,000."

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, because it is my impression the House is under a serious misapprehension.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] has referred to other savings or to other reductions in expenditures which might be effected as a result of consolidations or mergers which the Economy Committee at some future time might possibly recommend to the House.

In the first place, it is difficult to estimate what savings, if any, will result from consolidations and mergers. It is difficult to state with any degree of accuracy that there will be, as a matter of fact, any savings resulting from consolidations and mergers. There are unquestionably overlapping activities between the various bureaus and agencies of the various executive departments and of the independent establishments, but it is, I repeat, difficult to state what economies, as a matter of fact and not as a matter of speculation, can be effected as a result of consolidation. The only way concrete, definite savings can be effected is by eliminating activities.

The Economy Committee felt, and I think it felt with some justice, that in view of the proposed cuts now under way by the body at the other end of the Capitol, it would hardly be fair for it to superimpose upon those cuts additional cuts. It would hardly be intelligent to impose upon the cuts contemplated by the Senate additional cuts in this body, and it felt that until the action of the other body had become perfectly clear, it would be almost an act of injustice to do anything more than that which the committee has here done.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] proposes to raise the exemption under Title I to $2,000. The gentleman from New York has stated that the Economy Committee in approaching the problem of economy proceeded along the following lines, by stating that so much money had to be saved as the result of cutting pay; and after having determined how much money should be saved, the Economy Committee thereafter proceeded to erect a formula which would save that given amount.

Much as I respect the gentleman from New York, I take issue with him on the assumption which he has made. Let me give you, or attempt to give you, what appears to me to be a clear statement of the Federal salary situation.

In the first place, I will admit, and admit frankly, to the Members of the House that there are inequalities in the pay scale. I would not attempt to deny this; but within the limited period of time at the disposal of the committee it was impossible, it seemed to us, to equalize these inequalities.

The first fact which stands out clearly in any survey of Federal pay is that approximately 70 per cent of the pay roll is to be found in the $2,400 bracket or under; and the second fact which stands out clearly, I think, as a result of a review of the report of the Personnel Classification Board, is that Federal employees receiving, as I recall it—I may be off $50 or $100—$1,800 or less are better paid than the same class employed in similar occupations in private life, whereas those receiving $1,800 or more in the Federal employ are receiving comparatively less than those occupying similar positions in private life.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment that is pending increasing the exemption to $2,500.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute amendment offered by Mr. BRITTEN to the amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: Strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500."

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, my first impulse was to offer a substitute providing for an exemption of $3,000, but after hearing the distinguished gentleman from Arizona, Mr. DOUGLAS, and his statement that 70 per cent of all the employees of the Government are in the brackets below $2,500 I changed my mind and offered an amendment for an exemption of $2,500.

Surely, while this economy histeria is going on, we do not want to suggest that our hundreds of thousands of Federal employees all over the United States merely work to live or to exist. There must be something else in life besides mere work.

It is true that we should think of conserving the Treasury. It is true, as the gentleman from Iowa has said, we should think of business and business conditions; but it is also true that we hold in the palm of our hands the destiny for the next year, the activity, the life, the happiness, the welfare of hundreds of thousands of employees of the Government. [Applause.] They are our principal charge and we must not destroy them. They constitute a great national asset.

Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to allow myself to be stampeded by a lot of this silly hysteria that has been going on in this House this afternoon. We are working at cross purposes. We are taking the bull by the wrong end [laughter], and I mean it; and we are going to be kicked in the face if we are not very careful. [Laughter and applause.]

Let me suggest one thing. For the saving of a measly $17,000,000 or $18,000,000, affecting 341,000 poorly paid employees, we are being asked to reduce their already low salaries. Surely this is not true economy. It will make for inefficiency, poverty, sadness, and further general depression. Most of these employees of the Government have families. They have kiddies going to school. They take them to a moving-picture show once in a while. They take them on a picnic on Sunday in a little unpaid-for car. Are you going to take this away from them? I do not think you are. You are not going to do it with my vote, and I know there are a lot of others who feel as I do about it. Life is meager enough for them. Their wants are few, but they are entitled to live in moderate comfort. Starvation wages has never been Uncle Sam's idea.

If you want to do something that is constructive and in line with the great volume of letters talked about to-day by the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MCDUFFIE]—letters coming from all over the United States asking us to cut down Federal expenses and stop taxing people out of business—I suggest you tax something into business. Tax beer. Promote a new business. Put new money into circulation. Put a little fresh cheer into life.

Tax the 1,100 breweries of the country into activity. Give employment to many allied trades and provide pay and a living for 2,000,000 souls who would directly and indirectly benefit by this new and popular activity.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing sacred about prohibition. It has had many years of serious trial. Costly years. It has been adjudged a failure by millions of people, who now desire a change. The time is not now far distant when we will tax beer in those States desiring it. Its revenue will go far toward relieving the unbalanced Treasury. The people usually get what they want—and they certainly want beer.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It is estimated that we may save fifty to one hundred million dollars by joining the Army and the Navy in a council for national defense. Will the gentleman vote for that?

Mr. BRITTEN. No. It is a reckless, foolish idea, on which you have had no expert advice. You will not save a hundred million dollars by it; on the contrary, it will prove to be another costly experiment on which a hundred million could easily be lost. I will tell you how you can save $600,000,000. Put 4 cents tax on a bottle of beer, and you will put into business instantly enterprises worth $840,000,000, enterprises that will immediately expend $200,000,000 in the rehabilitation of the breweries. You can here tax a big business into business that will save you not $100,000,000 but $600,000,000.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Gentlemen of the House, the pay roll of this Government is more than one-quarter of the cost of the Government. It is $1,315,000,000. Adopt the substitute or the amendment, and if you adopt the substitute, out of $1,300,000,000 you will save on this pay roll only twelve or fourteen million dollars, and you will be laughed at throughout the country.

Now, it is no pleasure to reduce the salary of anyone, it is no pleasure to suggest the reducing of the salary of these splendid ladies and gentlemen who crowd the galleries this evening. But do not be stampeded by them and their friends or by any others. We do not propose to balance the Budget on this sum of $67,000,000, as proposed by the committee. You can not go back to your constituents and say we only took from the $1,300,000,000 salary roll the measly sum of $12,000,000. In order to understand how much a billion is there has not been a billion and a half minutes since the birth of Christ. Are you willing to go back to your constituents and say out of the $1,300,000,000 salary which you are paying we have saved you less than 1½ per cent?

Now, gentlemen of the House, do not let this propaganda, do not let the newspaper stories in Washington, do not let the various organizations stampede this House and prevent it from doing its duty to the taxpayers of the country, to those who pay these salaries.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. No; not now. The businesslike thing to do—and I urged it—the best thing to do was to take everyone on the pay roll of the United States Government and deduct 10 per cent of his salary, as every nation in the world has done, as every city—and I have a list of them, Chicago, Buffalo, Detroit, and many others throughout the country have had to do—take 10 per cent, and save $133,000,000 for the taxpayers.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Not now. You would save, not the measly sum of twelve to fourteen million dollars, but you would have something worth while, $133,000,000 for the year 1933.

Do not you think that a man fortunate enough to have a job with Uncle Sam at $1,200, since the cost of living has gone down twice as much as we propose to take—do you not think he is fortunate when compared with the man walking the street out of employment with no job at all?

We are all taxpayers, we all pay our part; the average man enters into the picture—you can "soak the rich," but after all they have a way of passing it down to the consumer—you may put it on the power company, you may put it on the street cars, you may put it on the railroads, but in the end it is the average man, the consumer, who pays the bills of this country. [Applause.] Every man in the United States other than those on the pay roll is interested, if you please, in putting this Government back on an even keel financially. I submit to you as honest, upstanding Representatives of the American people that it is farcical, it is ridiculous, to talk about saving $12,000,000 out of a billion-dollar pay roll. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in favor of the amendment. The gentleman who introduced the amendment briefly spoke about a real plan of balancing the Budget. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] talked about our being confronted with a serious situation in this Nation, which is parallel to the war-time situation, and particularly stressed the condition of the Treasury.

May I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa that not more than two years ago a good many of these economy peddlers who are now fearful about the Treasury painted a wonderful picture of prosperity and how the Treasury of the Nation was practically running over because of the incorporation into the Constitution of the eighteenth amendment and the sumptuary laws enacted thereunder. If you will look at page 26 of the hearings on the tax bill, you will find that the Secretary of the Treasury testified that in the year 1919 the revenue received by the Federal Treasury under the excise tax on beverages containing more than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol amounted to the staggering sum of $483,000,000, many times the few millions that you want now to whittle off the pay checks of the Government employees in the name of balancing the Budget.

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER. In just one moment, if the gentleman will get me more time. We find that these economy peddlers on the Economy Committee have not attempted in any way to reduce the cost of government by reason of the prohibition laws. We are not only not receiving hundreds of millions of dollars from an excise tax on alcoholic beverages, but are spending over $40,000,000 of the Federal taxpayers' funds each year to enforce the unenforcible prohibition laws.

If you really want to balance the Budget and help the taxpayers, I respectfully suggest that you sign the petition and discharge the committee from the consideration of the beer bill so that it can come before the House for consideration and passage with your assistance. Help the Federal Treasury to the tune of about $500,000,000 each year, and you will not have to cut the salaries of the Federal employees who are now receiving less than $2,500 per year.

I for one will not vote to reduce the salaries of the efficient postal employees whose backs are curved and humped from carrying products of mail-order houses, newspapers, and other publications at a loss of over $100,000,000 annually to the Federal Treasury. Many of the owners of these mail-order houses, newspapers, and publications are carrying on an intensive drive to reduce the salaries of the postal and other Government employees in the name of the taxpayers and a balanced Budget. They had better come into court with clean hands and advocate a raise in postage on their products so they will not be carried at a loss to the Federal Treasury of over $100,000,000 annually before they ask for the saving of a few millions by reducing the salaries of the postal employees.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, this whole subject that is so engrossing the Congress and the country is one that should not be considered in such a hasty and unstatesmanlike manner as we have it presented to us now, because the consequences are not for to-day alone but almost for all eternity, perhaps, because to-day the whole world is looking to this country for stability; and if we collapse, it means the collapse of civilization. We are all seeking the same object. The question is, What is to be the method? The question of reducing the salaries of Federal employees from the standpoint of justice, as to whether they can stand the burden or not, is one to be looked at very seriously, of course. I venture to say that the vast majority of all the Federal employees to-day are supporting from one to three or more people who would be normally self-supporting, and just because these people are working for the Government they have to stand this extra burden.

They can not bear any more. But, aside from the justice to the individual employee, it is not $100,000,000, or whatever it is you say you are going to save, that is important, but it is the billions of reduction that will take place in the purchasing power of the American people. It is our example now that general business will follow throughout all industry in the matter of wages. The demand is for return of prosperity. That is our real object. You say you want to cut salaries so that you can inspire confidence and reestablish prosperity. What man among you has ever heard of a period of prosperity when wages were going down? Do you think you ever will? The proper thing is to maintain the standard of living, because if we cut now, the rest of the country will say, "Congress has lost confidence in the future of America to such an extent that it has had to reduce the standard of its own employees," and it will cause a panic if ever anything did. Yes, we must reduce Federal expenditures. It is absolutely essential, but salaries constitute about 17 or 18 per cent of the total Budget. Why do you not direct attention to the balance of the Budget—the other 83 per cent, where there is an opportunity for some real economy?

Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. I have such little time that I would rather not.

I want to read to the committee a letter from a large retail store in my district. This is dated April 25. It is from the Golden Rule, of St. Paul:

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to the fact that many Federal employees have heard that the Golden Rule is instrumental in trying to have salaries reduced of people employed by the Government.

We do not know where this rumor started, but I wish to inform you that it is entirely erroneous. It would be folly for the Golden Rule or any other retail organization to attempt to have salaries reduced, regardless of whether people are employed by the Government or by private business.

Retail business is dependent upon the income of employed people. When salaries are reduced, it means a loss in our own business, as the purchasing power of our customers has been reduced.

The Golden Rule has many hundreds of people on its pay roll. These people are dependent upon us for their livelihood. We want to keep this large organization intact, but can only do so by maintaining our volume of business. If salaries continue to decline, it would materially affect our own organization and our business. Why should we be instrumental in a movement that not only affects the purchasing power of our patrons, but ourselves as well?

We trust that we have made our position clear in this matter.

Now, gentlemen, I have had an analysis made of all the letters I have received in favor of salary reductions, and 80 per cent of them have come from employees of chain stores, and in following it up to the individuals, I find they have been instructed to write to me and to other Members. These letters are not spontaneous from those people at all. They are inspired. They are ordered. Yet what folly. If we are to reduce the purchasing power of the American people, how can we revive prosperity?

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAAS. Yes. I will be glad to yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Under the gentleman's theory, then, the way to bring about prosperity is to have more employees and to raise their salaries?

Mr. MAAS. Yes, sir. That is exactly my position. The way to do that is to get more people on the pay rolls of industry and business, not the Government, until all unemployment is absorbed into self-supporting employment, and then always strive for a higher standard of living for the wage earner, which comes about from higher wages. It is with the wages of the mass of workers that industry's products are purchased and from which dividends are paid.

The thing for us to do is to revive business and revive the source of revenue, and not choke it off.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Where is the revenue coming from to pay the salaries?

Mr. MAAS. Tax beer and liquor. That is where you can get it. [Laughter and applause.]

It is utter folly and rank hypocrisy to prattle about balancing the Budget and eliminating the deficit by cutting the veins of the employees and draining out the very heart blood in a hysterical terror to make governmental ends meet, when staring us in the face, yea, mocking us with satirical ridicule is the means at hand to save these all too inadequate salaries, to preserve the high American standard of living, the very essence and secret of our past successes and the basis of all our prosperity.

How can any man among you justify this unreasonable, inhumane, backward step of cutting the living wages to balance a depleted Budget before you have exhausted every other alternative.

By taxing the liquor traffic you will raise 10 times in revenue the amount you now propose to chisel off from the Budget. It is not a question of returning the liquor traffic in order to tax it. The traffic is here, and it is merely a question of whether we have the honesty and courage to admit what the whole world knows and to take the revenues for the benefit of the people, that now go to the enormous octopus and parasite of society, the organized crime rings. Have we the courage to defy the lords of the underworld and tax them? Let us show at least as much courage in taking from them as you are showing in proposing to take away from the small-salaried family man who is the backbone of this great country.

Oh, gentlemen, let us not give up and surrender in abject fear and terror at the first reverse we meet in our great march on and upward in the social advancement. Our progress has been marvelous so far. We have met setbacks before. Our hardy predecessors never lost faith. They marched on and over the obstacles. Let us take courage from them. Let us not retreat now in utter confusion and rout. Let us renew our faith and demonstrate our hope by looking ahead and up, not backward and down. We can not go back without surrendering. We have not reached the end of the road. We have only got well started. I plead with you to reinspire the confidence of the country and the world by showing it ourselves.

Instead of going backward and down into the depths, let us resume going ahead and upward again by holding our hard-won gains in the standard of living by maintaining the wage level. Take the revenues from the bootleggers and racketeers. They are draining billions annually from legitimate commerce.

We have no right to ignore that source of revenue, that method of balancing the Budget and then try to do it by imposing hysterical taxes and salary cuts that will in the end only defeat their own purpose.

Only if we are to admit that we have run our race, that our day in America is over and that we are now starting down the path of the exhausted Roman Empire never to return have we the right to resort to such methods as proposed now.

I, for one, am not willing to admit that the race is over, nor even half run. I refuse to admit our complete failure. We are but pausing for our second breath and then the race will be swifter than ever. Hope, courage, faith, Americans! Our greatest days are yet ahead. We are not crushed and nothing can crush us but our own willingness to admit failure. Cutting salaries of the low-paid workers will be such an admission. To reject such a cut will be serving notice to the world that we are ready to face the future courageously.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. Of course, I do not object, because my colleague has been recognized. I do not wish to make the point of order myself. I think the gentlemen in charge of the bill are responsible, but there are two amendments pending, one amendment and one substitute amendment, and, as I understand the rules, there are five minutes allowed on each side. We have had more than that. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, that I think we ought to vote upon this at an early time. It is a simple matter, and unless the chairman of the committee insists upon the rule, I shall make the point of order myself.

The CHAIRMAN. That, of course, is the pleasure of the committee. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] for five minutes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. I desire to answer the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE]. The gentleman asks if we dare return to our constituents and say that we failed to reduce the salaries of the postal employees. At this moment we seek to protect those in the lower brackets. No matter what the result is, those in the high brackets, including Congressmen, suffer a reduction.

I am satisfied that when the people of my State—not my district, because I am forced to run at large throughout the entire State of Missouri—when the people of my State understand the situation, they will agree my vote was properly cast.

No fair American will stand for discrimination. This afternoon, when there were not so many Members on the floor as at the present time, I asked the members of the committee to read this bill carefully. The salary reduction amendment which you would have applied to those in the Postal Service is but one of six reductions that the postal employees of this country will be required to accept if this bill is passed as brought in by the Economy Committee. This group will suffer a reduction double that of any class receiving a like amount.

There is a provision in this bill which reduces their subsistence allowance from $3 to $2 per day.

There is a provision in this bill that takes away from the Government employee, including the postal employee, the Saturday half holiday.

There is a provision in this bill that takes from the postal employee night differential pay.

There is a provision in this bill that takes from the Government employee that which labor has fought for for 50 years, the right to be paid for overtime.

There is a provision in this bill which deprives the postal employees of extra pay for work on holidays and Sundays, something they have enjoyed for years.

There is another provision in this bill that denies to the postal employees automatic promotions. That law is suspended.

Do you mean to tell me that the people of this country are satisfied that you shall take seven different and distinct benefits which have been enjoyed by the Government employees away from them?

I am satisfied, Mr. Chairman, that the people of my State are not expecting us to do that. The trouble with the country to-day is that consumption has failed to keep pace with production; and until we find a way to consume that which we produce, it is my opinion that we will not start back on the road to normalcy. The proposition before the House to-day should be properly labeled "A bill to stimulate unemployment," because that is what will result.

I say to you gentlemen that I have been for 10 weeks openly opposed to reducing the salaries of the Government employees in the lower brackets. That has been printed in every newspaper in the United States, and it has been carried by every press association in the United States. I have not received more than 25 letters from my State demanding that the Government employee receiving barely a living wage be reduced. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. I make the point of order that all debate on the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. MANLOVE. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman whether he will not permit general debate on this until everybody has had an opportunity of saying what he wanted to say?

Mr. DYER. I believe both sides have been presented adequately enough for us to know exactly what it is. It is a question of whether there shall be a $1,000 exemption, a $2,000 exemption, or a $2,500 exemption.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri insist upon his point of order?

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Missouri to withhold his point of order for one minute.

Mr. McDUFFIE rose.

Mr. DYER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE].

Mr. McDUFFIE. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment and the substitute close in 30 minutes.

Mr. KUNZ. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. Certainly that has not been debated.

Mr. DYER. I make a point of order against that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, in order to get the floor, I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill, which is a preferential motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is to vote on the adoption of the substitute.

Mr. BLANTON. No, Mr. Chairman. I submit a preferential motion to strike out the enacting clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has offered a preferential motion which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON moves to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield my time to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS. No; do not do that.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. We object.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not yield for any parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I make a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McDUFFIE. There is no enacting clause to this amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, there is an enacting clause to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course there is an enacting clause to the bill. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. A motion to strike out the enacting clause is not in order while the committee has under consideration pending preferential amendments that have not been acted upon.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, to strike out the enacting clause is one motion that is always in order.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman may say it, but it is not always in order until such amendments have been acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule of the House clearly states that such a motion has precedence, even over a motion to amend. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have stood for strict economy in all governmental expenditures ever since I have been in Congress. I have fought against all waste and extravagance. I have fought to abolish useless bureaus. I have fought against excessive salaries. I have consistently fought against the creation of all new bureaus and for proper limitation both on the number of employees and also for placing a proper maximum on the amount of salaries.

For some time I have had my House Joint Resolution No. 344 pending before the committee to reduce all salaries above $2,200, and to cut our own salaries down to $7,500, and to limit all governmental salaries that are not fixed by the Constitution to a maximum of $7,500.

My measure would repeal the classification act and abolish the Classification Board, and all of the unreasonable high salaries it has fixed, and return to the salary basis that existed prior to the passage of that foolish act, which has caused bureau chiefs and assistants to be raised from salaries of $1,800, $2,200, $2,500, and $3,000 to the outrageous and never-dreamed-of amounts of $5,000, $6,000, $7,000, and $9,000 salaries that are not earned, and are double and treble their former remuneration.

This committee bill does repeal the classification act and abolish the Classification Board, but it does not abolish the high salaries wrongfully created, and it does not put such salaries back on the basis that existed prior to the passage of the classification act. This we must do before we finish this bill.

I will go as far as any of you colleagues in cutting the high salaries, including our own. But we ought not to cut any salaries below $2,200. It takes that amount for any family to live in Washington. They have to pay rent, and for food and clothing and coal and ice and doctors' bills, dentists' bills, medicine, and sometimes hospital expenses and church and fraternal contributions and assessments, and they must properly school their children. No family can do this decently in Washington on less than $2,200 per year.

We have properly established in the United States an American standard of living. It means nothing more or less than living as human beings in a decent manner. Who of us would have an American family live in a manner that is not decent? Who would lower the American standard of living? Not one of us. Well, if we would not, we ought not to lower the salaries of not more than $2,200, but cut only the higher salaries above that amount.

When President Hoover got this Congress to pass his outrageous $2,000,000,000 Reconstruction Finance Corporation bill, which I opposed from this floor, I then called attention to the fact that because it had no proper limitations in it, there would be an army of new employees put on the Government pay roll, and they would be paid outrageously large salaries. That has happened. They have an army of employees. They are paying many huge salaries, ranging up to $16,000 per annum. Is not it ridiculous for us to allow that to continue? Here we are in this bill reducing the $10,000 salaries drawn by United States Senators and Congressmen, and still allowing that Hoover supercorporation to pay employees $16,000 per annum.

If President Hoover wanted economy, why did he have that bill framed so that General Dawes could pay these outrageous salaries without limit? Why, the answer is plain. He wanted those high salaries paid, and he knew all about the personnel of his political friends who would be appointed to draw them.

There are faithful, loyal employees of this Government, who now get only $2,160 per annum, who have not had a raise in salary for 10 years.

Would it not be outrageous to cut their salaries? How on earth will a family live in Washington, with rents higher here than anywhere else in the world and with everything else higher in proportion—how would they pay their expenses and live like human beings on less than $2,160 a year?

I hope sincerely that this exemption will be raised to at least $2,200.

I am in favor of most of this bill. I am in favor of the splendid proposition which our friend from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] put in this bill to consolidate the Army and the Navy into one Department of National Defense, because that will save at least $100,000,000 a year. That is one of the big items in this bill. Let us pass that item and have a unified Air Service, which will take in all of the four different air departments we now have. Let us stick to the big things. Let us save $100,000,000 there and not cut these small salaries to a point where people can not live on them. Let us let them live under the American standard of living and not under the peon system of the European nations.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman spoke of rents being higher here than anywhere else?

Mr. BLANTON. Higher than anywhere else in the world.

Mr. McDUFFIE. I agree with the gentleman and that it costs more to live here than anywhere else, but as long as we maintain these high salaries they will continue to prevail.

Mr. BLANTON. Cut the higher salaries. That is exactly what I want to do, and I will go with the gentleman as far as he likes in that direction.

Mr. McDUFFIE. We are cutting the higher salaries. We are cutting them more than we are cutting the low salaries.

Mr. BLANTON. I had hoped our friend would put in this bill a provision to abolish all of the high salaries raised by the Classification Board, which has stolen all of the money which we intended for the working employees of this Government and given it to the big chiefs and their assistants. [Applause.] But there is no attempt here to abolish the high salaries under that infamous act. It ought to be repealed.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It is repealed in this act; it is abolished under this act, and the President is authorized to transfer the Classification Board to the Civil Service.

Mr. BLANTON. But you do not abolish the high salaries already raised and fixed by that infamous act that have been carried on ever since the act was passed.

Mr. McDUFFIE. It will take two years to stop all of those infamous acts. We did not have the time to do it all at once.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to say that our friend deserves great commendation, and his committee as well, for the strenuous work they have performed. They deserve the commendation of the country. They have a good bill. I am with them on their bill. I am with them on 99 per cent of it, but this is one instance where we ought to amend it. We ought to make this exemption $2,200.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MAY. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that under this bill $48,500,000 out of the $67,000,000 comes from employees whose salaries are under $2,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I would say from salaries under $2,200, and we ought not to cut any salary under $2,200. We ought not to do it.

Mr. Chairman, I moved to strike out the enacting clause of the bill merely as a pro forma motion, as that was the only parliamentary way of getting the floor. Of course, I am not in favor of striking out the enacting clause, and if my motion were put I would vote against it. I wanted to give my views on this bill, and the only way possible to do so was to make some motion that would give me the right to speak, and that was the only motion that was in order. I therefore ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw the motion, unless some one else wants to speak now and desires to rise in opposition to it, which would give them the floor.

Mr. STAFFORD and Mr. GOSS objected.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOSS. I understood the gentleman from Texas to move to strike out the enacting clause and I objected to his unanimous-consent request to withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated objection was heard. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized for five minutes in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas because it would prevent this House from voting upon a program that means retrenchment; that means reduction of the expenses of our Government by some $200,000,000.

One week ago last Monday the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR], who offered the amendment to increase the exemption from $1,000 to $2,000, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN], who offered the amendment increasing the exemption to $2,500, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS], all of whom have spoken against the reduction in any degree of salaries of $2,000 or $2,500, voted to concur in the Senate amendments to the Interior Department appropriation bill, which had the effect not of reducing salaries moderately but of striking from the roll of the Government 723 permanent and 1,645 temporary employees of the Interior Department. These gentlemen have made pleas for the man whose salary is about to be reduced. Is it not better to reduce the salaries of all in moderate degree, as we propose here, than to eliminate 2,500 employees from the privilege of drawing any salary whatever under the Interior Department bill? [Applause.]

The difference between the program recommended by the Economy Committee, saving $67,000,000 through the amendments which they have proposed, and the amount that would be saved if the amendments of the gentleman from New York or the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois were to prevail, is something like $50,000,000.

Gentlemen, if we are going to have regard in one day for what we have done the day before or the week before, we ought not to pass these amendments proposed by the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Illinois [applause], because if we defeat them and pass the bill providing either for the 11 per cent reduction or the furlough plan, the Interior Department will be able to go forward during the coming year doing the great work that it ought to do and employing the 723 men who are on permanent rolls and the 1,645 men on temporary rolls. This is the only way that has been presented up to this good hour under which we may allow these men with their families to be protected in the positions which they hold. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas to strike out the enacting clause.

The motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and Mr. BRITTEN asked for a division.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona and Mr. BRITTEN.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 173, noes 148.

So the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York as amended by the substitute just adopted.

The question was taken, and a division was demanded by Mr. STAFFORD.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. DOUGLAS of Arizona and Mr. O'Connor.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 184, noes 93.

So the amendment as amended by the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McCORMACK: On page 4, strike out lines 13 and following down to and through line 4, on page 5.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have offered strikes out of the bill section 105, which relates to the Saturday half-holiday bill that we passed in 1931, and also relates to the 44-hour bill passed in 1931 with reference to those in the Postal Service.

All of you remember the debate on these two bills and remember the circumstances under which they passed the House. At that time the late Speaker, our late distinguished colleague, Nicholas Longworth, who has passed to the Great Beyond, rendered every possible assistance to Mr. KENDALL and the Post Office Committee in the passage of the 44-hour week bill, and also recognized the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH] for the purpose of submitting for the consideration of the House the Saturday half-holiday bill, which I had introduced, affecting all Federal employees other than those in the Postal Service.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does it not seem rather inconsistent that while we are talking about a 5-day week and pretending to be for a 5-day week, we find here a provision abolishing the half-holiday provision that was recently enacted into law?

Mr. McCORMACK. Absolutely. For over 100 years mankind and, particularly the working men of America, have been striving for a work week which would be consistent, not only with the health of the individual worker but with the best interests of society. Private employers have recognized that times are changing, and have recognized the fact that the worker is entitled to consideration. They recognized this long before the Federal Government gave such recognition to its employees in 1931.

For many years prior to the passage of these two bills legislation had been introduced for the purpose of giving to those in the Federal service a Saturday half holiday, something that practically all the private employees had been given years previous.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman knows that the postal employees were for years and years seeking to secure this humane legislation, which finally became law, and has only been in operation a little over one year.

Mr. McCORMACK. Certainly, and we now see the Economy Committee—and I appreciate the situation that confronts the members—trying to take a step backward. This is nothing but turning back the pages of time. We have gone by the time when men worked six days a week. We have gone by not only so far as the public employees are concerned but also as to employees of private business. We are now approaching the day when of necessity we will have a 5-day work week, necessary as a means of circumscribing the evils that have arisen as the result of the substitution of machinery for human labor.

It is recognized that machinery is being so extensively and intensively used in industry that 2,000,000 workers have been displaced thereby to date. It is recognized that by 1940, unless something is done to regulate this evil, that those who are removed from employment as a result of the use of machinery will approximate 4,000,000 workers throughout the country.

Instead of considering a return, even though temporary, of the full 6-day work week for Federal employees, we should be considering the 5-day work week, due to the changed economic conditions resulting from the machine era that envelopes us. In any event, to return to the 6-day work week is a step backward and has no place, even in an economy program. My amendment should be adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McCORMACK. I wish to include in my remarks, for the information of the House, some observations on the subject of Saturday half holidays prepared by Thomas F. Flaherty, secretary-treasurer of the National Federation of Post Office Clerks, who has given this important economic problem close thought. His observations are worthy of the deepest consideration:

We know that we have the power to produce in this country all the necessaries and comforts required to enable every American to maintain a reasonable scale of living. We are not doing it because so many do not have the purchasing power to secure those products.

The only way to restore that purchasing power is through jobs. And the way to make jobs for more men is to cut the working hours of those engaged in production to the point where consumption will balance production.

The great task is to start the upward spiral toward genuine prosperity. That is done by giving employment to workers who have been idle. That newly employed man spends his wages with retail dealers for the things he needs for himself and family. The dealers buy more goods from the wholesalers, who in turn buy more goods from manufacturers. They hire more workers to produce the goods. This means the purchase of more raw materials, which takes more labor to produce and more men and women to pack and ship. Freight-car loadings increase, which means more men on the railroads, more clerks to keep records. All these people with jobs have money to spend on food and clothes and other necessaries and comforts. As they spend they increase the demand, giving employment to more and more workers.

Every additional worker required by shortening hours, under our present system of mass production, automatically becomes a force to start this upward spiral and keep it in motion.

Shorter working hours means additional leisure, and this is an important factor in balancing production and consumption.

The committee on recent economic changes, which was headed by President Hoover, then Secretary of Commerce, made a valuable report covering many features of the present industrial system.

Walter F. Brown, now Postmaster General, was second man on this committee, and without doubt aided in the preparation of the report and agreed to its conclusions.

Here is one statement from that report which bears directly on this great question of shorter working hours in the Postal Service and in industry as a whole:

"Closely related to the increased rate of production-consumption of products is the consumption of leisure.

"It was during the period covered by the survey that the conception of leisure as 'consumable' began to be realized upon in business in a practical way and on a broad scale. It began to be recognized not only that leisure is 'consumable,' but that people can not 'consume' leisure without consuming goods and services, and that leisure which results from an increasing man-hour productivity helps to create new needs and new and broader markets.

"During the period covered by the survey the trend toward increased leisure received a considerable impetus. The work week was shortened in the factory by better planning and modern machinery, and the work day was shortened in the home by the increased use of time and labor saving appliances and services.

"Few of the current economic developments have made such widespread changes in our national life or promise so much for the future as the utilization of our increasing leisure.

"VIEWS OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE BUDGET, H. M. LORD

"General Lord, known as a watchdog of the Treasury, made this complimentary reference to the economies in the Postal Service:

"'During the Budget period prodigious economies have been effected by the Postal Service. For instance, revenues at first and second class post offices increased from $404,000,000 in 1921 to $632,000,000 in 1928, a rise of more than 55 per cent. That meant an increase of 55 per cent in work, too. The clerical man power to take care of this increase rose from 66,789 in 1921 to 77,901 in 1928, an increase of less than 17 per cent.

"'Fifty-five per cent increase in business handled by a 17 per cent increase in personnel is a pretty good record, it seems to me, a record some of our big private institutions would be glad to make.'

"The following statement was made by the representative of the department, the late W. R. Spilman, superintendent of Postal Service Division, before the Appropriations Committee considering the 1930 Post Office appropriation bill:

"'Let me call attention to the fact that in 1921 the man power per each $1,000,000 of revenue was 165 men, working eight hours a day. The man power for $1,000,000 of revenue has steadily decreased until 1927, when only 126 men of eight hours a day were employed. The same number were employed in 1928, when the revenues increased only 1.91 per cent over 1927. Further, the number of additional regular clerks employed in 1928 is only 1.62 per cent over the number employed in 1927, as compared with increases in 1925 of 2.99 per cent, in 1926, 3.07 per cent, and in 1927, 2.44 per cent.'"

V. QUOTATIONS FROM AUTHORITIES ON THE VALUE OF SHORTER HOURS

John J. Raskob, former chairman of the finance committee of the General Motors Corporation and of the Democratic National Committee, referring to the 5-day week, states:

"The knowledge that he had two days out of seven in which to enjoy life and family companionship would make every ambitious worker in the land more efficient. But, in addition, modern machinery, methods, and power have already developed a vast margin of unused production capacity, and there is literally no limit at present to be foreseen to further progress in this direction. In other words, America is in shape to produce in five days all she can consume in seven, with a lot left over for export. That being so, the 5-day week, in my judgment, should become the rule in America with as little delay as possible." (Quoted in the Literary Digest, November 16, 1929.)

Thomas A. Edison: "If for no other reason than that it would prevent overproduction * * *, the hours of labor should be reduced to not more than eight per day and not more than five days a week." (The Typographical Journal, August, 1929.)

Irving Fisher, professor Yale University: "In order to avoid economic disaster in our Nation, there should not be more than a 6-hour day and a 5-day work week for labor." (The Typographical Journal, August, 1929.)

Morris L. Cooke, noted engineer: "There is no longer any difference of opinion among those who are well-intentioned and competent as to the value of shortening the hours of labor both as an aid to production and for its effect on the standard of living." (The Typographical Journal, August, 1929.)

Charles S. Meyers, industrial psychologist: "In certain occupations evidence has been brought forward to prove that the greatest hourly rate of output generally occurs during a 44-hour working week, and that it diminishes not only when the weekly hours are more, but also when they are less than this." (The Typographical Journal, August, 1929.)

J. Douglas Brown, director, industrial relations section, Princeton University: "As a means of safeguarding the health of the worker in high-pressure industries or assuring greater regularity in seasonal industries it (the 5-day week) is a logical solution of a serious problem." (The Typographical Journal, August, 1929.)

Elliot Dunlap Smith, professor industrial engineering, Yale University: "We should not criticize but applaud the American Federation of Labor in their 'spiritual opportunism,' if you want to call it that—in substituting the quest of leisure with what it may bring in education, in intellectual, spiritual, and artistic appreciation, and in a chance to live—in substituting the quest of leisure for the quest of money, of the opportunity to buy more cars, more radios, or whatever money may buy. Under our present industrial methods it is primarily from the wholesome use of leisure throughout life that an old age for workmen that is truly worth while can come. Our task as managers in this regard, as it is in the shop, is that of leadership; it is the task of giving an example of how leisure can be happily, wholesomely, and constructively employed to enrich living and make better men." (The Typographical Journal, August, 1929.)

F. L. Sweetser, general manager Dutchess Manufacturing Co., Poughkeepsie, N. Y.: "In our factory we have not found it impossible to get the same wages per week and the same production per week on a 5-day week or a 39-hour week—sometimes on a 7-hour or a 7½-hour day—as we have on longer hours and more days. * * * I believe thoroughly that industry would be better off if everyone had more leisure * * *." (Bulletin of the Taylor Society, December, 1928, p. 244.)

George B. Cutten, president of Colgate University: "The 5-day week is just around the corner, and it does not take a very powerful telescope to give us a glimpse of the 5-hour day.

"Machines are not only turning out countless numbers of pins, bolts, fabrics, and shoes; they are not only grinding out profits for employers and wages for employees, but just as surely they are producing leisure for everyone. It is as though each person, compared with those living a century ago, had 20 or 30 servants working for him. With all these servants leisure is inevitable.

"During the last 50 years the week's work has been shortened from 72 hours to 40, and the next 50 years may see it cut down to 20. A half-day's work on Saturday has been common for years, and now even that is disappearing." (New York Times Magazine, September 9, 1928.)

"Gen. J. Leslie Kincaid, president of the American Hotels Corporation, predicted recently that if two successive days of rest each week became the general rule, tourist hotels could look forward to a $500,000,000 annual increase in business. He bases these figures, he said, on increases in two and three day business already experienced through establishment of the 5-day week in many trades and in department stores in the summer months." (Trades Union News, September 12, 1929.)

The rapid growth and wide extension of the shorter day on Saturday, both in private and public establishments, make it both just and feasible to grant the same conditions to the clerks. This is especially emphasized by the predominant practice of closing offices and releasing office employees on Saturday afternoon, since it is with the work of offices that the Postal Service is most closely connected.

The authority of large employers, economists, and specialists in health is quoted, not merely in favor of shorter hours on Saturday, but the 5-day week, which is now enjoyed by nearly 1,000,000 workers in the United States. The Government of the United States can scarcely demand a full day's work on Saturday when so many enlightened employers have gone so far as to do away with Saturday work entirely.

PRODUCTIVITY OF POST-OFFICE CLERKS

The productivity of both post-office clerks and railway-mail clerks has advanced, through their own efforts, to a reasonable extent since before the war, and has thus helped to keep postal expenses down. This advance should be recognized and encouraged by shorter working hours, as similar advances have been in private industry, even when the increase in productivity resulted from machinery rather than from individual competence.

We can measure the productivity of the post-office clerks by comparing the growth in the amount of mail matter they have to handle with the growth in their numbers. The amount of mail matter may be roughly estimated from the postal receipts. Indeed, the actual amount of mail has probably grown somewhat more rapidly than the receipts, since there have been no permanent increases in rates since 1914, but a number of reductions, and, of course, the receipts do not indicate the increase of franked and other free service.

* * * while postal revenues rose 142 per cent between 1914 and 1929, the number of post-office clerks in first and second class offices increased only 87 per cent. The revenues per clerk grew, in this period, 30 per cent. * * * while receipts per post office increased 28 per cent from 1914 to 1929, the average number of clerks per first and second class post office has shown no increase but rather a slight decline from an average of 15.4 in 1914 to 15.2 in 1929. This is indeed a remarkable showing of growth in efficiency.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, by the vote just taken this body has added $57,000,000 to the burden of the taxpayers of the United States. It is estimated that we have a population of 126,000,000 people in the United States. We have at present on the Federal pay roll 1 for every 100 people in the United States. The question is, Are we here legislating for the people of the United States or are we here legislating for the Federal employees?

Four times during and since the war we have raised the salary of the Federal employees because of the high cost of living.

Now, the cost of living has gone down, and we are confronted with the demand to keep up the same salaries.

Gentlemen say that we are setting a precedent. They seem to think that we are acting under ordinary conditions and circumstances. We are in an emergency of the worst kind. I have no respect, but an utter disregard for any man or woman who is on the Federal pay roll who has not patriotism enough to contribute a little to this deficit in our Treasury.

We had before the Economy Committee certain gentlemen representing the Federal Bar Association, who came to us arguing against any sort of a cut. They never have practiced law one single minute. They commenced here, they got their schooling by means of a clerkship, and advanced to places with a salary up to $7,500 a year, and yet they were not willing to contribute one cent to the Government that had educated them.

I say to you gentlemen that this is not involving simply a cut in salary, but it is involving the employment of thousands of men and women. I want to say that unless the program adopted by the committee is adopted by the Congress there are going to be 100,000 employees of the United States turned out of employment. It is supremely selfish in those who are insisting that we should maintain the present basis of salary, for the reason that if you adopt the 11 per cent cut it means turning out 100,000 people.

Adopt the suggestion of the committee of 11 per cent, or adopt the plan suggested by the administration, and there will be no occasion for anybody to be turned out of employment. You who are appealing here that unemployment be diminished and that those who have employment be kept in their places would better vote for either the 11 per cent proposed by the committee or for the plan suggested by the administration. To my mind there is no excuse for any one to suggest that we ought to maintain the present rate of wages with reference to Federal employees, when the employees of every corporation and company in the country with a very few exceptions have been reduced and reduced again, and will be reduced further perhaps. What a spectacle it is for a man who is working on the outside, whose wages have been reduced, once, twice, thrice, to realize that the Federal Government is favoring a class and keeping up their wages while his is being cut and cut again. That is what is causing trouble in this country to-day, and the taxpayer is getting woefully tired of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal in the last month or six weeks about balancing the Budget. There is no one who is not firmly convinced that the more quickly we balance the Budget and get on a pay-as-you-go basis the more quickly we can expect a return of prosperity. Every man and woman in this country must realize that if we are to balance our Budget and take care of the overwhelming deficit which confronts the Government each one must be willing to make some sacrifice. I have too much confidence in the employees of the Federal Government to believe that they are unwilling to bear a reasonable proportion of the sacrifice necessary in behalf of the Government which protects them and the people of the United States. [Applause.] I believe that the employees of this Government, I hope with very few exceptions, are patriotic enough and love their country enough to make a sacrifice, small as it is, for just a period of one year. Do not forget that you are not permanently reducing anybody's salary. You are not taking away this half holiday from the employees of this Government permanently. You are only saying that for the period of one year beginning on June 30 we will all make some sacrifice in order to relieve the country which is in a worse condition to-day, financially, than it was during the war.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Not now.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. This country is in a worse financial condition to-day than it has ever been during any war, and it behooves you and it behooves me, representing people who have to pay the taxes and meet the expenses of this Government, to remember that they are to be taken into consideration this evening while we are legislating on this subject.

I do not favor either one of the two major propositions that have been presented. I believe, and I can not get it out of my head, that it would be eminently fairer to begin, say, at $2,000, at a 5 per cent cut and increase upward until you have reached the salaries of $10,000 and above, when if I had my way I would take 20 per cent. [Applause.]

I believe that the higher the salary the greater the percentage of cut ought to be. I had an amendment to offer, but in view of the action of the committee a while ago, of course I shall not present it; but I say that the people back home to-night are watching you and watching me as to what we do here. And the people back home are going to hold you and are going to hold me responsible for what we do here. I am not criticizing anybody, I am not undertaking to lecture anybody, but I do appeal in the name of the citizenry back in the country and in the cities and towns, who is not heard here except through you and me. By your vote you have taken from this bill presented by the Economy Committee $55,000,000 of the savings which were contemplated. Let us think of the people and the taxpayers, who must bear the expense of government. They are entitled to chief consideration. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment. The statement just made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] might be well applicable to the whole subject matter of economy, but the immediate proposition before the House is an amendment eliminating section 105 from the bill. Section 105 suspends the operations and benefits of the act of March 3, 1931, known as the Saturday half holiday for certain Government employees. Permit me to state to the gentleman from Tennessee that I quite agree with him that back home to-night the people's eyes are directed toward Washington to see what we are doing, and I am certain that they are praying that we are looking forward and endeavoring to bring the American people up and not drag them down. [Applause.]

At this time, after 50 years of struggle and suffering of organized labor, we have succeeded in bringing about the beginning of a 5-day week. So well has this beginning been inaugurated that the President of the United States—not once, not twice, not three times or four times, but repeatedly—has urged upon industry and upon commerce that in this machine age the only hope of the American people is to go to a 5-day week. How can we, in the face of our experience about getting a 5-day week, sit here this evening and repeal the 44-hour week? It is inconsistent; it is ridiculous; and there is no sense to it. We have learned something about economics in the last few years. We have learned that the purchasing power and the consumption of our products rests not with a few people of large income but with the masses, the workers of the country.

We have learned that time for play, time for recreation and study and rest and travel creates a demand for new products and consequently more employment. We have learned that the quickest turnover and the quickest medium of circulation is the money paid in salaries and wages.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that we dare not, we can not, if we want to be patriotic, go back to the days of 1890, when the appeal was made to the working man "we are going to give you a full dinner pail." There is more than a full dinner pail involved here. It is the very future, the happiness, the self-respect of the working people of this country. It is not only the Government employee that is involved. That is a mistake. It is the standards of labor and the wage scale which we establish here that is so important.

A few moments ago the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. McDUFFIE] stated that $1,300,000,000 of the total Budget went into pay rolls. True, but let us analyze that $1,300,000,000. Two hundred and fifty-nine million dollars of that goes for the pay roll of the Army and Navy, and that does not include rations, housing, and keep which is in addition to the pay of the Army and Navy. Five hundred and seventy million dollars goes for the pay roll of the post office, which, as far as personnel is concerned, is self-supporting. How can one run an enterprise with a revenue of $800,000,000 annually without several thousand employees and a large pay roll? Therefore, if we subtract the pay roll of the post office, which is self-supporting, and the Army and Navy, which it is not contemplated to be reduced here, it will be seen that all this noise, all this hysteria is based on a pay roll of $500,000,000 for a nation of 126,000,000 people—yes; the richest nation in the world, and we are not broke yet, because we will not let the bankers take all of the money of the American people and send it to South America and to Europe. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. SWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask the indulgence of the House for a moment while I call to this body a witness who, I believe, if he is sincere and has not changed his mind since October 2, 1930, is opposed to a reduction of the American standard of living. I call before you the President of the United States. On October 2, 1930, the President addressed the fifty-sixth annual convention of the American bankers at Cleveland, Ohio. You will recall the occasion when, prior to the President's appearance before this distinguished group of bankers, a resolution was prepared for adoption declaring for a radical reduction in the American standard of living by way of a reduction in wages. Through the press of the Nation President Hoover learned of the proposed resolution. It was rumored that en route from Washington to Cleveland the President changed the text of his prepared speech to censor and condemn the contemplated action of the bankers' fraternity of the Nation. This is what he said in part on that occasion:

> It appears from the press that some one suggested in your discussion that our American standards of living should be lowered. To that I emphatically disagree. I do not believe it represents the views of this association. Not only do I not accept such a theory but on the contrary, the whole purpose and ideal of this economic system, which is distinctive of our country, is to increase the standard of living by the adoption and the constantly widening diffusion of invention and discovery amongst the whole of our people. Any retreat from our American philosophy of constantly increasing standards of living becomes a retreat into perpetual unemployment and the acceptance of a cesspool of poverty for some large part of our people.
>
> Our economic system is but an instrument of the social advancement of the American people. It is an instrument by which we add to the security and richness of life of every individual. It by no means comprises the whole purpose of life, but it is the foundation upon which can be built the finer things of the spirit. Increase in enrichment must be the objective of the Nation, not decrease.

To attempt to balance the national Budget by reducing the wages and depriving hundreds of thousands of Government employees of fixed priority rights secured by long years of faithful service certainly is a lowering of the standard of living, in my opinion. It is not in keeping with the philosophy and sentiments expressed by the President in the meeting to which I have just referred.

What has happened since October 2, 1930, that caused the President of the United States to do a right-about-face on this proposition and recommend to this body a furlough plan, which means a substantial reduction in wages and is equally as vicious, if not more vicious, than the McDuffie plan which you have now under consideration? Has the cost of living materially decreased to justify this course? I think that it is only fair to state that you pay just as much to-day for a suit of clothes, for house rent, medicines, food, baby's shoes, and all other forms of necessities as you did October 2, 1930, when the Chief Executive declared against a reduction in wages.

A few hours ago the chairman of the Economy Committee [Mr. McDUFFIE] told the Members of this body that—

> Men and women are marching almost in mob formation upon courthouses, upon capitols of the States, demanding that the cost of government be brought down.

Let me say to the distinguished chairman of the Economy Committee that many thousands of Federal employees, the class who would be affected by this wage cut, the class that you are striking at to-day by attempting to reduce their standard of living, will soon augment the vast army of our people who daily visit the courthouses of their respective districts to witness their little homes sold at foreclosures and their equities destroyed. Many of these families have lost their life-savings in defunct banks and building-loan associations during the past few years.

Great number of Federal employees are now carrying the burden of supporting others besides their immediate family. In my opinion it is vicious and cruel to resort to this sort of economy.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield.

Mr. McDUFFIE. The gentleman is from the great city of Cleveland?

Mr. SWEENEY. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does the gentleman know that his own city has cut salaries and reduced expenses?

Mr. SWEENEY. I know that. It is principally due to the fact that the limitation on the bonded indebtedness of our city is fixed by State law; and, in addition, because we are confronted with an abnormal relief problem necessitated by reason of the Hoover prosperity we are experiencing. That is no reason why those now receiving a living wage from the Government should be reduced at this time.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWEENEY. I yield.

Mr. KVALE. The report also states that the city of Minneapolis has reduced its wages. I will say for the information of the House that the mayor of the city of Minneapolis has wired the Economy Committee urging that no pay reductions be made for Federal employees at this time, and the city of Minneapolis has refused to make reductions at this time.

Mr. SWEENEY. I think that is the sentiment all over the country. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, let us be courageous enough to refrain from doing injury to a class of workers who are helpless to defend themselves against such action as we propose to-day. Those of you who voted for a moratorium for European nations and financial assistance for the banks, railroads, and insurance companies will have a hard time explaining to your constituents your vote in favor of this feature of the economy plan by reducing wages in an attempt to balance the Budget. Those of you who refused to modify existing law to permit beer and light wines, thereby securing to the Government hundreds of millions of dollars of revenue annually, will have a hard time explaining your vote in favor of wage reduction of Federal employees.

The Government should set and maintain a standard-of-living wage for the employees of the Nation. If that is done, industry will be more likely to measure up in a degree to a standard set by the Government. If it is not done, industry will be encouraged to a wholesale and promiscuous reduction of wages without regard to the justice or necessity of the course taken.

Let me say to my Democratic colleagues of this House that, in my opinion, it is not necessary for you to assume for the people of the Nation that you have the burden of balancing the Budget. The created deficit complained of is not of your making. It is the result of mismanagement and maladministration of Government affairs, and the lavish and in many cases unnecessary expenditure of public moneys by the administrations in power in our national affairs during the past 10 years.

A disorganized leadership trying to solve the problem of Federal economy presents a disastrous and sad spectacle when it attempts to resort to wage decreases. The problem can be solved by an income tax in the higher brackets, increased inheritance and gift taxes, revenues obtainable from a Federal tax on beer and light wines, and by the elimination of useless boards, bureaus, and commissions. These measures will go a long way toward balancing the National Budget, if it must be balanced, and obviate the necessity of lowering the standard of living of the American wage earners, which is and should be the best in the entire world.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that all time for debate on this amendment has expired.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is that the gentleman from Alabama has moved that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. RAINEY, Speaker pro tempore, having assumed the chair, Mr. WARREN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 11267, the legislative appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-night it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BRITTEN and Mr. SIROVICH objected.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, April 28, 1932, at 12 o'clock noon.

COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Tentative list of committee hearings scheduled for Thursday, April 28, 1932, as reported to the floor leader by clerks of the several committees:

WAYS AND MEANS

(10 a. m.)

Continue hearings on soldiers' bonus.

LABOR

(10 a. m.)

Labor, wages, public buildings (S. 3847).

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

545. A letter from the chairman of the United States Shipping Board, transmitting an analysis of a special report of the Comptroller General of the United States of the financial transactions of the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation dealing with matters arising in the audit of the accounts, which report was printed as House Document No. 217, Seventy-second Congress, first session (H. Doc. No. 321); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

546. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report on an accumulation of documents and abstract books on file in the Indian warehouses, at Chicago, Ill., St. Louis, Mo., and San Francisco, Calif., which have no permanent value or historical interest; to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers.

547. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a bill to amend section 2 of an act approved February 25, 1929 (45 Stat. 1303), to complete the acquisition of land adjacent to Bolling Field, D. C., and for other purposes, for the consideration of the Congress with a view to its enactment into law; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. POU: Committee on Rules. H. Res. 195. A resolution relative to the concurrence of the House in the Senate amendment to H. R. 6662; without amendment (Rept. No. 1135). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. EVANS of Montana: Committee on the Public Lands. H. R. 10926. A bill to authorize conveyance to the United States of certain lands in the State of Arizona for use of the United States in maintaining air-navigation facilities, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1136). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LEAVITT: Committee on Indian Affairs. H. R. 10238. A bill creating a reimbursable fund to be used for special medical and surgical work among the Indians of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes; with amendment (Rept. No. 1141). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee: Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. H. R. 8173. A bill to provide for the renewal of 5-year level premium term Government insurance policies for an additional 5-year period without medical examination; without amendment (Rept. No. 1144). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. EATON of Colorado: Committee on the Public Lands. H. R. 11639. A bill to authorize extensions of time on oil and gas prospecting permits, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 1145). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. PITTENGER: Committee on Claims. H. R. 3694. A bill for the relief of Ada B. (Gould) Gollan; with amendment (Rept. No. 1137). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. EVANS of Montana: Committee on the Public Lands. H. R. 10048. A bill granting to the metropolitan water district of southern California certain public and reserved lands of the United States in the counties of Los Angeles, Riverside, and San Bernardino, in the State of California; without amendment (Rept. No. 1138). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. EVANS of Montana: Committee on the Public Lands. S. 2144. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant a patent to certain lands to Charles R. Thornton; without amendment (Rept. No. 1139). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. ARENTZ: Committee on the Public Lands. S. 3154. An act authorizing the conveyance of certain lands to the city of Fallon, Nev.; without amendment (Rept. No. 1140). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. PETTENGILL: Committee on Military Affairs. H. R. 5769. A bill authorizing the President of the United States to present in the name of Congress a medal of honor to Thomas H. Laird; with amendment (Rept. No. 1142). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon: Committee on War Claims. H. R. 9915. A bill to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims of the United States to hear, adjudicate, and enter judgment on the claim of William W. McElrath against the United States for compensation for the use or manufacture of an invention of William W. McElrath covered by reissue letters patent issued by the Patent Office of the United States on the 19th day of February, 1924; without amendment (Rept. No. 1143). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. COLTON: Committee on the Public Lands. H. R. 10756. A bill for the relief of Clive Sprouse and Robert F. Moore; without amendment (Rept. No. 1146). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. RAYBURN: A bill (H. R. 11642) to amend sections 15a and 19a of the interstate commerce act, as amended, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11643) to amend section 5 of the interstate commerce act, as amended, relating to the consolidation and acquisition of control of carriers by railroad, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WOLCOTT: A bill (H. R. 11644) to amend the act entitled "An act creating the Great Lakes Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich."; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BLACK: A bill (H. R. 11672) to amend section 3702, Revised Statutes; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BOWMAN: A bill (H. R. 11645) granting a pension to Alma Miller; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BYRNS: A bill (H. R. 11646) granting a pension to Jennie Washington; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CARTER of California: A bill (H. R. 11647) granting a pension to Ada Patrick; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CRAIL: A bill (H. R. 11648) for the relief of Fred Everett Shaffer; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11649) for the relief of Charles G. Lammert; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ERK: A bill (H. R. 11650) for the relief of Cora B. Nebel; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GARBER: A bill (H. R. 11651) for the relief of David S. Viers, jr.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GRANFIELD: A bill (H. R. 11652) for the relief of John E. Springer; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11653) authorizing the President to order Charles Southgate, jr., before a retiring board for a hearing of his case and upon the findings of such board to determine whether or not he be placed on the retired list with the rank and pay held by him at the time of his discharge; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAINES: A bill (H. R. 11654) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Knisly; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 11655) granting an increase of pension to Ameda Holcomb; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILL of Washington: A bill (H. R. 11656) granting a pension to Laura M. Brewer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HORR: A bill (H. R. 11657) for the relief of Leo W. Hurley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KOPP: A bill (H. R. 11658) to extend the benefits of the employees' compensation act of September 7, 1916, to John R. Kelly; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LEAVITT: A bill (H. R. 11659) authorizing the exchange of certain patented lands; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. LINDSAY: A bill (H. R. 11660) for the relief of Francis Henry Schmuck; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. MURPHY: A bill (H. R. 11661) granting an increase of pension to Emma J. Miller; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11662) granting a pension to Catherine Eidenier; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NELSON of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 11663) granting a pension to Mary Jane Whitaker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PALMISANO: A bill (H. R. 11664) granting a pension to Lucy Pierce; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SANDERS of New York: A bill (H. R. 11665) granting an increase of pension to Ida E. Stanton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WEST: A bill (H. R. 11666) granting an increase of pension to Adaline McAnaney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11667) granting an increase of pension to Kate L. Scarbrough; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 11668) granting an increase of pension to Ruth A. Schooley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WITHROW: A bill (H. R. 11669) granting a pension to Mary Adams; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WOLCOTT: A bill (H. R. 11670) granting a pension to Anna Lovejoy; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOPKINS: A bill (H. R. 11671) for the relief of Herman William Sidenfaden; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

7098. By Mr. BOYLAN: Resolution passed by the New York Department of the Reserve Officers' Association of the United States at Albany, N. Y., opposing any reduction in military appropriations; to the Committee on Appropriations.

7099. By Mr. CORNING: Resolution adopted by the Common Council of the City of Troy, N. Y., indorsing the proposed parade by Mayor Walker of the city of New York throughout the Nation on May 14 in connection with the drive to permit the manufacture and sale of beer; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7100. By Mr. CRAIL: Petition of several citizens of Los Angeles County, Calif., protesting against the passage of the Davis-Kelly bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7101. Also, petition of Frederick Ries, of Los Angeles County, Calif., protesting against the economy measure which would stop the granting of war-risk insurance claims; to the Committee on Economy.

7102. By Mr. CURRY: Petition of directors of Sacramento Chamber of Commerce, favoring the repeal of the recapture clause of the transportation act; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7103. By Mr. DAVIS: Petition from Charles E. Price Post of the American Legion of Smith County, Tenn., favoring cash payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7104. Also, petition from Buford Clark Post, No. 129, American Legion, Gainesboro, Tenn., favoring cash payment in full of the adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7105. Also, petition from Gold Star Post, No. 78, American Legion, Manchester, Tenn., favoring cash payment in full of the adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7106. Also, petition from Post No. 5 of the American Legion, Nashville, Tenn., favoring cash payment in full of the adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7107. Also, petition from Stone Fort Post, No. 2120, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Manchester, Tenn., favoring cash payment in full of the adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7108. Also, petition of World War veterans of Cannon County, Tenn., favoring cash payment in full of the adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7109. Also, petition of World War veterans of Clay County, Tenn., favoring cash payment in full of the adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7110. Also, petition from Cookeville Post, No. 46, of the American Legion, Cookeville, Tenn., favoring passage of the widows and orphans' bill, cash payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates, and extension of the time for bringing suit for recovery on war-risk-insurance policies; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7111. Also, petition from Mark Twain Post, American Legion, Jamestown, Tenn., favoring cash payment in full of the adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7112. Also, petition from World War veterans of Flintville, Tenn., favoring cash payment in full of the adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7113. Also, petition from Warren Post, No. 173, of the American Legion, McMinnville, Tenn., favoring cash payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7114. By Mr. FITZPATRICK: Petition signed by a number of residents of Bronx County, New York City, N. Y., urging the full immediate payment of the balance due on the World War adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7115. By Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH: Petition of Worcester Post, No. 93, American Legion of Maryland, Pocomoke City, Md., favoring cash payment of the adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7116. Also, telegram from W. H. Thompson Post, No. 94, American Legion, Princess Anne, Md., favoring immediate cash payment of the bonus; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7117. Also, resolution of the Frank M. Jarman Post, No. 36, American Legion, Chestertown, Md., opposing the payment at this time of the adjusted-service certificates in full; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7118. Also, telegram from Caroline Post, No. 29, American Legion, Denton, Md., favoring the bonus bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7119. Also, petition of merchants, veterans, and nonveterans, residents of Cecil County, Md., favoring immediate cash payment of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7120. Also, petition of Stanley Cochrane Post of the American Legion, Crisfield, Md., opposing any legislation which would repeal any provision of the World War veterans' act or any inclusion-of-needs clause which Legion has always opposed, and all amendments which in any way affect disabled, either in compensation or hospitalization; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

7121. Also, petition of Wicomico Post, No. 64, American Legion, Salisbury, Md., opposing legislation which would repeal any provision of the World War veterans' act of any inclusion-of-needs clause which Legion has always opposed, and amendments which in any way affect adversely disabled either in compensation or hospitalization; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

7122. Also, petition of membership (100 members) of Meuse Post, No. 194, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Salisbury, Md., favoring payment of the bonus; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7123. Also, telegram from Dorchester Post, No. 91, American Legion, Cambridge, Md., opposing legislation which would repeal any provision of the World War veterans' act, or any inclusion-of-need clause which Legion has always opposed, and all amendments which in any way affect disabled veterans either in compensation or hospitalization; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

7124. Also, telegram from the Worcester Post of the American Legion, Pocomoke City, Md., opposing modification of any provision of the veterans' act which in any way affects the disabled; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

7125. Also, petition of veterans, nonveterans, and merchants of Perry Point, Md., favoring passage of House bill 1, granting full payment of the veterans' adjusted-compensation certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7126. By Mr. HADLEY: Petition of a number of residents of Deming, Wash., urging maintenance of the prohibition law and its enforcement; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7127. By Mr. KENNEDY: Petition of New York State Hotel Association, urging repeal of the prohibition laws; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

7128. By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of New York State Farm Bureau Federation, Ithaca, N. Y., favoring the passage of the Norbeck-Steagall bill; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

7129. Also, petition of joint veterans' legislative committee, Veterans' Administration hospital, Whipple, Ariz., opposing reduction in allowances heretofore granted veterans disabled; to the Committee on Economy.

7130. By Mr. MURPHY: Petition of Ross Blake, of Adena, Ohio, and 350 other residents, asking for the passage of the Davis-Kelly bill, for the solution of the deplorable condition existing in the eastern Ohio coal fields; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7131. Also, petition of Daniel A. Murphy and 21 other residents of Mingo Junction, Ohio, asking for the passage of House bill 9891, in the interest of railway employees; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

7132. Also, petition of Elmer Rothermond, adjutant American Legion Post, Martins Ferry, Ohio, protesting against a cut in benefits for World War disabled; to the Committee on Economy.

7133. By Mr. PATMAN: Petition of Clifford Cody Foye and 51 other disabled veterans of New Haven, Conn., indorsing immediate payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7134. Also, petition of United Veterans Association (Inc.), Baltimore, Md., submitted by Berry M. Brice, adjutant general of said association, urging immediate payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7135. Also, petition of L. A. Rentin and other citizens and veterans, Bellingham, Wash., urging immediate cash payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7136. Also, petition of R. Reil and other citizens and veterans, Helena, Mont., urging immediate cash payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7137. Also, petition of M. K. Tyson and other veterans and citizens of Burlington, N. C., urging immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7138. Also, petition of Charles M. Crosby and other citizens and veterans of Dayton, Ohio, urging immediate cash payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7139. Also, petition of Maj. H. Rodgers and other business men of Lovelland, Tex., urging immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7140. Also, petition of American Legion Post No. 19, Somerville, Mass., submitted by William H. Prestley, adjutant of said post, urging immediate payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7141. Also, petition of American Legion Post No. 110, Nashville, Ill., submitted by Wallace C. Maier, commander, and other officers of said post, indorsing immediate cash payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7142. Also, petition of American Legion Post No. 4, Hillsboro, Tex., submitted by C. L. McDonald, service officer of said post, indorsing immediate payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7143. Also, petition of American Legion Post No. 4, Iberia, La., submitted by Henry W. Gould, commander, and Eugene F. Mestrayer, adjutant, of said post, indorsing immediate payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7144. Also, petition of American Legion Post No. 70, Covington, Ky., submitted by Charles B. Tabeling, commander of said post, indorsing immediate payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7145. Also, petition of American Legion Post, No. 47, New Haven, Conn., submitted by Joseph S. Carusi, commander of said post, indorsing immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7146. Also, petition of American Legion Post, No. 57, Chaska, Minn., indorsing immediate payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7147. Also, petition of American Legion Post, No. 244, of California, submitted by A. Louis Belotti, commander of said post, urging immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7148. Also, petition of Veterans of Foreign Wars, Post No. 1920, Graham, N. C., submitted by Vance S. Garrett, commander of said post, indorsing immediate payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7149. Also, petition of American Legion Post, No. 72, submitted by Ben Perris, commander of said post, indorsing immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7150. Also, petition of American Legion Post No. 202, Columbia, Mo., submitted by W. A. Sapp, adjutant of said post, indorsing immediate payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7151. Also, petition of American Legion Post No. 136, Boston, Mass, submitted by F. J. MacQuaide, commander of said post, indorsing immediate payment in full of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7152. Also, petition of American Legion Post No. 190, Chester, Pa., submitted by Dixie D. Dryden, commander of said post, indorsing immediate payment of the adjusted-service certificates; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7153. Also, petition of 17,042 citizens and veterans of Los Angeles, Calif., in cooperation with Veterans of Foreign Wars, Disabled American Veterans, individual posts of the American Legion, and Veterans' Bulletin Service Club of Los Angeles, urging immediate payment of balance due on adjusted-service certificates as provided in House bill 1, submitted by Arthur G. McQuary, field marshal commanding bonus army of the United States; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7154. By Mr. ROBINSON: Petition signed by Orville S. Dean and other Veterans of Foreign Wars, Bechter-Boise Post, No. 2440, Independence, Iowa, protesting against the proposed reduction in the benefits of veterans; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7155. By Mr. RUDD: Petition of employees of the Army Transport Service, opposing the abolishment of the Army Transport Service; to the Committee on Economy.

7156. Also, petition of Edward S. Matthias, chairman national committee on legislation, United Spanish War Veterans, opposing the needs clause and reductions in pensions of veterans while in hospitals; to the Committee on Economy.

7157. Also, petition of the Saranac Lake Chapter of Disabled American Veterans, protesting against reduction of appropriation for disabled veterans; to the Committee on Economy.

7158. Also, petition of Smyth Donegan Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., opposing any reduction of the Federal employees salaries; to the Committee on Economy.

7159. Also, petition of Cook Chemical Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., opposing any salary reduction of Federal employees; to the Committee on Economy.

7160. Also, petition of Madison Square Cooperative Store, New York City, opposing reduction of postal employees' salaries; to the Committee on Economy.

7161. By Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: Petition signed by 215 citizens of Grand Junction, Colo., urging legislation for the relief of the silver situation; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

7162. By Mr. THOMASON: Petition of citizens of El Paso, Tex., protesting against further appropriations at this time for able-bodied ex-service men; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

7163. By Mr. WEST: Petition of 245 residents of Licking County, protesting against the passage of House bills 8092 and 8759, or any other compulsory Sunday observance bill; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE

THURSDAY, APRIL 28, 1932

(Legislative day of Monday, April 25, 1932)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the approval of the Journal for the calendar days of Monday, April 25, Tuesday, April 26, and Wednesday, April 27.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Costigan	Hull	Pittman
Austin	Couzens	Johnson	Reed
Bailey	Cutting	Jones	Robinson, Ark.
Bankhead	Dale	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Barbour	Davis	Kendrick	Schall
Barkley	Dickinson	Keyes	Sheppard
Bingham	Dill	King	Shipstead
Black	Fess	La Follette	Shortridge
Blaine	Fletcher	Lewis	Smoot
Borah	Frazier	Logan	Steiwer
Bratton	George	Long	Stephens
Brookhart	Glass	McGill	Thomas, Idaho
Broussard	Glenn	McKellar	Thomas, Okla.
Bulkley	Goldsborough	McNary	Townsend
Bulow	Gore	Metcalf	Trammell
Byrnes	Hale	Morrison	Tydings
Capper	Harrison	Moses	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hastings	Neely	Wagner
Carey	Hatfield	Norbeck	Walcott
Cohen	Hawes	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Connally	Hayden	Nye	Waterman
Coolidge	Hebert	Oddie	Watson
Copeland	Howell	Patterson	White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 3095. An act for the relief of J. J. Bradshaw and Addie C. Bradshaw;

H. R. 231. An act to grant certain lands to the State of Colorado for the benefit of the Colorado School of Mines;

H. R. 1231. An act for the relief of Grina Bros.;

H. R. 1768. An act for the relief of Alvina Hollis;

H. R. 1770. An act for the relief of Senelma Wirkkula, also known as Selma Wirkkula; Alice Marie Wirkkula; and Bernice Elaine Wirkkula;

H. R. 3580. An act for the relief of Clara E. Wight;

H. R. 4724. An act to confer to certain persons who served in the Quartermaster Corps or under the jurisdiction of the Quartermaster General during the war with Spain, the Philippine insurrection, or the China relief expedition, the benefits of hospitalization and the privileges of the soldiers' homes;

H. R. 4752. An act for establishment of the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park;

H. R. 5484. An act extending the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories," approved March 3, 1877 (19 Stat. 377), and acts amendatory thereof, to ceded lands of the Fort Hall Indian Reservation;

H. R. 5603. An act to authorize the conveyance by the United States to the State of Minnesota of lot 4, section 18, township 131 north, range 29 west, in the county of Morrison, Minn.;

H. R. 8084. An act for the protection of the northern Pacific halibut fishery;

H. R. 8914. An act to accept the grant by the State of Montana of concurrent police jurisdiction over the rights of way of the Blackfeet Highway and over the rights of Way of its connections with the Glacier National Park road system on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana;

H. R. 9598. An act to authorize expenditures for the enforcement of the contract-labor provisions of the immigration law;

H. R. 10495. An act amending an act of Congress approved February 28, 1919 (40 Stat. L. 1206), granting the city of San Diego certain lands in the Cleveland National Forest and the Capitan Grande Indian Reservation for dam and reservoir purposes for the conservation of water, and for other purposes, so as to include additional lands; and

H. J. Res. 375. Joint resolution to provide additional appropriations for contingent expenses of the House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. NEELY presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from Blake Brothers Post, No. 46, American Legion, of Benwood, W. Va., signed by Joseph H. Schmid, adjutant, praying for the payment of adjusted-compensation certificates (bonus) of World War veterans, and the cancellation of interest on previous loans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ASHURST presented a telegram signed by D. B. Wiley, of Phoenix, Ariz., stating "Farm Bureau directors request that you oppose any reduction of appropriation for rural mail service or any consolidation of rural routes that would impair the efficiency of rural mail deliveries," which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from Laura E. Curwell, social worker, etc., of Outwood, Ky., remonstrating against reductions in the compensation of Federal employees, and felicitating the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] on his stand in opposition to pay cuts, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WALCOTT presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from officers of the Hartford Young Women's Christian Association, of Hartford, Conn., signed by Primrose Woolverton, general secretary, praying for the passage of the so-called Wagner bill, being the bill (S. 2687) to provide for the establishment of a national employment system and for cooperation with the States in the promotion of such system, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the New England Division of the Master Photo Finishers of America, at Boston, Mass., favoring the early passage of the so-called Capper-Kelly fair trade bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Tomalonis-Hall Unit, No. 84, American Legion Auxiliary, of Simsbury, Conn., signed by Clementine R. Bourgeois, chairman of its legislation committee, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 51) authorizing the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaties, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a telegram from Michael J. Comcowich Post, No. 597, Veterans of Foreign Wars, of Ansonia, Conn., favoring the establishment of a veterans' committee of the Senate and remonstrating against cuts in hospitalization funds for veterans and the alleged procedure in not hearing veterans' representatives, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a petition from Milardo Wilcox Post, No. 75, American Legion, of Middletown, Conn., praying for the passage of the bill (S. 51) to authorize the building up of the United States Navy to the strength permitted by the Washington and London naval treaties, and also for the making of adequate appropriations for the War Department, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a regular meeting of the Structural Building Trades Alliance of Stamford, Conn., favoring the passage of home loan bank legislation, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Polish American Citizens' Club of Norwich, Conn., favoring the passage of legislation providing for proclaiming October 11 in each year General Pulaski's memorial day, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented papers in the nature of petitions from members of Wadsworth Chapter, of Middletown, and Anne Wood Elderkin Chapter, of Willimantic, both of the Daughters of the American Revolution, in the State of Connecticut, praying for the passage of the so-called Jeffers bill, being the bill (H. R. 8549) to make it a crime to advocate or promote the overthrow or destruction of the Government of the United States by force or violence, and also certain restrictive immigration measures, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a memorial of the Exchange Club of Hartford, Conn., remonstrating against the payment of adjusted-compensation certificates (bonus) of World War veterans at the present time, and favoring the passage of legislation providing benefits for widows and orphans of veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented letters and telegrams in the nature of memorials from the Hartford, Waterbury, and Hardware City Chapters, Disabled American Veterans of the World War, in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the passage of legislation curtailing benefits allowed to disabled veterans, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials, and letters and telegrams in the nature of memorials from Branch No. 227, of Meriden, and Branch No. 394, of New London, both of the National Association of Letter Carriers; Branch No. 2530, United National Association of Post Office Clerks, of Milford; Postal Carriers Association, of Danielson, by Frank E. Young, secretary; Rural Letter Carriers' Association of Connecticut, of Waterbury, by A. W. Backhaus, president, and Charles E. Hodges, secretary; members of the National Association of Post Office Clerks, of Putnam, Herbert A. Johnson, president; National Federation of Post Office Clerks, of East Hartford, by Harry A. Norton, legislative chairman; postal carriers and clerks of the Thompsonville post office; employees of the Danbury post office, members of the Post Office Clerks' Association, of Danbury, by Leo M. Newton, secretary; Danielson postal clerks, by Harold E. Greene, secretary; Branch No. 3, National Association of Postal Supervisors of New Haven, Pierce Maher, president; Lodge No. 30, International Association of Machinists, of Bridgeport, by J. P. Flint, recording secretary; Local Union No. 2039, United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, of Noank, by W. H. Wolverton, recording secretary; Division No. 281, Amalgamated Association of Street and Electric Railway Employees of America, of New Haven, by S. F. Curry, recording secretary, and of sundry citizens of Danbury; all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against reductions in the compensation of Federal employees, especially those in the Postal Service, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SHORTRIDGE presented an editorial from the San Francisco (Calif.) Chronicle of March 26, 1932, entitled "Splitting and Resplitting Hairs Only to Delay World Court Vote," which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Jack Fisher Chapter, No. 23, Disabled American Veterans of the World War, at Santa Ana, and Sacramento Post, No. 61, American Legion, of Sacramento, in the State of California, favoring the maintenance of the national defense, and the increasing rather than decreasing of the obligation of citizens in the defense of the Nation, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented numerous letters, in the nature of memorials, from sundry citizens and organizations in the State of California, remonstrating against the reduction of compensation of postal employees, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented letters in the nature of memorials from Frank Corso, of Oakland, and several citizens of Venice, in the State of California, remonstrating against the adoption of provisions affecting the retirement status of disabled emergency officers of the World War contained in the bill (H. R. 11597) to effect economies in the National Government, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented letters in the nature of memorials from the San Jose State Teachers' College, division of industrial education, by J. Aspinwall; Arthur W. Savage, of San Diego; the San Francisco public schools, by J. C. McGlade, deputy superintendent; the Humboldt Evening High School, by A. E. Roberts, supervisor of technical and vocational classes; the Santa Maria Union High School and Junior College, by A. A. Bowhay, jr., principal; the Salinas Union High School, by Melrowe Martin, district superintendent; the Millwork Institute of California, by H. E. Weyler, director; California Farm Bureau Federation, by Alex. Johnson, secretary; Julian A. McPhee, chief, bureau of agricultural education, department of education, of Sacramento; Santa Barbara Lodge, No. 613, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, by S. J. MacKinnon, secretary; Santa Barbara Local Union, No. 1062, by W. A. Callis, recording secretary; Sonoma County Building Trades Council, by G. W. Gwaltney, secretary, of Santa Rosa; Santa Rosa Builders' Exchange, by W. J. Lindsay, president; Benjamin E. Mallary, supervisor of trade and industrial teacher training classes, division of vocational education, University of California, of Berkeley; and sundry citizens, all in the State of California, remonstrating against the curtailment or elimination of the appropriation providing Federal aid to the States in vocational education, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a letter in the nature of a memorial from Venice of America Post, No. 177, American Legion, of Venice, Calif., remonstrating against the passage of legislation limiting the retirement privilege of disabled American officers to grounds of combat disabilities contracted before the armistice, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorial and letters in the nature of memorials of sundry citizens and organizations, all in the State of California, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the cash payment of World War veterans' adjusted-compensation certificates (bonus), and favoring retrenchment in Federal expenditures, and also the imposition of a general sales tax, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions and letters in the nature of petitions, numerously signed, of sundry citizens and organizations, all in the State of California, praying for the passage of legislation providing for the prompt payment of adjusted-compensation certificates (bonus) of World War veterans, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the American Veterans' Association, of Los Angeles, Calif., favoring the immediate payment in cash at full face value of adjusted-compensation certificates (bonus) of World War veterans, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the City Council of Los Angeles, Calif., protesting against the proposed lowering of compensation and reduction of benefits to disabled World War veterans, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMERICAN AUTOMOBILE ASSOCIATION AND THE SAFETY MOVEMENT

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the observance of the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington has included many noteworthy features. Patriotic ceremonies and parades have been staged in every section of the country. But there is no phase of the whole program that deserves our sympathetic support more than that in which our boys and girls participate. Particularly is this true when safety on the streets and highways—the preservation of life and limb—is emphasized.

In the year 1931 there were 34,400 persons killed and 997,600 injured in 860,000 automobile accidents. Nearly half of the fatalities—42.2 per cent to be exact—were caused by automobiles striking pedestrians, while 53.1 per cent of the injuries were due to collisions between automobiles. Certainly this is an appalling waste of human life.

There is, however, one most encouraging factor. I refer to the steady decline in the number of fatalities and injuries involving children as compared to those in which adults figure. An analysis of motor deaths by age groups for 1931 discloses that of the total of 34,400, children between the ages of 5 and 14 accounted for 14.5 per cent, while the age group between 15 and 54 figured in 60.8 per cent of the fatalities. A study of the automobile injury list presents the same picture.

In seven years, while adult fatalities were more than doubling, those of children increased by less than 25 per cent. In 1922 children made up more than 29 per cent of all traffic casualties; in 1928 less than 20 per cent. Furthermore, statistics for 1929, 1930, and 1931 indicate a still more marked decrease.

This improvement is in large measure attributed to safety education in the schools and the effective and efficient operation of schoolboy patrols in safeguarding children on their way to and from school. The patrolmen are not traffic officers. They are instructed to keep their schoolmates on the sidewalks until traffic is clear and to urge that traffic signals be obeycd.

The American Automobile Association, through its 1,000 affiliated motor clubs, has played a leading rôle in this crusade for safety on the streets and highways. Under its active direction some 200,000 boys in 1,800 cities and towns have been equipped with the familiar white Sam Browne belts and glistening badges, and in some instances with yellow rain ponchos and caps. This safety activity has received the whole-hearted support and indorsement of the United States Bureau of Education and local school authorities. There is no doubt that it has resulted in the saving of countless lives and prevented thousands of children from being maimed for the rest of their days.

Next Saturday morning at 10 o'clock the 2,500 members of the American Automobile Association schoolboy patrols in the District of Columbia will stage a safety parade. It has been officially approved by the District Bicentennial Commission, school, and traffic authorities.

With reference to this parade, the Washington Post says editorially:

Of the many parades that have moved down historic Pennsylvania Avenue, this will be unusual in many respects. It will be composed of boys in their early teens. The place usually reserved for heroes in all parades will go to 35 members who have been decorated for saving the life or limb of a schoolmate.

In calling this Bicentennial feature to the attention of the Senate, I do so for two reasons. First, that we may have a greater appreciation of what this safety patrol movement means to the boys and girls who daily attend school, and second, that by recognizing what has already been accomplished we may lend our encouragement to the further extension of this safety movement.

CANADIAN TRADE CONDITIONS

Mr. McKELLAR presented the following letter, which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

MONTREAL, April 8, 1932.

JAS. E. STARK & CO.,
Memphis, Tenn., United States of America.

DEAR SIR: The new Canadian tariff on United States imports, as well as the creation of the new British tariff, compel the American industries, facing competition, either to establish a branch here or give up importing in Canada and Great Britain.

Over 1,500 branches of American industries are already in operation here and many more are expected to follow the same course in the very near future.

Should you contemplate making a real study of Canada as a field of activity for your products or as a medium to export to the Whole British Empire or Europe, we are thoroughly capable of furnishing you with statistics such as the number of plants, if any, in Canada, engaged in the manufacturing of your products—the quantity produced and quantity imported—location suitable for your industry, plants facilities, railroad and power rates, supply of material, employment situation, so-called tax exemptions, etc.

In Canada, and especially in the Province of Quebec, the labor situation is splendid, with low wages and practically "no strikes" on account of rules of a special nature governing labor organizations.

We have a number of committees ready and willing to furnish plant facilities without rental for a long period of time, and to subscribe to the extent of $100,000 or more for shares of a reliable company desiring to establish in that community.

Some Canadian companies, for purposes of diversification, are anxious to manufacture American products under a license privilege, others would purchase the trade name, patent privileges, if any, and machinery of an American company intending to wind up its affairs, and transfer same to Canada, together with the management and necessary personnel.

We are thoroughly familiar with all these subjects and shall be glad to discuss same with you at our offices preferably, or elsewhere at your convenience, and this without any obligation whatsoever to us on your part.

A short trip to Montreal and a conference with us will certainly do no harm and, on the contrary, may perhaps result much to your benefit.

We would appreciate very much receiving one of your catalogues.

Anticipating an early reply and the pleasure of your personal acquaintance, I am,

Very truly yours,

A. M. SURPRENANT.

REVENUE AND TAXATION

Mr. LEWIS presented a letter from Ralph M. Shaw, of Chicago, Ill., in relation to the new revenue bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, April 2, 1932.

Re: The new revenue bill.

DEAR SENATOR: Whatever may be said by way of explanation or otherwise touching the motives which prompted, or the influences which obtained the passage of the revenue bill by the House of Representatives last week in the form in which it was passed, there is not the slightest doubt that all thinking men who understand the fundamental principles of political economy and the incidence of taxes are agreed that the passage of the bill has destroyed all remnants of a faintly awakened feeling of business confidence.

All thinking men with whom I have talked (and they are many) are united in thinking that if finally enacted, as it comes to the Senate, into law, it will increase poverty and unemployment, exploit capital, and postpone indefinitely any possibility of recurrent prosperity. In other words, its inexorable effect will be not to help, but to destroy.

Undesirable as the tax bill originally reported to the House by the Ways and Means Committee was, it was infinitely better than the bill which the House finally passed. Thinking men can not understand what happened, unless it be that those who inaugurated the movement are anxious to see things get worse rather than see them get better. Many are hoping, and I am one of them, that the Senate will substitute for the bill which it has received from the House the bill which was originally reported to the House by the Ways and Means Committee, adopt it, and then have the matter go to conference. There seems to be a far-reaching reaction, even upon the part of those who originally opposed the very limited sales tax and were successful in so opposing it, that the country would be far better off under the original bill reported by the House Ways and Means Committee than it will be under the mongrel bill which finally passed the House. After all, the sales tax is the fairest tax there is. Those that buy the most pay the most taxes, and those that buy the least pay the least taxes. The more limited the sales tax the poorer the tax bill is.

In this connection I beg to submit to you that in my judgment there is only one real efficient method of decreasing unemployment, and therefore accelerating business recovery, and that is by decreasing taxes instead of increasing them, and, of course, this can only be done (for the Budget must be balanced) by the deflation of the cost of government.

Rents have been and are being deflated. Commodity prices have been and are being deflated. Real estate has been and is being deflated. Securities have been and are being deflated. Wages have been and are being deflated, and will be deflated much more in the absence of some business recovery.

The only thing that has not been deflated is the cost of government, and this is steadily mounting.

The explanation which is given out as being the reason why department heads in Washington do not deflate the cost of their department is this: It is said that if a department head attempts to make a cut in department expense, he is afraid to do so, because he fears that any man who is doing any unnecessary work in an unnecessary department, if threatened with the loss of his job, will telephone to the Congressman or Senator through whose influence he became a barnacle on society, and that thereupon such Senator or Congressman will exercise his political influence to prevent the economy, and possibly cause trouble for the department head.

If this is true it is a great reflection upon the courage of the department head and upon the patriotism and integrity of Senators and Congressmen. But whether this be so or not, the fact still is that the tax bill, if passed in its present form, will exploit what little there is left of wealth in this country and will not improve in the slightest degree the unemployment situation and business depression.

I am calling these matters to your attention because it seems to me that the time has come when every citizen who thinks and every Senator who is inspired with any patriotic love of his country should unite in deflating the cost of government and, therefore, in diminishing the taxes with which an outraged public are already overburdened.

Generalizing will accomplish nothing. Deflation can only be accomplished by Senators, Congressmen, and department heads specializing and particularizing what bureaus can be wholly eliminated and what departments of bureaus can be wholly eliminated so that the public may know and appreciate just what should be done and just who is responsible for not doing it.

That there must be such elimination all sane men agree, because all sane men know:

(a) That the Budget must be balanced;

(b) That it can not be balanced without deflation of government; and

(c) That such procedure is essential to save the Nation.

Very truly yours,

RALPH M. SHAW.

Hon. JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.

TAX ON MUNICIPAL SECURITIES

Mr. LEWIS also presented a telegram from Hon. A. J. Cermak, mayor of Chicago, Ill., relative to the proposed tax on municipal securities, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., April 19, 1932.

Hon. JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS,
Senator from Illinois, Washington:

Federal tax on municipal securities will add to yearly burden of Chicago taxpayers the sum of five and one-half to six millions because of greatly increased interest rates required on securities to be issued mostly for operating purposes, and will also cause a loss to investors holding securities of various Chicago governmental bodies amounting to about $45,000,000 because of large reduction in market value of these securities below present very low market value. Such tax will practically make it impossible in future for municipalities of country to finance except at exorbitant rates. Principal reason for market for municipal securities under normal conditions in comparison with industrial or other forms of securities rests on tax-exempt feature. Why not follow Chicago example and reduce cost of Federal Government?

A. J. CERMAK, Mayor.

BANKING LEGISLATION

Mr. LEWIS also presented a telegram from M. A. Graettinger, executive vice president of the Illinois Bankers' Association, Chicago, Ill., relative to the Glass banking bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., April 15, 1932.

HON. JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS,
Member United States Senate:

Illinois bankers protest strenuously against proposal reported to be recommended for inclusion in Glass banking bill, S. 4115, permitting national banks to have branches in States regardless of State prohibiting same privilege to State banks. This is a most unfair proposal and is contrary to oft-repeated policy of Illinois Bankers' Association and American Bankers' Association. We respectfully urge that no branch-banking privileges be extended to national banks except in such States which permit like privileges to their State banks. We solicit your support to this principle. State autonomy should not be violated.

M. A. GRAETTINGER,
Executive Vice President Illinois Bankers' Association.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. LA FOLLETTE, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the following bill and joint resolution, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 8637. An act to authorize the sale, on competitive bids, of unallotted lands on the Lac du Flambeau Indian Reservation, in Wisconsin, not needed for allotment, tribal, or administrative purposes (Rept. No. 606); and

S. J. Res. 125. Joint resolution authorizing the attorney general of Wisconsin to examine Government records in relation to claims of Wisconsin Indians (Rept. No. 607).

Mr. CAPPER, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

H. R. 615. An act for the relief of C. B. Bellows (Rept. No. 608);

H. R. 1554. An act for the relief of G. Carroll Ross (Rept. No. 609);

H. R. 2704. An act for the relief of Charles Lamkin (Rept. No. 610); and

H. R. 3691. An act for the relief of J. P. Moynihan (Rept. No. 611).

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4270) for the relief of Carroll K. Moran, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 612) thereon.

Mr. LOGAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4453) for the relief of Pasquale Mirabelli, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 613) thereon.

Mr. HOWELL, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 1673) for the relief of Charles C. Bennett, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 616) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Commerce, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 4443. An act for emergency relief of Palo Verde Valley, Calif. (Rept. No. 614); and

S. 4491. An act amending the shipping act, 1916, as amended, for the purpose of further regulating common carriers by water in interstate commerce of the United States engaged in transportation by way of the Panama Canal (Rept. No. 615).

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, to which was referred the bill (S. 4495) amending section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916 (ch. 9, par. 1, 39 Stat. 862), and as amended February 28, 1931 (ch. 328, 46 Stat. 1454), reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 617) thereon.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE

Mr. VANDENBERG. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 2967) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo., and I submit a report (No. 618) thereon. This is a bridge bill, and it ought to have immediate consideration because the time limit is close at hand and there is necessity for the extension. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo., authorized to be built by the Kansas City Southern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, by the act of Congress approved May 24, 1928, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved March 1, 1929, May 14, 1930, and February 6, 1931, are hereby further extended one and three years, respectively, from May 24, 1932.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF THE POST OFFICE COMMITTEE

As in executive session,

Mr. ODDIE, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably sundry nominations of postmasters, which were placed on the Executive Calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4512) authorizing a preliminary examination and survey of the McKenzie River, in the State of Oregon, with a view to the controlling of floods; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. MORRISON:

A bill (S. 4513) for the relief of Walter Thomas Foreman; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH:

A bill (S. 4514) for the relief of Alice E. Broas;

A bill (S. 4515) for the relief of Virginia Houghton; and

A bill (S. 4516) for the relief of Mary V. Spear; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHORTRIDGE:

A bill (S. 4517) for the relief of Henry William Doerges; and

A bill (S. 4518) for the relief of Henry W. Nicoson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BULKLEY:

A bill (S. 4519) granting an increase of pension to Alice V. Keeler (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4520) granting an increase of pension to Amelia Shultz; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NEELY:

A bill (S. 4521) for the relief of Perry Randolph; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McKELLAR:

A bill (S. 4522) to authorize the conveyance to the State of Tennessee of certain land deeded to the United States for the Great Smoky Mountains National Park and not needed therefor (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. GLASS:

A bill (S. 4523) to provide for the construction of a suitable approach to the Arlington Memorial Bridge connecting Lee Boulevard (Route No. 711 of Virginia) with the memorial bridge; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HOWELL:

A bill (S. 4524) to regulate the sale of wheat owned or controlled through the Grain Stabilization Corporation by the Federal Farm Board, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

A bill (S. 4525) providing for the transfer of the duties authorized and authority conferred by law upon the Board of Road Commissioners in the Territory of Alaska to the Department of the Interior, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. GLENN:

A bill (S. 4526) granting jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear the case of David A. Wright; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CONNALLY:

A bill (S. 4527) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande at or near Rio Grande City, Tex.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. FESS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 150) providing for a joint congressional committee to study and review the administration of the Perry's Victory Memorial at Put in Bay, South Bass Island, Lake Erie, Ohio; to the Committee on the Library.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

On request of Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] be assigned to service upon the Committee on Commerce; that the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] be excused from further service upon the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that he be assigned to service upon the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs; and that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. COHEN] be assigned to service on the following committees: Appropriations, Immigration, and Naval Affairs.

PRESIDENT HOOVER'S ADDRESS AT GOVERNORS' CONFERENCE

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the text of the President's address at the governors' conference in Richmond, Va., yesterday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

I am glad to accept your invitation to meet with the chief executives of the States. We are alike facing great emergency problems of government. We are confronted with maintaining the financial integrity of the Government—State, Federal, county, and municipal. We, all of us, are struggling to reduce the cost of government. We are struggling to avoid National, State, and municipal borrowings. Our tax revenues have all greatly diminished. We must find new tax revenues to supplant those sources which have been dried up by the depression, so far as our deficits can not be made up by drastic reductions in expenditures. We must resolutely balance our budgets.

The economic safety of the Republic depends upon the joint financial stability of all our governments. That stability of the Nation is to be attained not alone by the financial stability of the Federal Government. It lies equally in the financial integrity of every State, county, and municipal government. As executives we are charged under our constitutions with the duty to recommend methods and measures to our legislatures to these ends. I know of no more difficult task. Yet the foundations of recovery of business, of employment, and of agriculture depend upon the success of our efforts and the efforts of our legislators.

You are meeting here to consider many phases of these questions. It is to urge the national aspect of our continued State and local financial problems as well as our Federal issues and to discuss some measures of cooperation that I have accepted your invitation to address you to-day.

A few figures will assist us in considering the cost of Government and the extent to which it has increased in the last 20 years, although all such figures are but approximations and have many different bases of calculation. For purposes of illustration I have taken the year 1913 as the last year to reflect pre-war conditions, the year 1924 as far enough removed from the actual war years to fairly indicate the trend, and 1930 as the last year for which figures are available.

Expenditures, including debt retirement from surplus, were approximately as follows:

	1913	1924	1930
Federal	$700,000,000	$4,100,000,000	$4,200,000,000
State	400,000,000	1,400,000,000	2,300,000,000
Local	1,800,000,000	5,400,000,000	7,500,000,000
Total	2,900,000,000	10,900,000,000	13,200,000,000

Our outstanding debt was approximately:

	1913	1924	1930
Federal	$1,000,000,000	$21,300,000,000	$16,200,000,000
State	300,000,000	1,100,000,000	1,800,000,000
Local	3,500,000,000	8,000,000,000	12,600,000,000
Total	4,800,000,000	30,400,000,000	30,600,000,000

The causes which have led to this extraordinary increase in expenditures and debts are familiar. They include the burden on the Federal Government imposed by the war. This accounts for nearly $2,000,000,000 of annual expenditures and for most of the increase in the debt. You will observe that outside of the war influence our greatest increase in costs of government lie in local and municipal agencies.

In all our Governments, however—Federal, State, and local—enlargement of expenditure and of debts has been caused in part by the increase in population; the rise in commodity prices and wages; by the improvement and new building of roads, streets, waterways, and airways, imposed on us through the development of the internal-combustion engine; and by the growing sense of social obligation to improve education and to enlarge activities in behalf of welfare and relief. In addition, I regret to say, increase of Government expenditure and of debt has been caused by sectional and group demands and by a large expansion of national, State, and local ventures into business—most of which we perform in a most costly manner. Just as the methods and practices in private business and living have had to be overhauled in this emergency, so also must we overhaul the methods and practices of government.

To-day we are clearly absorbing too great a portion of the national income for the conduct of our various branches of government. Using the most reliable figures available, it appears that before the war the total cost of our National, State, and local governments represented only about 8 per cent of our national income. In boom times, when we might hope that the national income would increase more rapidly than the cost of government, nevertheless the cost of government actually increased to such an extent that it represented approximately 15 per cent of the national income, of which less than 3 per cent was directly due to the war. To-day, with the falling off of business, the aggregate expenditures of National, State, and local governments probably represent more than 20 per cent of the national income.

Before the war theoretically every man worked 25 days a year for the National, State, and local governments combined. In 1924 he worked 46 days a year. To-day he works for the support of all forms of government 61 days out of a year. Continued progress on this road is the way to national impoverishment.

Some of the expenditures in government can be reduced by postponement of less-urgent matters; some by permanent elimination or curtailment of functions and activities which have been created over the last 50 years in response to the desire for expanded service by the community. These expanded services are somewhat obsolete but many of them meritorious. But every executive is confronted by the fact that they are established by law and can only be reduced by authority of new legislation.

There has been also the growth of useless duplication and waste. Many of you have already pointed out and are to-day struggling to reduce the multiplicity of local governments. Many of these administrative units have been rendered obsolete by improved communications and transportation. In the Federal Government we have likewise a large number of functions which should be grouped and consolidated.

In an emergency these weaknesses become more apparent, and public attention to government and taxes offers opportunity for their revision. We can not restore economic stability in the Nation by continuing to siphon so large a part of private effort into the coffers of the Government; its abstraction from the people stifles the productivity, the consumption, and the recovery of employment. Nor can we hide our heads in the sand by borrowing to cover current Government expenses, for thus we drain the capital of the country into public securities and draft it away from industry and commerce. Thus a dominant national necessity is to reduce the expenditures of all our governments. This is not only the need, it is the universal demand.

I know that every dollar of decrease in expense, every plan of consolidation in governmental activities, touches some sensitive spot where it causes pain and resentment. While the people as a whole demand and applaud these endeavors toward economy, in the large the complaints and threats of sections and groups greatly impede the concrete efforts of all executives and legislators. As a result, one of the difficulties that all executives face is the tendency to secure reduction of expenditures at the cost of those services necessary to protection of life, property, defense, and other vital functions rather than to reduce those items which excite the political interest of special groups.

Another of our difficulties is to arrange our reductions of expenditure so as not to work undue hardship upon a vast group of public employees; and to be careful that while we strive on one hand to assist the unemployed by public works, we do not add to the pool of unemployed through dismissal of large numbers of equally deserving public servants.

I am in hopes that in the Federal Government we can compass the need of reduced expenditure and at the same time, by introduction of shorter working time for each employee, can give all of them a living, can maintain to them the assurance of recovery of the standards of American life, and can avoid the inhumanity of thrusting them upon the local communities for support against destitution.

The other side of our problem is taxation. It confronts all of us in four phases. First, the need for ultimate reduction in the tax burden. Second, the need, in the existing emergency, for new forms of taxation to replace those sources of revenue which have failed us under present conditions in so far as we can not possibly offset the whole loss of public income by reduced expenditures. Third, the great problem of duplication in the tax field between Federal, State, and local governments. Fourth, reorganization of the tax basis so as to secure a more just distribution of the tax burden as between the various groups of taxpayers.

Our problem in tax reduction would be a simple equivalent of our savings in expenditures if it were not for the drastic decline in tax receipts—Federal, State, and municipal. This decrease has been of serious dimensions because tax sources, particularly for the Federal Government, and to a lesser extent State and municipal governments, are dependent upon business activity, upon profits and income. The revenues of the Federal Government have diminished over 50 per cent, and this mainly in one group—the income taxes. And in result the contract obligations alone of the Federal Government exceed our tax income.

As a result of the decreased income of all our Governments—National, State, and municipal—are frantically searching for new sources of taxation. In this process we are too often duplicating taxes upon the same sources. No matter how we disguise it with names such as "excise," "luxury," or "sales," the result is the same, the National, State, and municipal governments are competing with each other for revenue from business activities. We are all seeking further revenue from business activities.

While the National Government imposes no direct taxes on real property, the State and local governments are all pressing upon each other in taxing it. This same real estate indirectly bears in part the taxation which the Federal Government lays on profit and income. It all reflects in the rent.

All these cross purposes contribute to economic duress. The many provisions of multiple taxation may vary so much that a taxpayer coming under several jurisdictions may find himself paying an unreasonable amount for the support of government. The tax levies of the various taxing authorities all constitute a burden on the national income, and, in times of depression, when the relative weight of that burden is increased, lack of coordination in the system becomes a matter of prime importance.

One of the taxes which is responsible for a disproportionate part of the hardship of our present tax system is the general property tax. While the National Government imposes no such tax, the State and local governments rely heavily on it for revenue. The taxes upon real property are the easiest to enforce, and are the least flexible of all taxes. The tendency under pressure of need to continue these taxes unchanged in times of depression, despite the decrease in the owner's income, places undue drag upon that segment of the community in which real estate is the chief property item. Decreasing prices and decreasing income result in an increasing burden upon property owners both in rural and urban communities, which is now becoming almost unbearable. The tax burden upon real estate is wholly out of proportion to that upon other forms of property and income. There is no farm relief more needed to-day than tax relief, for I believe it can be demonstrated that the tax burden upon the farmer to-day exceeds the burden upon other groups.

With view to making a suggestion that may be timely to this subject—that is, the conflict between methods of taxation in different segments of government and consideration of the whole question of distribution of the burden of taxation—it seems to me urgent that we should, all of us, through our financial officers give renewed examination to this subject in the light of conditions to-day and by exchanges between them reconsider the possibilities of the whole problem of better coordination, greater simplicity, and, above all, better adjustment of the burdens among our people.

Gentlemen, the purpose of my address is to express a desire for greater cooperation and coordination of our mutual problems. Just as you are meeting here to-day to develop helpful action out of common experience, I take the liberty of suggesting to you that similar conferences and examination of problems by the executives of your local governments in each State would be productive of useful results. It would help toward a realization that local expenditures and taxes are a part of a great national problem in stability as well as one of local concern. It would contribute to their resolution to bring about constructive economy and cooperation.

We, as executives, all agree upon the absolute necessity in the interest of the Nation as a whole of reduced expenditures, of better distributed taxation, of balanced budgets. Our town councils, our county commissions, our State legislatures, and the Congress agree upon these fundamentals. That is the sure highway toward national recovery. But to accomplish these things we must have the intelligent support of the people themselves, that selfish vested interest and vested habit do not, by their organized sectional and group oppositions or individual action, defeat these high purposes.

Especially do I take this occasion to pay tribute to the courage shown by our public officials, both executive and legislative, in these problems. Their task is no light responsibility. This duty offers no rosy path to popularity. Rather, it is one to invite the anger of established interests. With the utmost care that can be exercised by the executive officers and the legislators throughout the Nation, and with the utmost good will, it is bound to cause individual hardship and to grieve the friends of many worthy causes.

Nevertheless, the duty is inexorable, and its discharge rests inescapably upon all public officers. The final results will redound to the general public benefit.

Therefore, I say to the public: Be patient, be helpful, recognize the complexity and the difficulty of the problem before these servants of your combined public interest. Support them in their task, for upon its successful conclusion depends a most momentous contribution to our united security, our hope of an early return to stability, and the common welfare of every man, woman, and child in our Nation.

GOVERNMENT REORGANIZATION—SPEECH OF SENATOR VANDENBERG

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD a speech delivered by the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] in the National Radio Forum on the subject of "Government Reorganization," April 11, 1932.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The address is as follows:

The costs of Federal, State, and local Government must come down. There is no alternative. Public and private solvency require it. Boom income ended some time ago. Boom outgo must submit to comparable deflation. The taxpayer is at the end of both his patience and his purse. Not even perplexing prohibition excites as much universal conversation to-day as does governmental economy. A mere shifting of taxes from one target to another is not enough, although equity demands some shifts. But the need of the hour is to lay the ax at the root of the tree of public expenditures. To prune the foliage is not enough. The American people demand major operations. They have a right to this relief. Government itself will otherwise go bankrupt. The challenge can not be ignored.

All government in the United States, meaning Federal, State, and local, cost $14,000,000,000 in 1930, or $45,000,000 every week day of the year. To pay this bill took the equivalent cash value of the entire annual production of all our motor factories, all our iron and steel furnaces, all our rolling mills, all our slaughterhouse and meat packing, all our men's and women's clothing industry. The drain is devastating. It can not go on. We must retrench and convalesce.

The Federal contribution to this burden is, roughly, 30 per cent of it—perhaps $13,000,000 or $14,000,000 every week day that rolls by. But the Federal income is now less than half this amount. What shall we do about it? Elementary common sense thunders at us with its monitory answer: Cut your garment to your cloth! Live within your means! Get down to earth! Economize!

Of course, the Federal Budget must be balanced in order to save the public credit. This is our sheet anchor in the storm. Only a crazy man would cut the chain. Unfortunately, so much of the Budget is in fixed charges, like approximately a billion on debt account and another billion in veterans' allowances, that the economy range is sharply circumscribed. As a result, no matter how brave the assault upon the balance of Federal expenditures may be, temporary additional Federal levies are unavoidable. Nobody wants to pay them. But the American people will pay them with typical loyalty and sportsmanship if they know, first, that the last possible economy has been invoked to reduce these temporary tax necessities to the utmost limit and to hasten their subsequent elimination. It is the unescapable responsibility of the Federal Government to put maximum effort into these economies. The people are not of a temper to compromise with failure, however well excused upon this score.

How, then, may it be done? That immediately becomes the practical question.

There are many different contributing answers.

Of course, the first answer is to draw a dead line against all new appropriations for new purposes. This means rigid resistance to the well-meaning demands of well-meaning groups of citizens all over the land. It is a strange paradox that even at this very moment, when the economy cry is in full throat, there still are innumerable petitioners for new and heavy drains upon the Federal Treasury. I personally have been besought to support a total of more than $11,000,000,000 in new appropriations of one kind and another during the last 90 days. An organized minority, responsive to an aggressive manager, can make an exceedingly loud and impressive noise in connection with one of these putative Treasury tappings. Most of these swollen public expenditures originated in the campaignings of just such organized minorities. We probably are the most overorganized land on earth. This is one of the reasons, ultimately, for the high cost of government. The people must change their attitude in this regard. They must exercise as much continence as they demand of Congress. They can not keep their cake and eat it. Economy requires cooperation. Constituents must do their part.

I have said that the first answer to our question is to draw an arbitrary dead line against new appropriations. The second obvious answer is to extend the dead line against any increases in old appropriations and to cut them back to the last livable limit. The President's Budget last December, according to his own figures, wrought a reduction of $369,000,000 over the previous year. In passing upon the first three appropriation bills the House in turn cut a total of $115,000,000 under the Budget, although a substantial portion of this sum is calculated to return after election as a deficiency item. Then the Senate, after helplessly trying to particularize in additional economies, shut its eyes and ordered a final 10 per cent reduction in these totals—an operation in which I participated and which I heartily applaud. If the country thinks that serious efforts are not being made—and successfully—in these directions, the country is mistaken. The executive departments in Washington have good reason to know otherwise.

But there is still a third answer to our question—the most practical and important answer of all—namely, the complete elimination of useless or outworn public services, the reorganization of other services to eliminate duplication, overlapping, and waste, and the economical concentration of all related public services in one management and one overhead. It is upon this particular phase of the problem that I have been asked to speak. I do so with great earnestness, because it is a phase which I have been particularly urging upon the Senate during the past month. What is infinitely more important, it is a phase to which the President has been addressing repeated and insistent messages.

The structure of the Federal Government includes 10 executive departments, 40 independent establishments, 200 bureaus, boards, and commissions, and 550,000 employees. They have grown up "like Topsy." No one in particular is to blame. It is the haphazard product of a haphazard era in American life. Once upon a time the late Senator Aldrich said in another and less-expensive day that even then he could save $300,000,000 a year through "business management" of the Federal Government. Since then we have had our recent decade of opulence when money was no object, when our fat fortunes were matched by an equivalent generosity in the expansion of infinite social and public service, when we trended in the direction of vast grants of aid and interest for industry and agriculture, when we drifted into the emphasized habit of Federal bounties to the States, when, in a word, Uncle Sam became a sublimated Santa Claus with a pouch full of currency for anybody who might write him a letter.

Each new Federal activity required some kind of a new bureau to administer it. Then each new bureau immediately aspired to justify its own expansion by conjuring some new Federal activity. The endless chain. The vicious circle. Bureaucracy on the loose! Frankenstein! The motives were superb. But the net result is administrative and economic chaos.

Just a few out of innumerable examples. Public-works construction is handled by 14 bureaus or agencies in 9 different departments! Conservation of natural resources is handled in eight bureaus or agencies in five different departments! Direct aids to education are handled in six different bureaus or agencies in three different departments! Public health is handled in four different bureaus or agencies in two different departments! The purchase of $250,000,000 of supplies annually is handled independently by all bureaus and all agencies in all departments, and the same commodity is bought at widely differing prices by these uncoordinated purchasers in behalf of the same government! Probably the most classic example of this magnificent confusion is the plight of the perplexed mariner in his dealings with his Government.

He borrows from the Treasury through the Shipping Board to build his vessel. He gets a subvention from the Post Office to help run it. He gets his domestic charts from the Department of Commerce, his foreign charts from the Navy Department, and his Nautical Almanac from the Naval Observatory. He will in some instances get sailing directions from the Army. In a fog he will get radio signals from both the Navy Department and the Commerce Department. He will listen to foghorns and look for lights and buoys provided by Commerce. If he sinks, his life is saved by the Treasury Department. He will anchor at the direction of the Army, who rely upon the Treasury to enforce their will. His boilers and lifeboats are inspected by one bureau in Commerce. His crew is certified by another. This crew is signed on by Commerce, inspected at sailing by the Treasury, inspected on arrival by the Department of Labor. Of such is the kingdom of Federal bureaucracy!

This is not an isolated exhibit. It is simply the lengthened shadow of paternalism. Democracy and paternalism are at war with each other in the United States to-day. The winner remains to be identified, because—I beg of you to remember—there are powerful and earnest groups of citizens continuing to clamor for more rather than less bureaucracy and cash transfusion.

But the need of the moment, dictated by sense and necessity, is bone-deep retrenchment and impartial, unpartisan, courageous reorganization. There are three possible methods of procedure. The chief hazard at the moment is a discursive and diverting row over the choice of a method as between these three—a quarrel which, unfortunately, can not be kept wholly free of 1932 political-campaign agilities. But I hasten to add that all parties and all departments persistently demonstrate a common and devoted anxiety to do this job in respect to shortened expenditures.

One of these three methods of retrenchment through reorganization is the legislative method, dependent upon legislative initiative and impulse. This is the most doubtful method, because in the midst of a confusion of clashing bureaucratic interests which know exactly what they want it is dubious business to wait for a meeting of 531 legislative minds in House and Senate. We have one shining example of this futility. In 1924, after four years' earnest labor, a joint congressional committee submitted a comprehensive reorganization plan, far more searching in scope than any duplicated effort could hope to be to-day, and it died aborning. We approach the eighth anniversary of its obsequies. On the other hand, Congress proved that the miracle is not impossible, when, for example, it ordered the concentration of all veterans' affairs in one department two years ago, whereupon this concentrated department, although simultaneously loaded down with 50,000 new types of Spanish War claims, 715,000 new types of World War disability claims, and 2,268,000 new bonus loans, proceeded actually to reduce its joint cost of operation by nearly $12,000,000 per annum. In other words, the thing can be done by congressional initiative, as a House Economy Committee has been struggling to do it for several weeks, but it is the least reliable and the most ponderous formula.

The second method of procedure is by Executive order of the President. This is the "direct action" method. It is the method recommended by the analogy of private business where the executive ordinarily "hires" and "fires" and pursues efficiency and economy by summary mandate. The President repeatedly has asked Congress to give him this authority, subject only to consequent congressional veto. At present he has in the main only the power to recommend. But Congress has declined to untie his hands. The question of the delegation of legislative powers arises. Then, too, there is a constant demand for a bill of particulars as a condition precedent. Then there is the familiar and typically illogical political anathema which condemns the President for not acting on his own while also declining to grant him the power to act on his own. Three times in the Senate, between March 11 and March 17, I sought to provide this power through amendments to appropriation bills. The first amendment was defeated, 32 to 34; the second, 26 to 37; the third, 28 to 35. But a resolution submitted by Senator GEORGE and approved by the Finance Committee to accomplish this result is now on the Senate Calendar, and the so-called steering committee promises it an early right of way.

The third method of procedure is a combination of the other two. The President recommended it in a special message on April 4, namely, corrective action initiated by a mixed group representative of Senate, House, and Executive. This method lacks some of the infirmities of the first method and all of the expedition of the second method. If it could have plenary power, it would be superior to both. But any method which gets results is welcome. The extra-legal liaison established last Saturday between the President and the House Economy Committee points to possibilities of success in this latter direction. It remains to be seen, however, what the full body of the House and Senate would do with a general reorganization law submitted for its approval. The President did not overstate the hazard in his press statement of April 5 when he pointed out that such a program concerns a multiplicity of committees in Congress, as well as a multiplicity of executive instrumentalities. He said, "If we take the 11 principal spending branches of the Government, each of them working independently with some part of over 30 different congressional committees which are concerned in these ideas and proposals, then, even if we have the very best will in the world, without an atom of partisanship, the mere diffusion of effort seemingly makes effective progress impossible." It remains to be seen whether a mixed liaison committee, implementing this third plan, could rise above this complex. Bureaucracy is tenacious. So are its related committees in the Congress. Personally I continue to believe the second method preferable—direct action by Executive order. But any method is preferable to no method—and the time for cohesive decision is at hand. The end will justify the means. Democracy is eating itself up to-day. It must curb its own governmental appetites.

This is more than a skirmish; it is a war. Saving a few millions is not enough. Saving three-quarters of a billion is nearer the need and not impossible. The best politics at the moment is no politics. The best rule is courageous, consistent common sense. There is no way that Uncle Sam can get a single dollar of real money without taking it sooner or later from the pockets of his people. Any pretense to the contrary is mere moonshine. Let us put first things first. There is no way to stop this exaction except by stopping expenditures. Unfortunately this hurts those who are thus penalized or deprived. Hence the resistance. But our responsibility is to the greatest good of the greatest number. The American people have a right to reduced budgets in every field of Government. They should encourage this disposition upon the part of their public servants by declining to join in demanding new drafts or in opposing rational curtailments. With common and incorrigible zeals we shall win our way back to solvent happiness.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR PITTMAN AT MONTICELLO

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an able address which the eminent senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] delivered at Monticello on April 25 instant.

There being no objection, the address was ordered printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Governor Pollard, Mr. Gibboney, assembled governors, and distinguished guests, throughout the ages, in the darkest hours when chaos reigned and man seemed sinking into mental and moral degeneracy, God in His infinite mercy has vouchsafed to us some great soul to lead us back to the perfect and immortal laws given us through His divine Son.

Our country has been peculiarly blessed. Since the beginning of our strife for an independent government, where men could live free and equal, statesmen, soldiers, and philosophers have arisen whenever our Government has been threatened or our people have cried out in distress.

To-day we are honored in being permitted to assemble at the shrine of one of these great souls to tender our humble tribute.

Again darkness is enveloping us, and no ray of light meets our weak vision. It is well that at this time the governors of our great States, whom Jefferson so loved and trusted, should meet to take counsel. Eight million men and women in our country are pinched by poverty, the humiliated subjects of charity, because they can find no work for their willing brains and hands. The farmer, the stock raiser, and the miner can not sell their products for sufficient to pay the expenses of production. Many of our great manufacturing plants are idle, while the rest have reduced their operations to a small percentage of their capacity. It is not by reason of the lack of money. They have more money invested than is necessary for their operation or upon which they can earn a profit. It is because the farmer, the stock raiser, the miner, and the idle manufacturing laborer can not buy. Those who have money can find no profitable investment or safe place to lend it. They have lost confidence in everything, so they are hoarding their gold.

What is wrong? We have more money in our banks than in the most prosperous times; our land is just as rich; our manufacturing plants are just as efficient; our people are just as capable and industrious; our demands are just as great.

One school of thought says, "Restore confidence and all will be well." Congress has not faltered. It has passed the legislation which was declared would restore confidence. We have passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act and the Glass-Steagall Banking Act. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation act has reduced the number of bank failures and prevented possible receiverships of big corporations. The Glass-Steagall Banking Act has not been utilized by the banks of the country to the extent required. They are afraid to borrow currency from the Federal reserve banks to lend under present conditions. This legislation has accomplished good results, but it has failed to restore trade. Commodity prices have not increased and unemployment has not decreased.

This school of thought now tells us to cut off Government works, decrease employment, and reduce wages. Such program, it is true, will tend to stem the tide of rising taxes undoubtedly, but I can not comprehend how it will materially increase the purchasing power of our people, which is essential to prosperity. Are these disastrous means necessary to the balancing of our Budget?

It is true that expense of government has risen to the danger point. It must be reduced. The question is, Is this the time to do it in the manner suggested? Are not the premier problems the elimination of unemployment and raising of commodity prices above the cost of production? Can anyone except our Government afford to employ when there is no profit in industry? We can place industry upon a profitable basis; but it will take time, and is there time to trifle with unemployment?

We produce a surplus in this country, and until we reestablish our foreign markets for such surplus we can have no profitable domestic market. The stagnation of international commerce and trade is the major cause for world depression. Great differences in the exchange value of the money of countries, and the tariff walls are the chief obstructions to such commerce and trade. Over half of the people of the world have and use silver money alone. We have negligently permitted their money to be so beaten down in value as compared with our gold-standard money that they can not longer afford to purchase our products.

The inexcusable, unnecessary, and almost criminal causes for this silver-money depression can be easily eliminated through the action of an intergovernmental conference. Trade barriers can be removed through reciprocal agreements and commerce restored. These acts will be accomplished. Then our purchasing power will return, industry will prosper, unemployment will cease, confidence will be reestablished, and Government aid will no longer be necessary.

I hope the governors will take counsel with regard to these matters and advise us of the Congress, because we welcome able, unselfish, and fearless advice, and support.

ALABAMA SENATORIAL CONTEST

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. Res. 199) reported by Mr. GEORGE and Mr. BRATTON from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as follows:

Resolved, That JOHN H. BANKHEAD is hereby declared to be a duly elected Senator of the United States from the State of Alabama for the term of six years, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1931, and is entitled to a seat as such.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I shall take as little time as possible in presenting some answers to arguments which have been made upon this question, but I shall at the same time take enough time to present the matter to the Senate as best I can. I want to promise the Senate, in the first place, that before I shall finish I shall undertake to show a very great difference between this case and the Vare case in many particulars. I shall undertake to show to those on this side of the Chamber who voted as I voted in that matter that they have nothing to be ashamed of and that there is nothing inconsistent with my vote against the unseating of Mr. Bankhead.

I want to point out, in the first place, that I do not agree with the suggestion made by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections that under the facts and circumstances of this case Mr. Heflin can under any circumstances be seated by the Senate. I do insist, however, that regardless of what Senators here may feel with respect to the primary, there is sufficient fraud in the election to make it necessary for the Senate to declare that there was no election in that State in the year 1930.

I have heretofore based my argument largely upon the fact that irregularities themselves under the decisions of all the courts and under the precedents in both Houses of Congress fully justify us in taking that action. In view, however, of what has been said on the other side, I shall not be content with that but I shall point out specific instances, and then I shall seriously ask the Senate whether under any circumstances it wants to put its stamp of approval upon such conduct.

I shall ask you to bear with me a moment until we visit Alabama with John Doe, who was spoken of yesterday by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE]. The Senator from Georgia called attention to the fact that John Doe was a respectable man, that he was a member of the church, that he did those things that any respectable man might do in the State of Alabama. He called attention to the fact that the Senator from Delaware would throw out John Doe's vote because they did not have a polling booth at the place where he voted; would throw out his vote because it did not bear the official initials of officers in charge; would throw out his vote because it was not marked in accordance with the law of Alabama; would throw out his vote because the officers did not roll and seal the ballots and put them in a box. Then he called attention to the fact that these are the few facts to which the Senator from Delaware has called attention and upon which the Senator from Delaware desires the Senate to throw a man out of the Senate and declare there was no election.

Just at this point I want to invite attention to some of the things which to my mind are more important than the mere flyspecks which the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] said I discovered with a microscope. I read:

In Barbour County a few of the ballot boxes were "returning cases." No slot.

In Blount County several of the ballot boxes were "returning cases." No slot.

In Bullock County several of the ballot boxes were "returning cases." No slot.

In Butler County several of the ballot boxes were "returning cases." No slot.

In Calhoun County 26 ballot boxes had no slot for the insertion of ballots.

In Conecuh County none of the 33 boxes had slots for the insertion of ballots.

In Crenshaw County none of the 30 boxes had slots for the insertion of ballots. They were their "returning cases."

In Etowah County 10 of the ballot boxes had no slot for the insertion of ballots.

In Hale County 13 of the ballot boxes had no slot for the insertion of ballots.

In Cherokee County 11 of the ballot boxes used had no slot for the insertion of ballots. They were "returning boxes."

In Pickens County all of the 24 boxes had no slot for the insertion of ballots.

In Wilcox County there were five standard R. F. D. mail boxes used as ballot boxes. There were no slots in them.

In Jefferson County about 75 of the green ballot boxes had no slot for the insertion of ballots. About 75 of the green boxes had a very small slot which was too small for the insertion of a folded ballot. About 50 of the black boxes had a slot which was large enough to admit a folded ballot.

Morgan County had 17 ballot boxes with no slot in them for the insertion of ballots.

That, Mr. President, I suppose, is what one of my colleagues on the subcommittee calls a flyspeck.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me ask the Senator if he is not now talking about the returning boxes which are provided for under the Alabama law?

Mr. HASTINGS. I am talking about the boxes collected by the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. They were collected by the committee's agents, but it was following the election, and therefore the ballots were in returning boxes. In some instances the Alabama law provides for a separate returning box.

Mr. HASTINGS. In some instances! Does it not do it in every instance?

Mr. GEORGE. It does; but in all the counties they do not observe it, though some of them do observe it.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is exactly what I am going to talk about.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is leaving the Senate under the impression that those were ballot boxes.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am not leaving the subject by any means, and before I get through I will thoroughly explain it.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. HASTINGS. I say that if a condition like that were discovered in Pennsylvania it would be immediately declared to be a scandalous condition; but what happened in Alabama is as pure as some edition of the Holy Writ; nothing at all is said about it; it is called nothing in Alabama.

Let me go north of the Mason and Dixon line, and, instead of John Doe, let me take Richard Roe, and let me place him in the southern part of Philadelphia, and, instead of a respectable white man of Alabama, let me assume that he is a respectable colored man in south Philadelphia, attending church just as regularly as the white man attended church in Alabama.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not expect to speak again, but I am not going to have the Senator misrepresent me in this body. I never used the word "white" or the word "colored," either directly or by insinuation.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have not intimated such a thing.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator means to intimate it; I think it is his purpose now to do so.

Mr. HASTINGS. Oh, do not charge me with that——

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

Mr. HASTINGS. Because I did not intimate any such thing. The Senator from Georgia, however, picked out his man, John Doe, and I am assuming that he is a white man voting in Alabama. The Senator did not say so, but I am assuming it; and I am taking my own man; I am naming him Richard Roe; I am putting him in South Philadelphia, and I am going to find out what happens to him when he goes to vote, as the Senator from Georgia finds out what happened to John Doe when he went to vote. This is what happens: Richard Roe goes to the polling place, and, lo and behold, there is no polling booth; there is no secret place for him to go in order to vote. What is the inference to be drawn when Richard Roe comes here and complains that his vote cast in Philadelphia was not counted because there was no secret place where he could go and mark his ballot? The inference to be drawn—and the charge would be made—is that it was the Vare henchman who prevented the law from being carried out in Philadelphia. For what reason? Because they wanted to be in a position where they could watch that voter, Richard Roe, in South Philadelphia, mark his ballot. In Alabama watchers were there, and the voter had no secret place to go. Then the question is asked of the Senate, Is that the proper way to conduct an election?

Then if it is found that the Vare election officers, these horrible men, deliver him a ballot that was not properly initialed, what inference is to be drawn from that? What is the purpose of initialing the ballot? The purpose of initialing the ballot in Alabama is to prevent a man from getting a ballot and having it marked outside. So when he goes into the polling place he takes the official ballot that is initialed and votes that official ballot. If the initials are not required to be placed on the ballot, then he is permitted to take a ballot from the outside that somebody has marked for him, to take it in the booth, and vote that ballot, instead of the official one that he should get in that particular place.

The Senator from Georgia complains that I want a vote thrown out because it was not numbered; and in 28 places in the speech delivered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] he charged me with wanting to throw out the votes because pencils were used instead of ink. I call his attention to the fact that 58,817 of the ballots were not marked at all. In a colloquy with the Senator from Nebraska the Senator from Alabama said, "Why you could discover fraud, because the vote was marked and, having been marked, you could identify the vote, and in that way could discover the fraud easily enough in one day." He complained of me that I wanted to throw Bankhead out because there was a failure to number the ballots; but the minute the question is put to him and it is shown that fraud could be committed, but the great difficulty is pointed out of catching a man committing the fraud, the Senator from Alabama says, "In Alabama we number the ballots, and in that way it is easy to discover any fraud." Yet 58,817 ballots were not numbered at all, to say nothing about the three counties from which the ballots were not brought here because they had been burned before we could get our hands upon them.

Let us follow Richard Roe a little bit farther. His ballot is not numbered, and the Senator from Georgia says, "Your ballot can not be counted because the election officers failed to number your ballot." Well, that is too bad. But, in addition to that, the Senator from Georgia says to him, "They did not roll your ballot and seal it, so it is difficult for us to locate your ballot and to know that it is in the ballot box as you put it there." The Senator says nothing to him about there being no slots there through which the ballots were put. But, in addition, he says to Richard Roe, "We find that when the Senate comes to collect the ballot boxes the boxes themselves are broken into; we find the ballots not sealed; we find the ballots not numbered; we find they are not initialed; we find that there was no booth furnished to you in which to vote; and, under all the circumstances, poor Richard Roe, we can not possibly count your vote." But Richard says to him, "No; you are talking about Alabama; we do not do things like that in Pennsylvania." No such condition existed in South Philadelphia in 1926 when the Senator from New Mexico was investigating that election; not at all.

The booth was there, oh, yes; the ballots were properly initialed by the official, that is all right; they were properly numbered by the official, that is all right; the ballots were properly rolled, that is all right; the boxes were properly sealed, that is all right. "We found all those conditions, Richard, it is true, but we found a condition in Philadelphia which we say must of necessity indicate fraud. We found, Richard, that in your district 100 per cent of the registered voters voted, and, based upon that, we must of necessity assume that there was fraud committed there. We find, more than that, in some districts that 100 per cent of them voted for Vare. That being true, we can not assume that there existed in Philadelphia a condition consistent at all with an honest election. But that is not all; we found a memorandum in the prothonotary's office showing that your box containing 400 votes was delivered there an hour and a half after the election closed, and we assume from that, because we have tested it in the committee, that one can not possibly say that that was a valid box, and we are bound to throw it all out because it is a physical impossibility for anybody to have counted those ballots in that time. In addition to that, in your particular box on a recount we find that Vare loses a dozen votes and Wilson gains a dozen votes."

Senators, that is the parallel between the two cases. The Senator from New Mexico, in the Vare case, threw them all out; he threw out every one where there was a particle of suspicion of fraud. He then found that 19,000 more votes were cast for Vare than for Wilson, and, for that reason, he could not support Wilson; but he said in his speech in the Senate and in the report submitted by him, and signed also by the Senator from Georgia, that the election was so tainted with fraud that he could not think of standing by and letting Vare take his seat.

But the Senator says with respect to the primary, "Oh, that is a different thing." In the report which he has submitted here it is said that the Senate has nothing to do with the primary, and he gives as a reason for a distinction between this case and the Vare case that Vare himself was covered with fraud; Vare himself was tainted with leprosy. What was there in the resolution to prove it? What were the facts in the Vare case? The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] was absolutely correct; the resolution itself shows it.

The resolution says that there was some fraud committed in the primary, but that there was a great amount of money used by Vare and his friends, too great an amount for the Senate to feel justified in permitting him to take his seat. There was the distinction. On this side some of the Members said that was not a sufficient reason, that taking into consideration the 10,000,000 people in Pennsylvania, it was not too much to spend $875,000, and there was not sufficient evidence shown of fraud to make it an illegal primary. That is all there was to it. There was not a word in the resolution to condemn Vare himself—there was nothing in the resolution that condemned the personal character of Vare; nothing that made it necessary for the Senate to throw him out because his personal character was not such as to make him fit for us to associate with. The action taken in that case was based upon one theory; it was based upon the theory that because of the use of money and some fraud shown, the primary itself was a nullity.

I say if that be true with respect to a primary, what shall be true if it appears on the face of the resolution itself that it is wholly null and void. I say that much more can be said in this case against the primary than could possibly be said against the primary in the Vare case. In that case there was a difference of opinion with respect to what the actual facts showed and whether they were important enough to cause the Senate to conclude that that primary itself was null and void; but here under the Alabama law—and I challenge any unbiased lawyer who examines it to say that that is not the fact—in this case it is just as clear as it is possible to make anything that the whole proceeding was unlawful. The fact that in Alabama similar action was taken once before, I submit, is no reasonable excuse. As a matter of fact, it never was done before. What was done before was to require an affidavit that the person did not support the Republican ticket nor vote the Republican ticket. That was what was in the resolutions prior to 1930. In 1930, for fear Heflin could comply with the requirement, for fear he could say he did not vote for Hoover, they put him in a position where he could not possibly under any circumstances make the affidavit that was required.

It is perfectly absurd to compare the Lett case with this case. In the Lett case it was merely held that the requirement was reasonable and did not prevent a man from getting on the ballot; that all he had to do is to give to the public certain information; while in this case it was made impossible for certain people to run as candidates in that particular election.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BRATTON. Suppose Lett had voted the Democratic ticket in 1928, would the resolution have barred him from going on the Republican ticket in 1930?

Mr. HASTINGS. Not at all.

Mr. BRATTON. Then it would have required him to make a false affidavit, would it not?

Mr. HASTINGS. It would not have required him to make an affidavit of any kind except as to how he voted; that is all it required.

Mr. BRATTON. In 1928?

Mr. HASTINGS. In 1928.

Mr. BRATTON. Well, let us say that in fact Lett voted the Democratic ticket in 1928. Would the resolution have excluded him from going on the ticket in 1930?

Mr. HASTINGS. Not by any means.

Mr. BRATTON. The only way he could have gone on the ticket would have been to make a false affidavit.

Mr. HASTINGS. No; not at all. The Senator, I submit, has not carefully read the opinion if he has that impression. The resolution simply said that you should state how you voted in 1928. It did not say what effect it should have. Indeed, the intent was that it should have no effect except that the public should be given the information.

Mr. BRATTON. Is that the view of the Senator as to the Lett case?

Mr. HASTINGS. It is the absolute view of the Senator, and nobody can read it without reaching that conclusion.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. In the Lett case, that was the rule adopted by the Republican Party officials of Chilton County. It fixed no qualification for voters, did it, except just the general qualification that they should be qualified electors? It did, however, require an additional qualification of Lett; that is, it required him to make and file a certain affidavit. I think the Senator will concede that; will he not?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. Therefore, it was laying down a qualification for Lett different from and additional to that required of the voters in the primary. The Senator concedes that, does he not?

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. Lett refused to make the affidavit, and the Republican Party committee of Chilton County thereupon refused to put his name upon the ballot.

Mr. HASTINGS. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. His case went to the supreme court, and the supreme court said that the regulation was reasonable, and that they had a right to keep him off the ballot as a candidate. The Senator does not controvert those facts, of course.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct. Now let me undertake to show the difference——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. In other words, Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption, under the Lett case the decision suggested that it be left to the people themselves to determine whether or not Lett was a good party man.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Not that it be left to 50 or 60 party bosses to decide whether or not he was entitled to go on the ticket, but that the people themselves should decide the question.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is correct.

Mr. President, there is this distinction between the two sections that have been talked about so much, sections 612 and 672: Section 612 provides political or other qualifications for the candidate, which shall be the same as the political qualifications for the elector. "Political or other qualifications" is the language; and the heading of that is "Qualifications for voters." Senators on the other side insist that the heading amounts to nothing; but the heading on that—made, I assume, by a lawyer of Alabama preparing the code—is "Qualifications for voters." In the second instance it makes provision for the assessment of candidates, and gives to the executive committee the right to assess candidates or provide other qualifications.

In providing for assessments, why was it necessary to say "other qualifications"? In the first instance they had provided political or other qualifications. In the second they had provided assessments or other qualifications. It was intended that the political qualifications for the candidate should be the same as for the voter. Other qualifications were necessary to be put in there because you will observe that every primary resolution passed in Alabama distinctly provides for white electors and for white candidates. In order to be able to put that there, it was necessary for them to say "or other qualifications."

As I read these resolutions that have been passed, calling for primaries in Alabama, I have no doubt that that was the sole purpose. The Republicans, however, when they called their convention, added something else; namely, that before the candidate's name should be put on the ballot he should state how he voted—that is all—and the court held that that was reasonable. I want to inquire whether anybody could hold that it was reasonable to put in there such a qualification that it was positively known and distinctly provided in the resolution itself that certain persons could not qualify if that qualification was there?

Mr. President, a great deal has been said here about the primary. It has been discussed; but to my mind it is nothing like so important as the other part of these provisions.

I want to call your attention to what the law provides with respect to the poll tax. I had it written into the RECORD the other day when the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] was addressing the Senate. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to it again, because, to my mind, it is very important.

Here is what the law provides with respect to poll tax:

SEC. 3464. Poll tax paid by another; penalty: Any person who shall pay the poll tax of another, or advance him money for that purpose in order to influence his vote, shall be guilty of bribery, and, upon conviction, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for not less than one nor more than five years.

A very severe penalty; a very important provision, I assume, of the Alabama law, if we are to judge from the penalty imposed.

What does the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] say with respect to that? Here is his language:

The Senator wants to condemn the group paying the poll tax by voluntary contributions, long before the election occurs, simply because they happen to assist in paying the poll tax of some who might otherwise be deprived of the right of casting their votes at the ballot box.

Then, again, I asked him this question:

Just a minute. Does the Senator say that it must be for the purpose of influencing his vote?

There is some colloquy between there. Then this occurs:

Mr. BLACK. The Senator may think that the court would so hold—

I contended that it was unlawful under the Alabama law for one person to pay the poll tax for another; that is one thing; that it was unlawful for the person to advance money to another for that purpose in order to influence his vote. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] says:

The Senator may think that the court would so hold; but, somehow, I do not believe that in a question where the right of suffrage is involved the court is going to strain at a gnat and swallow a camel in order to send somebody to the penitentiary.

That is the idea the Senator from Alabama has with respect to the importance of that important provision of his law. Let us see what they think about it in Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator did not read the statement that I made where I insisted that the poll tax must be paid for the purpose of influencing the vote. I suggest that the Senator read that before he proceeds any farther.

Mr. HASTINGS. The Senate has heard what the Senator has said. This is the colloquy. I want to be perfectly fair with him. I say:

If the Senator will permit me, I should like to read into the RECORD, just at this point, the section that has been referred to.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to have it read.

Mr. HASTINGS (reading):

"SEC. 3464. Poll tax paid by another; penalty: Any person who shall pay the poll tax of another, or advance him money for that purpose in order to influence his vote, shall be guilty of bribery, and, upon conviction, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for not less than one nor more than five years."

Mr. BLACK. That is exactly what I said the law was—in order to influence his vote.

Mr. HASTINGS. Just a minute. Does the Senator say that it must be for the purpose of influencing his vote?

Mr. BLACK. Unquestionably it must be to influence his vote.

Then I follow it up, and I ask the Senator this question:

May I make this inquiry: Can it be said that a political party pays the poll tax of a person except for the purpose of influencing his vote?

Mr. BLACK. I do not know. They might think they would get his vote; but I imagine they would not always get it. Of course, the practice was most common up in De Kalb County, where the probate judge is a Republican.

Mr. President, here is a law that prohibits the payment by one person of the poll tax of another; and in this record it is shown beyond doubt that it was not only permitted but it was the practice of both political parties in Alabama to pay the poll tax of other people. I think that is a serious thing.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAREY in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HASTINGS. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator, of course, does not mean to say that it is the practice all over Alabama.

Mr. HASTINGS. No. I am going to come to the excuse made by the contestee in this case.

Mr. BLACK. All I want to say to the Senator is that he is leaving the impression that whether the practice was good or bad, it was common over Alabama. The record shows that it was not common over Alabama; that it was done only in two counties in the State.

Mr. HASTINGS. The record does not necessarily show that; but if the Senator will be patient, I will go a little farther with it, as I intended to do.

It was shown by witnesses called that the poll taxes were paid in two counties by the political party. More than that, a witness who was called said that as early as January, 1930, there was collected for campaign purposes from J. H. Bankhead a check of $25, and he showed that that was for campaign purposes in January, 1930, and that a part of the purpose of collecting campaign money at that time was to pay the poll tax.

Who can possibly say that the Democratic Party or the Republican Party when it pays the poll tax for another does not do it to influence the vote of that particular person? There can not be any possible question about it; and the man who contributes and the man who pays it are guilty. I submit, under that law, which involves a punishment of as much as five years in the penitentiary.

In reply, this is said: It is not said by Mr. Bankhead that that practice prevails in only two counties of Alabama. He calls attention to the fact that we have not shown that it applied to more than two counties in Alabama. In other words, under my direction, with which the subcommittee agreed, we stopped the taking of testimony. I do not know whether additional testimony would have shown that it was the practice in every county or that it was not; but I do know that it was shown with respect to two counties, and it is not even contended by Mr. Bankhead that it was limited to those two counties.

What is the United States Senate going to do with the laws of a State when it is admitted here that it is the practice in those counties to do what? To commit bribery. Shall it be said, because we have not shown that thousands of dollars were involved in the transaction, that it is any the less illegal? When we show that it is the practice to bribe people in order to get their votes, is that a flyspeck upon the committee's report filed by me? I say it is an important thing. I say it affects the voters of those two counties; and I say more than that: If it be shown that that was the practice all over the State of Alabama, then you can not say what votes were valid and what were invalid, because it is not a practical thing to follow up and try to find out what particular ballots were purchased in that way and what ballots were not.

I say that if a thing of that kind had been charged against Vare in Pennsylvania, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] would be calling your attention to it here in language as strong as I am undertaking to use at this moment.

What next happened? What is the next procedure in conducting an election in Alabama? They provide booths in towns of 3,000 inhabitants, and they are so careful in their provision and so careful as to how it shall be done that it is distinctly provided that they shall be so constructed that a person occupying one booth can not see what is going on in the booth next to him. That is how important Alabama thinks it is to guard the secrecy of the ballot. That is how careful they are.

What happens? What excuse do they give? What do Mr. Bankhead and his counsel say? His counsel says, "I have lived in Alabama all my life, and I never saw or heard of an election booth in Alabama during all that time." The Senator from Georgia complains and says that I want to throw Bankhead out because they did not use booths.

I say that this is the thing undertaken to be avoided by the State of Alabama when they passed that law; they wanted to prevent the presence of people in the voting place watching over somebody who had been brought there for fear he would vote a way the machine did not want him to vote. If they did not require booths, and he were compelled to put his vote upon a windowpane, or compelled to put it upon a meat block, or any old place, there would always be somebody there to tell the fellow on the outside just exactly how he voted. Is that a good reason? That would be a splendid reason in Pennsylvania; it would be a splendid reason for insisting upon this one provision of the law being carried out. That is only one, and I must hurry along:

Any person allowed to vote who was a qualified elector whether he was on the list and without taking the required oath.

The law of Alabama provides that there shall be a registration list; that on the 15th day of April it shall be published by the probate judge, and that between April 15 and the 1st day of May any person who finds himself qualified and wants to get on the list can do so by making application to the probate judge, and on the 1st day of May the doors are sealed, and the list then made up is the list furnished for the primary and the list furnished for the election.

Is that important? There is just one way by which a voter who has failed to get on that list is taken care of. He must come before the election officer and swear that he is a qualified voter. He must bring two neighbors with him who know all about it, and those two neighbors must swear that he is a qualified voter.

Did they do that? This record is full of evidence that they did nothing of the kind, but they would say, "Let everybody who wants to vote, who claims to be a qualified voter, vote. Never mind about the oath and never mind about the list. That amounts to nothing in Alabama, but let us agree among ourselves, Democrats and Republicans, that anybody who comes here and claims to be a qualified voter may vote in Alabama." That is the reason why we find some 28,000 or 30,000 people voting who are not on the qualified list.

That is not all. The most convenient place in the world for holding an election that I know anything about is the State of Alabama. I call attention to the fact that all you have to do, if it is not convenient for you to go to the polls, is to let your man at the polls know it is not convenient for you to come. What does he do? The election officer himself takes the ballot, goes out, hunts you up in your sick bed or wherever you may be, and brings your ballot back, and votes you. You do not know whether he changed your ballot or whether he did not. Sometimes it depended, I suppose, upon whom you voted for; but he goes and gets the ballot. There is evidence of that all through this record from the witnesses who were called, and it is not denied.

It is said that in such a case the idea was to accommodate the sick person, that there was no other way he could vote, "and we wanted him to vote in Alabama. But we did not do that all the time." They went to sweet ladies appearing there in automobiles who did not want to go to the trouble of coming into the election booths, and they said, "That is not necessary at all. We will just take out a ballot for you. We will get a Bible to rest the ballot on, you mark it, and we will bring it back and vote you." In one instance they drove 35 miles to get a person to vote a ballot. Why they did not vote him without going all that distance is one of the evidences of good faith in this case which I think I ought to speak about. But that is the practice in Alabama.

Is there any other State in the Union anybody knows anything about where that could be done, where such things could be called "flyspecks" on a record when a man is trying to see how they conducted the elections in Alabama? It seems to me that is a thing the Senate ought to know about. I think the Senators from Alabama ought to know about it themselves, if they did not know it until we called it to their attention.

That is not all. That is not nearly all. They were more convenient than that. In one county a busy doctor had his wife with him, and they went to the polling place to vote. The officials said, "You are not a registered voter here."

"I know; we live in the other county. We are registered in the other county, but it is too late for us to get there. Will you let us vote?"

"Well, if you will take the challenge oath."

So they go up and take the challenge oath, swear that they lived there, and that that is where they ought to vote; and their votes were accepted.

On the witness stand who was it who took the blame? Heflin's manager, Heflin's inspector took all the blame. He said, "I suggested that. I was wholly responsible for that." And lo and behold, we look up the record, and we find that Heflin's man voted for Bankhead. That is the kind of representation he had, and that is the way they did it in Alabama.

It does not make any difference where you live, the only question is, where do you want to vote? If you come to any place in Alabama to vote, it is all right. All you have to do is to say you are a qualified elector. In one place they had seven boxes in one beat, and you could go to all seven of them the same day, and, so far as I know, you could go to them twice the same day, all of them. There was not a thing under the sun, so far as the election officers themselves were concerned, that prevented that thing from being done.

That is not all. I have called attention to the fact that the parties paid the poll taxes of some voters. I do not quite know why they paid a poll tax. I suppose to be generous to Alabama they paid part of the poll tax, because the record is full of evidence of voters who did not pay any poll tax at all. The record shows that some of them paid poll taxes nearly a year after the election. So I do not know just why they collected $25 from Mr. Bankhead and money from other people in order to pay poll taxes, except that they wanted to be generous to the State.

THE REGULAR BALLOT BOXES NOT USED

The Senator from Georgia wanted me not to forget the fact that there were some explanations as to why there were no places in these boxes through which the voters could cast their ballots. I have here regular votes. An inspection of them will show that they did not pass through any slot. These are regular votes that were counted. I did not call attention to it, because there is no use calling attention to it. They admit that they used hat boxes. They admit that all the ballots did not go through slots. They admit that they used rural free delivery boxes which had no slots in them at all. So what is the use calling the Senate's attention to the fact that these particular ballots were not folded?

Much was made of a similar point in the Vare case, as to the city of Philadelphia, as the distinguished Senator from New Mexico will recall. The Senator from Maryland called attention to the size of the ballots and called attention to the fact that under no circumstances could they go into a slot the size of the slot in the ballot box, and much was made of that, and much might have been made of it. There was much to be made of it as to Philadelphia, where they were charged under the law with putting the ballots through a slot. But what is the use of calling the attention of the Senate to that fact as to Alabama, because in Alabama they did not follow any such practice, and they can immediately excuse here by saying, "We did not follow that practice in Alabama."

What was the practice? The law distinctly provides for two boxes; and a firm of lawyers, Bankhead & Bankhead—I assume the firm of Senator Bankhead—appeared in an election case in Alabama, in which the court distinctly laid down the law that there must be two boxes furnished on election day.

Let me call attention to the trouble I had to find it, and let me call attention to the remark I made in the report, that the finding of the ballot boxes unsealed becomes unimportant. I will give the Senate the reason, and I will give them the real reason, a reason which can not be denied.

The supervisor who had conducted the count in one of his reports called attention to the fact that somebody had given some particular excuse for opening a ballot box, and he said, "This is different from that usually given, because it is sometimes said that they ignorantly placed the returns in the box, and that it was therefore necessary to open it." Mr. Bankhead wrote me a letter complaining about a word used. I can not at this moment think of the identical word that was used, but he complained about it, and called my attention to the fact that there was an opinion of the attorney general, and called my attention to the fact that there was a decision of the Supreme Court of Alabama showing that it was not only the authority but the duty of the election board to open any ballot box in order to find what the return was.

I could not quite understand that. The law distinctly provides for the sealing of the ballots and putting them back in the box and sealing the box itself, and the box being kept for six months; and I could not, therefore, understand how an opinion of the attorney general and a decision of the court could hold that the returning board should open a box in order to get the returns.

After much hard work I discovered this fact, and I want to call the Senate's attention to it. First, however, let me say that the word to which Mr. Bankhead objected was the word "stupidly"—that the boxes were "stupidly" opened. Mr. Bankhead said, "Stupidly? Then you have charged the attorney general with being stupid, and have charged the Supreme Court of Alabama with being stupid."

